The seventeenth annual meeting of the Children's Special Service Mission was held last Thursday evening at Exeter Hall, under the able presidency of Dr. J. Monro Gibson. The proceedings were of the most interesting character, and there was no mistaking the opinion of the large audience as to the high value of the work which is accomplished by this Society.

After prayer and reading of Scripture, Mr. T. B. Bishop, hon. sec., submitted a report of last year's operations, which indicated a most wonderful work in a sphere of labour which is widening year by year. The friends associated with the Mission have discovered new and rich fields of Christian labour, which appear to be inexhaustible, and their efforts are circumscribed only by the limited means at their disposal. Each branch—the Special Mission, the Scripture Union, the seaside service, and the foreign literature, all for children—has been abundantly blessed during the year.

The Chairman declared that there was no part of his work he enjoyed better than ministering to children, and in nearly every sermon he preached he devoted ten minutes to their special benefit. In any case he never omitted the children's hymn. He knew that some thought this work was an invention of the nineteenth century, but he rather thought it was a present discovery of what had been enjoined upon the Church since the beginning. He could not deny the youthful appearance of those who filled the platform, the leaders in the work, but he felt sure that when their heads were grey this work would be dearer to them than ever. It was not the children of the poor, but of the upper class, that now were most neglected, and the aims of this society were admirably suited to reach them.

There was no lack of interesting speeches from Dr. Gibson's "young men," all of whom advocated the work with such zeal and ability as are not always characteristic of their age. Some of them had come expressly from their colleges at Cambridge to take part in the proceedings. Mr. E. J. Kennedy's subject was the work of winning children to Christ, and he illustrated it from his own experience at Scarborough, where last year he spent his annual holiday, holding from three to four services on the sands every day for a month. He felt as well on his return, perhaps better, than if he had gone to Switzerland. Mr. Ranger, of Corpus Christi, gave his experience at watering-places in North Wales, where "story telling" on the beach charmed crowds of children of all sizes, and thus the good news was made known to hundreds daily.

The account of the work accomplished by Mr. Banaster by the use of the Kingfisher yacht was grand. From May to September nearly thirty English fishing ports had been visited, services almost daily held; ships were boarded and the Scriptures sold to all who would purchase.

Rev. W. S. Standen's testimony confirmed what previous speakers had said on seaside work and among boys and girls at school, and he unfolded another power of influence by his writing to all the young people whom he met with who had received blessing. He had sent 250 letters to boys and girls last Christmas holidays. Mr. Farthing, from Cambridge, was the last speaker; he very emphatically showed the importance of the Scripture Union among the higher class, by illustrations of the ignorance at the "little go" scriptural examinations at colleges; and so ended a most successful meeting.

A VERY DESERVING WORK is that done by the Bible Flower Mission, which brings sunshine and gladness to the hearts of many poor sufferers in our hospitals, who are debarred from enjoying the beauties of nature. Over 50,000 bouquets of flowers have been thus distributed during the past twelve months; they are generally accompanied with a Gospel message. Will friends willing to help in this kindly send donations or hampers of flowers to Mrs. Dove, 110, Cannon-street, E.C.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—June 1, Acts iv. 23—37; June 2, Acts v. 1—16; June 3, Acts v. 17—32; June 4, Acts v. 33—42; June 5, Acts vi. 1—15; June 6, Acts vii. 1—16; June 7, Acts vii. 17—29.

PERSECUTION IN ZANZIBAR.—A correspondent, writing lately from Souakim, says: "I should like to let it be known that a man was lately, and is probably still, languishing in gaol at Zanzibar, because he was bold enough to attend a Christian service. Colonel Miles (who was Acting Consul-General when he was incarcerated) did his best, I am told, to get him released, even so far as applying to the Foreign Office; but all in vain. The Zanzibar gaol is so foul that no European is ever allowed to visit it; but I have looked into it from the top of the Sultan's clock tower, and it is a disorderly crowd of miserable huts, enclosed in a high wall. Many a man has been imprisoned there for an indefinite period, and left till he died of privation and filth."

Under His Wings.

"The Lord God of Israel, under whose wings thou art come to trust."—Ruth ii. 12.

SWIFT to save! Oh! swift to save
The tempted souls who for succour crave;
Swooping from heaven like a flash of light,
Into their terrible starless night;
Bearing them up on his pinions broad,
Through trackless heights to his fair abode.

Strong to succour! strong to aid
The struggling soul that is sore afraid;
Stumbling along on life's midnight way,
Longing for peace, and the light of day;
Stretching from cradle to shadowy grave,
The wings of God are so strong to save!

Shadowing wings! tender wings!
Covering loathsome and fearful things;
Sins of the soul, black as darkest night,
Sins of the thoughts that never saw light.
Radiant in beauty, undreamt, unknown,
Stands the sheltered soul at the judgment throne.

Tender wings! gentle wings!
Under their shadow the sad heart sings;
Hidden beneath them the weary rest,
Close to God's great heart of pity prest.
There wounded spirits find healing balm,
And restless wills an unbroken calm.

Under those wings I shelter seek,
Knowing myself to be frail and weak
Needing a comeliness not my own,
Ere I can face the dread judgment throne:
Longing for help, when the tempter's power,
Seems to grow greater with every hour;
Refuge and rest from my faithless fears,
Strength to face boldly the coming years:
All the fresh need that each moment brings,
Finds its fulfilment beneath thy wings.

Richard Weaver in Belfast.

ON Lord's Day, May 18, this well-known evangelist began a Gospel Mission in Hermon Hall, Belfast. The building is a large wooden structure of the amphitheatre shape, capable of seating nearly 2500 people. Although almost sixteen years have elapsed since Mr. Weaver's former visit to Belfast, a great deal of interest still clusters around his name, and the result was that his opening meetings were densely crowded by an eager and a motley throng; the interest and attendance have not flagged as the week wore on.

A pleasing feature of the work is the fact that Mr. Weaver has reached a lower strata of the population than almost any other evangelist who has visited Belfast. That dark fringe of human existence which men call the "lapsed masses" has been well represented all through the week, and for this we are very thankful.

Many, too, have noticed the large proportion of men in the gatherings at Hermon Hall during the week. They have listened eagerly, and often tearfully, to Mr. Weaver's words. His addresses were such as have been described often in your columns, full of personal reminiscences and apt allusions to the stirring scenes through which he himself has passed—hitting in all directions at the sins of the day, dealing powerfully with the consciences of men, and always full of reference to "the precious blood of Christ."

During the week many have been dealt with personally on the subject of salvation, and numbers have professed to put on the Lord Jesus. We are sanguine that a work of grace is in progress among us, but we need more of the mighty power of the Spirit of God. While the Evangelist comes to us with the fire and fervour of other days, he also comes with a more matured experience, and a riper knowledge of saving truth. Will your readers, therefore, pray that he may reach a wider circle of the community than on any previous visit, and that the message of mercy may be blessed to all who hear.

A Village Conference.

ON Monday, May 19, at the invitation of Mr. Thomas Heley, of Wing, Beds., a large number of habitual and occasional village workers assembled in a tent on his lawn, in the morning, afternoon, and evening. Mr. Heley said he never went out for village visitation without seeing some results in blessing to souls. He had a pony carriage in which four or five brethren went from village to village, seeking out the most neglected hamlets and lone houses. Last year he and his helpers had spent seventy days in this interesting work, travelling about twenty miles a day. Many villages had been greatly improved since he first knew them, but every visit to new districts revealed more and more the necessity of carrying the Gospel to the dark places of the land. It was not intended to confine the conference to village work alone, but to help each other by the interchange of experience and suggestion.

A number of brethren followed, each contributing some encouraging fact or useful suggestion.

In the afternoon an almost unknown visitor from an Oxfordshire village—a tall, gaunt, unworldly man—burst upon us like an Elijah or a John the Baptist, and having uttered some burning words full of the Spirit and of power, disappeared as suddenly as he had come. The brethren soon after formed a procession, and marched through the village, inviting the people to an evening meeting, when a numerous company gathered to hear the Gospel.

When we remember that our villages are pouring their young people into London and all our great towns and cities, it is evident that by reaching them in their village homes we have much more prospect of success in leading them to Christ than when they have been absorbed into the excitement and hurry of crowded City life. It is therefore to be hoped that many more will, in different parts of the country, pursue the same course as that of Mr. Heley and of Mr. Shipley, whose work we mentioned a few weeks since.

Mr. Aitken at Dorchester.

THE second week of the labours of Rev. W. H. Aitken and his colleagues at Dorchester appears to be even more noteworthy than the first. The Spirit of God has manifestly roused the souls of all classes of the inhabitants. It is a place in which "the candle," lighted at the martyr fires, has, at least for half a century, "never gone out." But nevertheless the Mission was needed, if we may judge by the crowds who have joined in the various services; by the many who have sought for individual comfort and guidance from the Missioners; and, lastly and chiefly, by the very considerable number who really and truly seem now to have at length come from darkness to light.

It is a new thing in Dorchester to see one church well filled every morning and another crowded every evening. At these daily services Mr. Aitken has preached with great and increasing power. Such a congregation of men only as crammed Holy Trinity Church on Sunday to hear his sermon on "Judgment to Come," was probably never seen in Dorchester. It is also a new thing to see such numbers of household servants and of children of all classes attending service. At these Rev. Jas. Stephens has preached with very unmistakable success. We would thank God, too, for the blessing granted to the word spoken by Mrs. Crouch, who has daily addressed one or more full, often crowded, meetings of persons of her own sex. She has held drawing-room meetings, meetings for women of all classes, and meetings for maid-servants.

At many of the various services and meetings not a few of the clergy and laity from neighbouring places have attended, including some from Weymouth, where the same missioners laboured last year, and whither they hope to go for a few days on leaving Dorchester.

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For precious souls brought into liberty, and sick ones healed, in answer to believing prayer at the "Rest" Mission Rooms, Wood-green.——For great blessing in answer to prayer at Gloucester, during a three weeks' Mission conducted by Mr. John Elliott.——For great blessing at Chenies Mission by Rev. A. R. D'Arcy. ——For blessing given in connection with evangelistic labours, by Mr. J. I. Sida, in Sussex.

PRAYER.—For blessing on preachers and singers at the tent meetings going on nightly behind Trinity Hall, Stewart's-road, Batterea, S.W.——For special services by Mr. Opie Rodway at Mission Room, Station-road, Wood-green, N., to commence June 1.——For one who after enjoying the light of God for years has got into great spiritual gloom.——For Gospel services in a Northumberland village.

A Neglected People.

DEAR SIR,—May I enlist the prayers and sympathies of your readers for a most interesting, but little known people. During my late husband's residence in charge of the Nicobar Islands, in the Bay of Bengal (which now belong to the English Government, and on which an Indian convict settlement has been made), he took a warm interest in the native Nicobarese. They are a people allied to the Malays in appearance, but much more gentle in their habits. In 1767, the Moravians established a Mission in the Nicobars, and persevered for nineteen years in their attempts to learn the language and teach the people, but one after another succumbed to fever and privation, and after thirteen out of the twenty-four men, who in succession were sent out, had died, the Mission was abandoned. Since then a Danish missionary, M. Rosen, lived on the islands for three years, but since 1847 no Christian instruction has been imparted to the natives.

In 1870 the English Government took possession of the Nicobars. My husband was sent there in 1871, and lived there at times for shorter or longer periods ever since. We had much intercourse with the natives, making friends with many, and training four little boys in our own house. Mr. de Roepstorff prepared a dictionary of the Nicobarese language, which has just been published by the Indian Government. He also revised a manuscript translation of St. Matthew's Gospel, which he found at the Moravian settlement at Hermhut, where it had lain for many years. This is now passing through the press in Calcutta, but who is to take it to the people and instruct them in its truths?

They have no idols, and their religion consists chiefly in a terror of evil spirits, though they have some idea of a Maker and Giver of all. They are greatly under the influence of their priest-doctors, who are great jugglers, but that their belief in them is lessening is shown by the facts that some of them were willing to come to us for medicines, and that during the great earthquake of 1882 numbers came from far and near to ask us to pray to our God for their protection. Though not a missionary, my husband was a true friend to them, and that his love was returned was shown by the way they mourned his untimely end May his death be the means of calling the attention of Christians to their sore spiritual needs.

I am soon returning to Denmark, but should be thankful to give further information to anyone desiring it. Letters addressed to me at 27, Sidney-road, Bowes-park, Wood-green, N. would be forwarded wherever I may be.—Yours truly,

CHRISTIANE DE ROEPSTORFF.

BRIGHTON Y.W.C.A.—The Association here has its centre at Victoria House, 4, Pavilion-buildings, where an institute and boarding-house have been established for the benefit of those engaged in business in this rapidly-growing town. For more than twenty years earnest Christian ladies have worked amongst the young women of Brighton, and the many devoted Association members labouring in their spare time amongst the perishing souls in this great town testify to the "signs following." Our Home is in the centre of the town, is under the direction of an executive of ladies, and is in connection with the parent Association. Mr. Congreve's new building, an account of which appeared in a recent impression of THE CHRISTIAN, is not in Brighton at all, strictly speaking, but in Hove, and is more than a mile away from the Y.W.C.A. Institute.

Continental and Foreign Notes.

ALGERIA.—In 1883, the French Bible Society gave and sold 35,343 copies of the Bible in France and Algeria.

THE MONACO GAMING COMPANY is stated to have made last year 17 million francs, of which 11 millions remain as profit. But, from January to August, 1883, there were 33 suicides, and in 1884 there are already 17.

CHICAGO.—M. Seguin, a converted priest, after having laboured about two years in the evangelisation of the French in New York, has just gone to Chicago, where he wishes to carry on a similar work among the French Canadians inhabiting that town.

THE ZAMBEZI.—In February M. and Madame Coillard were between Pretoria and Shosong, on their way to the Zambezi. The journey was most difficult, owing to the bad wagons and rain; but they felt the hand of their heavenly Father guiding them.

THE BERLIN MISSIONARIES IN CHINA write from Canton that after much disquiet and danger in consequence of the French attack, they are now gradually getting settled. Many houses and chapels have been destroyed through the renewed jealousy of the Chinese towards all foreigners.

FRENCH ANNIVERSARIES.—The various religious societies of France have been holding their anniversary meetings in Paris in April and May. The reports are for the most part encouraging; the increasing readiness with which Evangelical truth is listened to makes the need of more workers and more money very emphatic.

We learn from the April circular of "Evangelisation in Spain," that the meetings are being well attended in various places; not many women are present, they being too much in fear of the priests. The sale of Bibles, too, is frequently hindered by two or three priests standing near the colporteur, few having courage enough to purchase them under the eye of the priest.

RELIGIOUS LIBERTY IN SWITZERLAND continues to be outraged by the violence exercised against the Salvation Army, and even against assemblies that have nothing in common with it. Temperance societies have been assaulted. A meeting held in a private house at Grand Champ was interrupted by the gendarme. The tolerance of the authorities towards the disturbers, and in certain cases their intervention against the Salvationists and against other Christians, is a subject of surprise and sorrow to those even who sympathise the least with the Salvation Army.—Le Christianisme.

THE LA FORCE ASYLUMS.—We regret to learn that Pasteur Raynoux, the successor to John Bost as Director of the Asile John Bost, at La Force, France, has met with a serious accident, while driving from the railway station of Pregonerieux to the institution. He was thrown out of his conveyance, together with his aged father and two daughters. He was much shaken, and his father suffered serious injury; his daughters happily escaped. M. Raynoux had only recently recovered from a serious illness, and his visit to this country last autumn made for him many friends, who will be pained at this contretemps.

SOUTH AMERICA.—In the communication made before the French Geographical Society by Captain Martial, relative to the scientific mission of the Romanche to Cape Horn, he said that the English Protestant Mission of Ooshooaia had contributed greatly, if not to the civilisation of Terra del Fuego, at least to reclaiming them from savage life and manners. Consequently, when he quitted the island in September last, he, with the consent of the French Government, made over to the missionaries the large range of huts which the French Mission had erected for their lodgings and meteorological and magnetic observations.—Galignani's Messenger.

DROUGHT IN BENGAL.—The poor people are suffering much from lack of water. Wells never known to be dry before are dry now. The rainfall of 1883 was far below the average, for our rains stopped fully a month before the regular time. The thunderstorms that usually bring much rain have so far been denied us, and the parched earth mocks the hunger of unnumbered droves of famishing cattle. Disease of a grievous type is beginning to break out amongst the people of our cities and mofussil settlements. The outlook is dark, and calls for more prayer. Let us who believe in prayer cry aloud to God for his blessing now upon a dry and thirsty land. Elias prayed and the heavens gave rain. So let the Church of Bengal pray in faith for abundance of rain for our suffering land.—Indian Witness.

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS AT A HEATHEN FESTIVAL.

IN The Indian Witness of April 26 there appears the following sketch from the pen of Rev. S. Knowles, of Gonda, Oudh. As our contemporary remarks, it is well fitted to give encouragement to the friends of the missionary cause; in some places it reads like a chapter from the Acts of the Apostles:—

"The harvest is all gathered and stacked on the threshing-floors under trees outside the villages, and the people have both time and money to enjoy a holiday, and take a trip to the Devi Pátan mela on the borders of the Nipal jungles. Hence the roads leading to the mela are covered with these holiday-making rustics, tradesmen, and officials. Here we see a crowd of pedestrians, men, women, and children, carrying their sleeping and cooking arrangements, and leading or dragging the doomed he-goats, forcing their onward, eager way. There stout self-satisfied officials on their well-fed, ambling ponies, urging their not over-courteous way through the dusty groups of travellers. There, too, in the deep ruts, the rough, slow-going country carts, with their screeching wheels that set your teeth on edge, and each filled with a peasant family, including the devoted he-goat, the women singing a monotonous song in praise of Sita Ram that somehow makes the heart feel sad. It is through these motley crowds and clouds of ever-rising dust some eight of us are pressing on our way to the first camping place at Maháráj-Gunge, sixteen miles on the Balrampore-road.

"After our usual preparatory services in the afternoon, with united faith, we marched to the front of the shop of a vendor of spirituous liquors, situated at the head of the village. The expressive sign of this reeking, foul-smelling shop was a long pole with a broken bottle hanging by the neck. We found about twenty men and women sitting on one side of the shop drinking and quarrelling together. We soon collected over a hundred persons. After our customary service of song, and prayer, and preaching, we gave our invitation for any impressed to come forward and acknowledge it. The kalwar, or liquor vendor, himself was the first to respond to our call. He promised he would give up his unholy trade, worship God in and through the name of Jesus Christ, and, as far as he knew it, always walk in the way of truth. On this confession we baptized him. He has since separated himself from the liquor business, and gone back to his village to cultivate the land. After we had received the kalwar, a poor blind man cried out: 'These men speak the truth, and from this day I am also a disciple of Jesus Christ.' With his sightless eye-balls turned to the setting sun, we received him as a chelá of the Lord Jesus Christ.

"The next day we reached Balrampore, ten miles further on our way to the mela. Here we found a heterogeneous mass of people crowded into the many parks of mangoe trees that surround this capital of the first talluqdar in Oudh. For though Deg Biseg Singh is dead, having lost his life two years ago from a severe fall from his elephant, when attacked by a wounded tiger, Balrampore is still the abode of his widow Maharani, and called by his name. Here we have a native preacher, Bihari Lal, and a number of our new converts baptized last and this year. We had the pleasure of partaking the hospitality of the former, and the delight of seeing, and instructing, and encouraging the latter. In the evening we marched in full force to the chauk, or square in centre of the city, and gathered over five hundred listeners. Ten persons, two Brahmans and eight koris, believed the Word, were received, and placed under the instruction of Bihari Lal. Most of these new converts live in villages round about Belrampore, so can be easily looked after.

"The next day, reinforced by brethren from Balrampore, we started for the mela, eighteen good miles towards the misty mountains seen in the distance. After a most trying march in the heat and blinding dust, we reached the refreshing banks of the beautiful Rapti river. Oh, how grateful we felt as we bathed our fevered limbs in its cool, clear waters, and drank in new life! After tiffin, and a reviving siesta in the acceptable shade of a large pákar tree, we started again in the dusty track of the devotees for the mela. But just as we crossed the bridge of boats, a number of people stopped us and requested us to preach to them. We were not slow in holding forth the Word of Life, and pressing our willing hearers to come to Jesus. One Brahman bairági's heart was touched, and he came forward confessing Christ to be the only Saviour of men. We led him down to the river and gave him the Christian sign of discipleship, and then we broke the bread of fellowship, of which he willingly partook. Thirsty, tired, and full of dust, we entered under the grand grove of tamarind trees that surround the gloomy temple of the blood-deluged idol goddess, and were soon enjoying an agreeable rest in the cool of the evening.

"The mela partook more of a migratory character this year than last; still there were never less than 22,000 people present as long as the mela lasted. The first impression you receive as you enter this fair, is that you are entering an immense slaughter house; for the odour and sight of blood are everywhere, We always wisely pitch our tents to the north of these shambles, and are thus saved from the horrible effluvium so fiercely carried to the east. But the temple of the female deity and its vicinity are only equalled in butchery and gore by the tomb of Mirza, a few yards off, daily washed with pig's blood. Both form a complete Aceldama. At the former, relays of sanguinary priests keep severing with their sharp, heavy-bladed kukeries the heads from the quivering bodies of he-goats and male buffaloes from morning till evening.

"This sickening carnage takes place over a sand-pit, which is emptied and filled with fresh sand every morning. The devotee first takes the animal to be offered to an adjacent tank, and dips it three times in the foul water. The devotee pays two pice for dipping the doomed creature, and two pice for offering it. At the latter, or tomb of Mirza, another awful destruction of animals is witnessed. A number of blood-stained priests stand behind a stone in front of the temple, in readiness to relieve the one who takes the sucking-pig from the devotee, dashes its head upon the stone and hands it back to the offerer, who rushes with the bleeding animal into the building to let the blood drop on the dishonoured shrine. In the evening time, heaps of dead sucking-pigs of a thousand each may be seen, said pigs being sold off at a pice each to koris and other low caste Hindus. It was calculated that one animal a minute was sacrificed from sunrise to sunset of every day, for a week; thus not less than 5040 animals were cruelly and uselessly immolated during the time we were present at this great pandemonium.

"Our manner of operation was the same this year as last. We rose in the grey of the morning to our bugle call, and met for prayer and consultation and council; then, when our hearts were strong and our faith as one man's, we sallied forth with banner flying and music playing, assured of victory. We chose a shady convenient place where we could operate without fear of being molested, and at the same time readily reach the great mass of the people. There we spread our carpet, conducted our services, and invited the worshippers of a gory deity to the loving arms of the Great Father. Sometimes we would march round and through the fair among the crowds, who had come with a view to the worshipping of mammon as well as to the worshipping of the particular deity at the mela; then we would be greeted with cries of, 'Here come the padris that fascinate and then make the people Christians!'

"Enough if we say that we had never less than 500 people at any one of our services conducted in the open mela, and that perfect order reigned, and the greatest attention was given throughout. At one time the people were so moved that they shouted as one man, with all the enthusiasm of devotees: 'Isa panth ki jai!' (May the religion of Christ prosper!) and kept prolonging the shout for some time. The women, too, this year found their way into the listening crowds; and after the services would bring their children, place them at our feet, and ask for our blessing. At the close of every service one or two would respond to our call, come out, and be received before the whole assembly, either as disciples or inquirers. One noted faqir, a kabir panthi named Mangal Das, pressed out of the crowd, threw himself at our feet, and said that he surrendered body and soul to the Lord Jesus Christ. We baptized him and broke to him the bread of holy fellowship in the midst of the astonished people. Thus we received as disciples of Jesus Christ in this fair seven persons, one faqir, two Brahmans, and four koris; and took the names of over fifty inquirers.

"But the most encouraging thing we met with at this mela was the visit paid us of the two pandits whom we baptized last year. They came from their village, 14 miles from the fair, specially to see us. We found that they had stood firm all through the year, though at times greatly persecuted; that they had intelligently read the books we had given them; and that they were more determined than ever to know the Lord more and more, and serve Him with all their physical and mental powers. They were greatly revived and refreshed by their timely visit, and went back to their village powerfully impressed. Nothing to me showed the power of the Gospel at this mela of blood, more than the words of the kabir panthi faqir whom we baptized and met at Balrampore on our way home from the fair. 'Sir,' he said, 'I went to the mela a Hindu, I have returned a Christian.'"

A Testimony to General Gordon.

SIR,—While so many touching tales are being told of the kindness and sympathy that General Gordon has always evinced towards the forsaken and distressed by those he has succoured and by those who know him, I think I should be guilty of the basest ingratitude were I to remain mute.

My story may be told in a few words. From the time of my father's death, which occurred before my ninth birthday, to my meeting with General Gordon, I can scarce say I ever knew what it was to possess a real friend. Up to seventeen years of age, my existence was a most chequered one, owing partly to my passionate and self-willed character. My relations, by whom I was considered, and no doubt justly, as a scapegrace, determined to rid themselves of such an encumbrance by packing me off to sea. I was forced to yield, though much against my will, for beggars are not choosers.

Never was life more hateful to any man. After my first voyage I pleaded hard not to go again, but my relations turned a deaf ear to all my entreaties and I found myself compelled to make a second voyage. Earnestly I cried unto the poor man's Friend. I prayed to the Almighty to save me. He heard and sent me a deliverer. On the eve of my departure, broken-hearted yet bursting, I had the wonderful good fortune to see General Gordon. It would be unnecessary to relate how, for where distress is, there his heart is also. I told him my woe, of the wretched life which awaited me in the world. He had compassion on me.

This happened in the spring of 1881. He arranged with the shipowner, sent me off to a school in France, and promised to allow me during one year and a half a certain sum sufficient to live on. Thus the world was suddenly changed from a hell into a paradise, and all my misfortunes into so many blessings. After having acquired a certain knowledge of the French language, I came to Marseilles, where, at the expiration of my allowance, with the help of God, I found myself enabled to earn an honest livelihood, with several hours of leisure a day, by giving English lessons.

When I reflect on all this I cannot help blessing the name of my benefactor, and expressing my gratitude in the words the great Latin poet uts into the shepherd's mouth:—

"O Meliboee, deus nobis hæc otia fecit:
Namque erit ille mihi semper deus."

A READER OF "THE CHRISTIAN."

Notices of Books, &c.

Her Object in Life, by Isabella Mayo, with illustrations (2s. 6d.) Religious Tract Society. This story should stimulate every girl with ambition to help the weak and erring, and shows how their influence over their own brothers may be made a very great blessing. It is well written, and the tale is good.

Talks with the Troubled, by Dr. Doudney. 1s. W. Mack. There is scarcely any form of spiritual difficulty which the author does not meet. His remarks are most practical throughout, and are based upon suitable passages, which have been carefully selected. Christian workers may learn much from them to teach to others.

Memoirs of Capt. Prescott Stephens, by B. A. Heywood (6s.), Nisbet. This is a very interesting record of Christian life amidst manifold temptations, and often great physical dangers. Captain Stephens was an undaunted follower of Christ, and was always proud to nail his colours to the mast. The accounts of his travels and adventures will be read with enjoyment by old and young.

Messrs. Shaw & Co. continue to sustain their high reputation as publishers of attractive and useful books. We may group a few that have lately come to hand. In Wiclif's Days (2s. 6d.), by Grace Stebbing, is an interesting addition to the literature of the Wycliffe celebration. In the guise of a sprightly domestic tale, a great deal of information is conveyed as to the history and teachings of the great English reformer. It will no doubt be read when more prosaic matter-of-fact chronicles are passed by. Left to Ourselves (2s. 6d.), by Catherine Shaw, is a well-conceived and well-constructed story. The parents of five children take a trip to America to visit an aged relative, and during their absence the children are "left to themselves." How they fared and what uses they made of their opportunities we must leave the curious reader to discover, only remarking that story and sermon are cleverly intermingled. Leo and Dick (1s.), is a dashing story that conveys valuable teaching; it is sure to be a favourite with boys. Friendless Johnny, by Jennie Harrison (1s.) This simple little story will prove very interesting to the young, and it is well calculated to instil in their minds principles of honesty, self-denial, and forgiveness. The Seagull's Nest, by Emily Brodie (1s. 6d.) This is a good story for boys, showing that while independence of spirit is sometimes good, obedience to parents is always better. Shaw's Home Series (6d. each) is a perfect wonder of cheapness, beauty, and general excellence. The three latest additions are "Only a Tramp," by Miss Stebbing, "Water Gipsies," by Miss L. T. Meade, and Miss Holt's new work, "John de Wycliffe."

Ye Olden Time, by Emily S. Holt (3s. 6d.), J. F. Shaw & Co. In the course of her active researches among the records of the past, Miss Holt has unearthed many curious facts relating to English customs in the middle ages. She has done well to collect them in this entertaining volume. While we are much interested by these glimpses of the social arrangements of our progenitors, on the whole we are unprepared to subscribe to the saying that "the former times were better than these."

John de Wycliffe, by Emily S. Holt (3s. 6d.), Shaw & Co. This life of the great reformer is written in the attractive and interesting style peculiar to Miss Holt. It is a plain, homely volume, which the least educated can understand, and will no doubt receive a warm welcome from those who prefer a simple narrative to a more profuse research, of the deep theological controversies in which Wycliffe was engaged.

The Law of the Ten Words, by J. Oswald Dykes, D.D. (3s. 6d.), Hodder & Stoughton. Another volume of the series known as "The Household Library of Exposition," treating on a subject by no means too frequently dealt with. There is an ultra evangelicalism falsely so-called, which considers it derogatory to the Gospel to pay any attention to the Law, regarding it as worn out and obsolete. Dr. Dykes shows that the Decalogue, at least, retains practical utility for us, containing spiritual and moral principles of the highest importance in these days. The cause of Christian morality gains much by the publication of this work, which deserves, as it will doubtless obtain, a wide circulation. It is full of wise and timely counsel, and handles the somewhat difficult points it discusses with a delicacy, frankness, and fidelity worthy of the highest praise.

Capital for Working Boys, by J. E. McConaughy (3s. 6d.), Hodder & Stoughton. We could scarcely over-praise these capital "chapters on character-building." The amount of good, solid advice crowded into this handsome volume and interspersed with illustrative living examples, and couched in terse transparent phraseology, is simply wonderful. Any youth who takes it for a holiday companion will surely return to his daily duties much better equipped for their due discharge.

Cluny Macpherson, by Amelia A. Barr (5s.), Hodder & Stoughton. To a Scottish reader there are not a few glaring anomalies in this "tale of brotherly love," such as the transfer of the broad Doric dialect to the Highlands of Ross-shire, where it is probably as much a foreign tongue as in the county of Middlesex. Passing over these, it may be conceded that Mrs. Barr has given us a story marked by fine character sketching and stirring incident. The get-up of the book is characteristic and elegant.

Christ and the Church, by Adolph Saphir, D.D. Religious Tract Society. We are glad to welcome this new and carefully revised edition of a book already known to many readers as an exposition of the Apostolic Commission recorded in Matt. xxviii. 18—20. Dr. Saphir's fame as an author is too well established for any book of his to require eulogy. He is as a "Master in Israel," and his pen that of a ready writer when discoursing on sacred truth. The present volume throws much fresh light on an oft-discussed theme, and is marked by all the author's peculiar ability and spiritual fervour.

The Last Prophecy, being an abridgment of the late Rev. E. B. Elliott's "Horæ Apocalypticæ," by H. E. E. Third edition, as revised by the late Rev. E. B. Elliott. Nisbet & Co. This is an abridgment of so well-known a book that it is unnecessary to do more than call attention to the advantage it offers to those who may not be able to purchase the large four volume edition of the standard work, the substance of which it gives in an abridged form, in a small octavo volume. Mr. Elliott's "Horæ Apocalypticæ" is a perfect storehouse of information on Church history, and this abridgment presents a very fair summary of the historical fulfilment, as traced by one whose ability in this field has been fully recognised by the churches.

The Prodigal Continent, its Prodigal Son and Missionary. By Mrs. McHardie and Andrew Allan. 1s. 6d. and 2s. 6d. Morgan & Scott. The title of this volume may seem a somewhat strange and perhaps ambitious one; but we think when the reader has finished its perusal he will agree with us that it is amply justified. If he should be induced to begin he will not dally long over its intensely interesting pages; we were constrained to complete the reading of it at a single sitting. Mr. Newby, the hero of the narrative, has had more thrilling adventures on land and sea, and more hairbreadth escapes, we should think, than any other man of his generation. The story of his prodigal life, of his remarkable conversion, and of his devoted labours in Central Africa, is here set down with much literary skill and circumstantial care. We hope in future issues to make extracts from these highly engaging chapters; meantime, we commend the book as one of the most attractive and most useful we have met with for many a day.

We have also received the following books:—

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

VALPARAISO.

This Association has just issued its first annual report, which shows that the total number who have joined during the year is 106; special terms of membership are offered to officers on board of Straits' steamers, warships, and coasters. Mr. Alex. Balfour, of Liverpool, has accepted the post of honorary president.

BIRMINGHAM.

The Association at Birmingham seems keenly alive to the need of providing for the improvement of young men, by lectures, educational classes, &c. The committee have also adopted the plan of giving letters of introduction to the secretaries of other associations, so that young men leaving Birmingham may not be quite friendless in a strange town to which they may go.

FINSBURY PARK, N.

The committee of this branch have secured a large hall close to the railway station, where an Evangelistic Mission is conducted, assisted by a large choir. The object is to gather in non-church and chapel-goers. The help of friends is needed for the choir, as open-air workers, stewards, and in the inquiry-room. Every information may be obtained of Mr. Cotching, Secretary, Y.M.C.A., 1A, Coleridge-road, N.

Evangelistic Notes.

Hyde Park.—Mr. C. Cook informs us that the open-air services held on Sunday afternoons during the summer in this popular and pleasant West-end place of resort, have opened with many tokens of encouragement. The new Temperance restaurant, lately attached to the Mission, is proving of great service in different ways.

Messrs. Wharton and Weaver have concluded a five weeks' Mission with their Bible carriage at Oldham. The Gospel has been faithfully proclaimed to hundreds of working men and women night after night, and many have purchased copies of the Scriptures. The evangelists purpose to spend Whitsun week at New Brighton, where thousands assemble during the holidays.

Hoxton Hall Mission.—A Gospel Mission, extending over fourteen days, has been held by Mr. Thomas Wales and family at Hoxton Hall. The results have been of the most satisfactory kind. Miss Wales is a speaker who unites ability with earnest purpose. Many have been roused to the importance of divine things; some have started on the Christian life; numerous abstinence pledges have been taken, showing how really the Gospel influences people in this direction. Mr. Wales and his family have it in prospect to go out to Australia; pending the completion of their arrangements are prepared to fulfil short engagements. Their address is meanwhile 134, Hoxton-street, E.

Glasgow.—The tenth annual meeting of the United Evangelistic Association, which embraces all classes of the Christian Church, was held on Monday, the 19th inst. Mr. R. Miller, owing to the absence through ill-health of the secretary, Mr. Scott, read the annual report, and said that although they had not the assistance of Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey during the year, the work done had been fruitful in spiritual blessing. The noon prayer-meeting had been well attended; it was now proposed to carry it out on the lines of the Bible and Prayer Union. A number of other workers in connection with the Association spoke of the good done by means of the Mizpah Band, which has now a membership of over 1090.

STRATFORD.—The foundation-stone of the Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A. will be laid on Monday, June 30, at 4 p.m., by Mr. Moody and Mr. Sankey. The Earl and Countess of Aberdeen and the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress have also promised to be present. About £3000 are still needed to open the building free of debt.

THE NEW CRUSADE.—A large demonstration of working men, including delegates from various distant parts of the Kingdom, was held on Wednesday evening last at the Memorial Hall, Farringdon-street, to demand the immediate and total repeal of the Acts that regulate vice. A small and noisy band of opposers were present, but the overwhelming majority of the assembly voted for the resolutions submitted, denouncing the partial, unjust, and useless nature of these enactments.

Mission and other Appeals.

CLOTHING THE POOR.—Mr. THOMAS CLUTTERBUCK, 196, Seymour-street, Camden Town (London City missionary), writes that he would feel thankful for any clothes or boots to help in clothing the poorest of the children who attend St. Pancras Ragged School.

THE ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION will hold a fancy sale at the Kensington Town Hall in December, to meet the increased expenses of the work. Second-hand books and tracts or other articles will receive prompt acknowledgment from Mr. J. W. FALL, 40, Nottingham-place, York-place, W.

SUMMER TENT WORK.—The Union Hall Mission proposes erecting tents in Hampshire, Battersea, and Kensal-green, to be used by various well-known evangelists. This is an expensive work, and liberal support is earnestly sought by Mr. ROBERT BILKE, 18, Greenhill-park Villas, Harlesden, N.W.

OUTCASTS IN BILLINGSGATE.—To meet the need of numbers of persons out of employment, twopenny tickets are distributed by the London City missionary, and free breakfasts provided on Sunday mornings. Help will be gladly acknowledged by Mr. J. NEWMAN, Billingsgate Mission, 93, Lower Thames-street, E.C.

MISS ADA M. LEIGH, 77, Avenue Wagram, Paris, writes to say that the resources of the Mission work she carries on among English women in Paris are completely exhausted, while at the same time a large sum will have to be expended on necessary repairs of the premises at Avenue Wagram. She earnestly asks for the help of the Christian public.

THE LODIANA MISSION.—This is the Jubilee year of the Lodiana Mission; many missionaries and others are expected to meet there in December to commemorate the founding of the Mission in 1834. It has been proposed, as a Jubilee memorial, to enlarge the Mission church, so as to accommodate another 120 persons. The native Christians have just been putting up class-rooms for the Sunday-school, so that, for the enlargement of the church, they need extraneous help. Miss E. A. GREENFIELD, Chepstow-rise, Croydon, Surrey, will be glad to receive and forward contributions.

SOLDIERS' INSTITUTE, 2, Pery-street, Limerick.—This Institute, which has been in operation for the past five years, is a re-ort for soldiers, policemen, and sailors, who are always made welcome; many of them have heard the glad tidings of salvation through Jesus Christ, and have there received and accepted Him as their Saviour. It is earnestly hoped that the work will not be allowed to suffer for want of funds to support it. The sum of £150 per annum is considered sufficient to carry on the work as at present. Subscriptions may be sent to Mr. WILLIAM A. BOYD, Westfield, Limerick.

HAMMERSMITH Y.M.C.A.—The Committee of the branch, seeing the great need there is for a hall suitable for carrying on evangelistic work in this thickly-populated neighbourhood, and having regard to the great expense incurred in keeping on the services at Cadby Hall, are contemplating the erection of a hall on ground in connection with their premises at Wycombe House, King-street East, Hammersmith-road. £500 would enable us to complete our scheme, and give to the neighbourhood a hall greatly needed. Should this project fall through, a grand opportunity will be lost.—WILLIAM B. CROFT, Treasurer, Stanley Villa, Shepherd's Bush-road, W.

THE SALVATION ARMY.—Rev. W. Booth presided last week, at the Regent Hall, Oxford-street, at an adjourned meeting from the previous Thursday, when further testimony from reclaimed drunkards was one of the features of the evening. Addresses were also given by Major Cadman, of the Yorkshire division, himself a reclaimed drunkard, who described numerous cases of conversion that had occurred there; and by Mr. Fry, who described what he had seen of the work of the Army in India. The General announced that the idea of starting a Salvation Navy with a sailing yacht had been given up, as that was considered too slow a means of locomotion, and that he wanted a steamer to begin with. Miss Needham, the General announced, had given up a considerable position in life to work for the Army in India. Mr. Booth announced that, making a calculation of what the "soldiers" would bring in, the relief fund now reached £12,000. He also announced that he had recently acquired a piece of land in Edgware-road, which would cost £700 a year ground rent. On this a building was being erected which would seat 3700 persons.

SINGING THE GOSPEL.—Some earnest Christian young men have formed themselves into a ch ir, to sing at evangelistic services, and have called the band "The Male Gospel Singers." They will be glad to assist at evangelistic meetings, or will be open to go into the neighbouring villages to preach and sing the Gospel. All communications to the Secretary, J. G. Stanger, 30, Trevelyan-road, Stratford, E.

"They beckoned unto their partners."

Dear Fellow-workers,

The peculiar anxieties realised in the conduct of this work during the past eleven weeks have been such that I feel I must no longer conceal the recital of them from the large body of loving sympathisers who all over the world are, I know, praying for the rescued children under my care.

Our financial year ended on the 31st March, and up to the 15th day of that month the donations fairly kept pace with our needs, while the sum total for the whole financial year had been a remarkably good one, evincing a steady and growing interest on the part of the Church generally. But from the 15th March, a steady and serious falling-off has taken place daily.

To illustrate the extent and nature of this it is perhaps only needful to say that for many days, and almost weeks together, only so much has been received as would supply, at the most, one meal per day for my large family; thus to give, say, dinner only, to nearly 1,300, including adult helpers as well as children, in the different "Homes," at least £20 per day is necessary. Often our total daily receipts have been but £15 or £18.

But besides dinner other two meals must be provided daily, besides clothing, education, salaries, rents, &c. Moreover, numbers of fresh children apply in the most destitute condition each week, whom we dare not turn away.

Thus of necessity a large daily deficit has occurred, which, multiplied by 77, the number of days in the 11 weeks since the deficit began, means a burden of no small weight, and which is steadily growing larger daily.

In such a crisis, trying as it may be, I can thankfully say my trust is only in the Lord God. His faithfulness and goodness in the past forbid even the thought arising that all will not be well that He sends, whether poverty or sufficiency. So day by day our case is spread before Him, and I know He hears and will answer prayer.

To-day, however, I am reminded that I have not done all that I possibly could do,—that I have not yet with sufficient clearness stated to those who have been my co-workers for years, and who have a right to know the present trial of faith through which we are passing, the needs of the "Homes" under my care.

Hence this letter, which I only hesitate to send lest some might suppose the recital of my case in this form argued a failure of confidence in Him Who has fed and clothed my Little Ones these many years until now.

But this is not so.

I know full well by experience that such trial of faith often only means an invitation to more complete and unreserved dependence on His strong arm, and I doubt not but that in due season "the Lord will turn again our captivity as the streams in the south; then shall our mouth be filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing."

Faithfully yours in Christ's service among the children of our streets,

THOMAS J. BARNARDO.

BOOKS suitable for BIBLE STUDENTS and TEACHERS.

Published by MORGAN & SCOTT.

CRUDEN'S CONCORDANCE

To the Old and New Testaments. Handsomely bound in cloth, price 7s.6d. Half bound in leather, cloth sides, gilt edges, 10s. 6d.

POPULAR EDITION, CLOTH, FIVE SHILLINGS.

THE SPECIAL FEATURE in this Edition is the NEW TRANSLATION, Revision, and Extension of the PROPER NAMES of the OLD and NEW TESTAMENTS, with their Meanings in the Original Languages. By Rev. ALFRED JONES, M.A., Author of "The Proper Names of the Old Testament Scriptures, Expounded and Illustrated."

CHRIST LIFTED UP.

Meditations on the Death, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord Jesus Christ. By Rev. ROBERT GILCHRIST. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"An earnest, practical exhibition of the Gospel under a variety of aspects. Christ lifted up on the cross, and at the Father's right hand, is the grand theme, and affords scope for setting forth a wide range of Gospel teaching. The writer does this in an interesting, while simple style."—British Messenger.

"Old-fashioned divinity presented in a pleasing form. May its readers be many."—Sword and Trowel.

THE GOSPEL IN LEVITICUS.

Chapters on the Old Testament Foreshadowings of the Great Redemption. By the late Rev. Dr. FLEMING, of Kentish Town. Cloth, bevelled boards, 2s. 6d.

"The subject is set forth with a clearness, a directness, and a persuasiveness which leave little to be desired. Every lover of sound Scriptural theology, especially in regard to the momentous doctrine of the Atonement, will find in the book a rich treat."—Baptist Magazine.

JOHN, WHOM JESUS LOVED.

The Character, Writings, Theology, and Influence of the Beloved Disciple. New and Enlarged Edition. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Views of the "Sea of Galilee," and the "Island of Patmos." Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d.

"It is altogether without reserve that we commend the work before us. It is not a bottle of milk for babes, but a portion of meat for men. A half-dozen readings will only make it more interesting to those who meditate upon what they read."—Sword and Trowel.

"THY FIRST LOVE."

Christ's Message to Ephesus. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. With Chromo-Lithographic Frontispiece. Cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"It is a heart-searching and stimulating little book."

British Quarterly Review.

"Its language is chaste and clear; its thoughts are fresh and invigorating; its tone is evangelical without being sentimental. While there is a genial warmth of devout feeling, there runs through its pages a healthy breeze of robustness."—Literary World.

BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR & KNOCK.

Christ's Message to Laodicea. By Rev. Dr. CULROSS. Tinted Covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth extra, 2s. 6d.

"The exposition is fresh and original, displaying great critical skill and discrimination, together with happy quotations of Scripture. The style is all that could be desired—chaste and polished, yet full of force; here and there, as in the author's other works, we meet with passages of great poetic beauty."

Aberdeen Daily Press.

CALLS TO CHRIST.

A Series of Addresses by Rev. R. W. NICOLL, M.A. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"Force and freshness are eminently the characteristics of these 'Calls to Christ'; they are also brief to a proverb, and hence they may be of great service to an earnest evangelist who knows how to use another man's thoughts."

Kelso Courier.

QUESTIONS ON THE FACTS OF THE BIBLE,

Suited for use in Schools and Families. By JAMES HORNE, Inspector of the Schools in the Orphan Houses, Ashley Down. Tinted covers, 6d.; cloth, 1s.

"A good examination in the Scriptures might be conducted with the help of this little manual, the questions in which are extremely well arranged."

The Rock.

May also be had (for the use of Teachers only),

KEY TO QUESTIONS ON THE FACTS OF THE BIBLE.

Which furnishes the Answers to all the Questions. Cloth, 6d.

THE NUMBER "SEVEN" IN SCRIPTURE

Compiled by S. A. BLACKWOOD, Esq., C.B. Paper Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d. Presentation Edition, Cloth Boards, Bevelled, Gilt Edges, 2s. 6d.

"Many other attempts have been made in tabulating the circumstances connected with the word "seven" in the Bible, but we cannot think of any one which is so complete, so concise, and so systematic as in the small volume compiled by Mr. Blackwood. From Genesis i. to Rev. xxii. all the many times the word occurs are duly noted, and each book is dealt with seriatim, so that reference is easy. One object of the book is "to stimulate search and to arouse inquiry," and with this book by the side of the Bible one course of study can be made very profitable indeed."—The Rock.

SEARCHING THE SCRIPTURES

In order to abiding Communion with God. Also, Suggestions for Bible Reading and Study, and a Plan for Consecutive Daily Reading. By Dr. ANDERSON. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. Second Edition.

"Whether viewed as an analysis of the whole Bible, or as a plan for its daily perusal, or as a directory to the spirit and intention with which it should be studied, it is equally judicious and complete. The one design of the whole Scriptures is kept in view throughout."—Sword and Trowel.

CHRIST AND THE SCRIPTURES.

By Rev. Dr. ADOLPH SAPHIR. Cheap Edition.—Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth, Limp, 1s. 6d. Superior Edition.—Cloth, Elegant, 3s.; with Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d.

"This book is original. Dr. Saphir has the power of originating and combining, which is the mark of genius. It is the old truths to which we listen; but the old truths clothed in a living language, set in new lights, and drawn out in fresh applications."—Weekly Review.

BIBLE READINGS BY HENRY MOORHOUSE.

Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth Limp, 1s. 6d.

"We do not wonder that those who heard Moorhouse's Bible Readings found them full of power and suggestion. To him the Word of God was a sword—the only one worth using in spiritual warfare."—Liverpool Courier.

"This volume will be heartily welcomed by not only workers in the field, but by all who love to study the Divine Word. A careful reading must stimulate moral seriousness and earnest service for Christ."—Christian Commonwealth.

THE SURE MERCIES OF DAVID;

or, God's Dealings in the Sanctuary. By ANNA SHIPTON. Best Edition, toned paper, Cloth, bevelled boards, gilt edges, 4s. 6d. Cheap Edition, Cloth neat, 2s. 6d.

"This is a well-written volume of spiritual instruction, interspersed with interesting narratives, from the able pen of Mrs. SHIPTON. It is well worthy of a wide circulation, especially amongst members of Christian congregations, Sunday-school teachers and scholars."—Free Press.

NOTES FOR BIBLE READINGS.

A Collection of over Six Hundred Subjects, carefully compiled and arranged. Suitable for Bible Readings, Cottage Lectures, Sermons, Addresses, Sabbath-school Lessons, &c. Cloth, bevelled boards, 3s. 6d. A cheap edition may also be had in tinted covers, 2s. 6d.

"A book which every Bible student should possess. It will be of special value to the class teacher, and an assistance also to the preacher. It supplies valuable matter for private meditation, and those who conduct Bible Readings will find it most suggestive."—Christian Progress.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO MOSES:

As seen in the Tabernacle and its Various Services. By Rev. GEORGE RODGERS. New Edition. With two full-page Illustrations, and numerous smaller Engravings. Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth, bevelled gilt boards, edges, 2s.

"No young Christian, and especially no preacher, should be ignorant of the truth which this small volume very simply but very forcibly enunciates."

The Record.

"A very spiritual as well as instructive little book, the Saviour being typically portrayed in the Tabernacle, the High Priest, and the Sacrifices."—Churchman.

BOGATZKY'S GOLDEN TREASURY of TEXTS

FOR THE CHILDREN OF GOD. A Series of Scripture Texts and Meditations for every Day in the Year. Cheap Edition—Cloth back, 2s.; Toned Paper, Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d. Presentation Editions—Leather Back, Leatherette Sides, Gilt Edges, 3s. 6d. Whole bound in Leather, Gilt Edges, 5s.

"BOGATZKY'S GOLDEN TREASURY" has been translated into nearly all European languages, and has obtained an enormous circulation in Germany and Great Britain. In this country very few books except the Pilgrim's Progress have been so largely circulated or so widely read."

LONDON: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, PATERNOSTER-BUILDINGS; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

NUTS TO CRACK.
For Infidels and Freethinkers.
By AN OLD DEIST.
Extracts.

2. I cannot gainsay the fact that human nature is bad, and as bad as the old book makes it. Of course it is not the duty of deists and freethinkers to admit this; because, having no remedy for it, why should they tell that the old fortress is rotten at the foundation? But let us admit it; it is too hard to be cracked.—Page 5.

* * * * *

10. We are also asked to explain, on the ground of Evolution, whether the bird laying eggs came first without eggs, or the eggs without fowls. If we say eggs first, where did the egg come from? Or if we say the fowl first, then did the fowl not come from an egg? It would puzzle the natural philosopher to say how it could possibly come without an egg.

* * * * *

19. Why is it that dying men never regret being Christians? And why do Deists often on their death-beds mourn over the fact that they were not Christians?

* * * * *

24. I cannot gainsay the fact, that the London Shipping Gazette has admitted that no ship is capable of meeting great storms and carrying heavy cargoes "that differs far from the proportions of Noah's Ark." How came the proportions of that great ship to be so worthy of attention in this nineteenth century?

EVANGELIZATION IN SPAIN AND PORTUGAL.

IN Spain and Portugal, where until quite lately Reform has seemed to many an impossibility, there are now several thousand native Protestants. Confronted by obloquy and persecution, these noble Reformers have asserted for themselves and their fellow-countrymen their right to an "open Bible," and to the "free salvation" therein proclaimed. They are carrying on a really spiritual work—the result of an open Bible, and of that glad tidings which is "the power of God unto salvation." Those who are engaged in the work are thoroughly in earnest—anxious about their own spiritual welfare, anxious about that of their fellow-countrymen. Every member of these Churches is taught to regard himself as a missionary, and many of them gladly accept the responsibility. But these Reformers are only a handful in the midst of a vast Roman Catholic population. They are few, and poor, and weak. They are passing through the ordeal from which we emerged 300 years ago. We have safely reached the shore. They are still struggling through the waves. A cry comes to us as it did to the Apostle of old, "Come and help us." Shall we not, as he did, haste to the rescue of these our brethren, assuredly believing that the Lord Himself has called us?

Shall these our brethren sink—
And we so near!
Dare we from danger shrink—
And they so dear!

Ah, ye who still delay,
What if in the last Great Day
Ye should for mercy pray,
And none should hear!

Christ! let it not be thus—
Be Thou at hand!
Dear Lord, who died for us,
Now by us stand!

Teach us the lost to seek,
Help the strong to help the weak,
Safe through the waters bleak,
Bring all to land!

TENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASES REPORTED by MR. C. CLARKE, STEAM PRINTING WORKS, HAYWARD'S HEATH (Sussex).

(1) In a letter dated April 7 Mr. Clarke writes me, relative to the case of Miss L. M., then of DITCHLING RISE, now of HAYWARD'S HEATH, as follows:—"You remember I wrote you on behalf of Miss L.M. Her own doctor gave her no relief, nor did she meet with any at the Brighton Hospital. With your treatment I am happy to say it was altogether different. She felt relieved from the first dose, and kept mending until well."

The following particulars are taken from the statement sheet of her case, which is now before me:—"Consumption in the family. First symptoms extreme weakness, with fainting fits, followed by diarrhœa and copious yellow expectoration, and spitting of blood. Breathing short, hot flushes, palpitations, and gradual loss of flesh. Had been to the Sussex County Hospital at Brighton. Blistering and other treatment had proved of no avail. Evidently getting worse, day by day."

The result of my treatment is above stated by Mr. Clarke, and he adds:—"It was a marvellous cure."

(2) In the same letter Mr. C. speaks of the case of MRS. SMITH, of SOUTH ROAD, HAYWARD'S HEATH:—"Mrs. Smith was also given up by her doctor after long treatment as an incurable case of consumption, but she has quite recovered under you."

N.B.—Another case reported by Mr. Clarke will follow next week.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

THOUGHTS IN THE VALLEYS:
Lessons from Valleys of the Old Testament.

Press Notices.

"The author draws lessons of 'prayer and preparation' from the valley of Baca, of 'watching and waiting' from Rephaim, and so forth. It is a charming book, full of pious and loving thoughts. A better gift to a devout Christian could hardly be found."
The Record.

"The author draws practical and spiritual lessons from the valleys. These brief chapters, comforting, admonitory, encouraging to any reader, will afford suggestion for many a valuable address to those who are called to teach others."—The Christian.

"The great merit of the book is its power to make very interesting much of Scripture History. . . . These valleys are most graphically described; the events are vividly recounted, and the lessons that such events are fitted to teach are so plainly given, that there can be no mistaking them."—Literary World.

"It will be sweet to many a true believer. Its outside is certainly in fine taste, and the interior is gracious and suggestive."—Rev. C. H. SPURGEON.

"Singularly fresh and interesting in the beautiful teachings gleaned from the Old Testament valleys. A book for those passing through the shadows of affliction, but by no means lacking in bright glimpses of the sunshine above."—Word and Work.

"A NEW START."

SOLDIERS' AND SAILORS' HOMES, MALTA.

PROPOSED EXTENSION.

The 12th of June is very near, and unless some very considerable help is forthcoming before that day, the beautiful site, for which Mr. LAVERACK pleaded in his letter in THE CHRISTIAN of the 24th April, must pass out of his power, perhaps to be used again for Roman Catholic priest's house and Roman Catholic schools.

About £50 has been received in several sums which have been acknowledged. Will one or two, or more, send the balance of £2,500 asked for, to the Rev. R. W. ALLEN, 26, Edith-street, West Kensington, W., by the 11th June, that he may telegraph to Mr. LAVERACK, "MONEY RECEIVED, PURCHASE!"

ANOTHER PUBLIC-HOUSE

Has been secured by the Managers of the DUBLIN BRANCH OF IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS,

AND IS BEING

CONVERTED INTO A RAGGED SCHOOL.

ONE HUNDRED POUNDS is needed to pay the expenses of obtaining possession and making the necessary alterations, towards which Contributions will be gratefully received and acknowledged by Mrs. E. SMYLY, 35, Upper Fitzwilliam-street, Dublin.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children,

Stepney, Bow, Limehouse, LONDON, E.; Ilford, ESSEX; JERSEY; and Ontario, CANADA.

THE ANNUAL MEETING

OF THESE INSTITUTIONS WILL (D.V.) BE HELD IN

EXETER HALL,

On Thursday Evening, June 12, 1884.

THE RIGHT HON. THE EARL CAIRNS

Will take the Chair at SIX o'clock, and will be supported by a number of sympathisers with such work.

About 750 Children from the "Homes" will sing, conducted by Mr. Joseph Proudman.

To prevent the over-crowding of former years, and the necessity of waiting at the doors a long time before admission, it has been arranged that the doors shall be opened at a Quarter before Five o'clock, after which hour persons holding tickets will be admitted at once to their seats, in the order in which they arrive, until the house is full.

TICKETS for the Body of the Hall and for the Gallery will be 6d. and 1s. each; Ladies' Gallery, 3s. 6d.; and a few Specially Reserved and Numbered Seats being 10s. 6d. each.

Application should be made for these Tickets at once, in all cases enclosing stamps to prepay the ticket and postage. No more Tickets will be issued than are sufficient to seat the Hall comfortably.

OFFICES: 18 to 26, STEPNEY CAUSEWAY, LONDON, E.

THE RELATION OF ODO-MAGNETIC INFLUENCE TO LIFE AND HEALTH.

As confirmatory of the relation of Odo-Magnetic influence to life and health, it has been demonstrated that polarisation is not the only property of magnetised bodies, but that in addition to the influence which Magnetism exerts upon iron (the ferruginous property), it has also a peculiar effect upon the nervous system, termed by its discoverer ODIC FORCE or influence.

This "Force" is now known as pre-eminently the curative property of Magnetism; and it is, we believe, the element of vitality in all forms of electrical treatment. It has a peculiar power to ally itself with the recuperative forces of the system, and in a remarkable manner is concomitant with all those natural laws which beneficially affect our health. We have had sufficient proof of the existence and operation of this Odic principle to affirm that it is as constantly necessary to our well-being as air to the lungs, and that its active presence in and around us is as much a fact as that we breathe, although its operative influence is far less apparent. It is not apparent that Oxygen is the Magnetic element of the atmosphere; yet it is known to be the most abundant as well as the most important element of vitality—its Magnetic force being in proportion to the density of the atmosphere. It is certainly an essential and predominant element in the air, as iron is in the earth.

December 20, 1883.

"I have now been under your treatment seven months for functional derangement and palpitation of the heart, especially after meals, and violent throbbing by night. I am very thankful to say that it has had the desired effect in regulating the heart's action. The good work has been going on slowly but surely, so that now, while I am writing, I hardly know I have a heart, the action is so normal. The nocturnal throbbing is vanishing almost like darkness before the day-dawn.

"Supposed incurable heart disease is so prevalent that I think sufferers should know that there is a 'balm in Gilead,' and I am glad to give my name with this statement of experience for any use you think well to make of it, and the more so because it has been in no way solicited."

Concurrent with the above will be found the following remarks of a gentleman who wrote me a short time since.

"September 20, 1883.

"I am thankful to say your treatment has been of great service to me. Before I adopted it my heart (pulse) gave 12 good beats, and then an apparent miss; now, however, my pulse is plumper and regular."

On receipt of particulars of any case, in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be given, and the required treatment suggested, gratuitously, by Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-sq., London, E.C.

Jubilee Volume

OF THE

LONDON CITY MISSION.

By JOHN MATTHIAS WEYLLAND,
Author of "The Man with the Book," "Round the Tower," &c.

INTRODUCTION
BY THE
Right Hon. the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co.

A Jubilee Fund has been commenced for the purpose of sustaining and extending the operations of the Society. It is the wish of the Committee to raise their staff of missionaries from 460 to 500. The first effort will be to increase their staff of visitors to Public Houses, so that all the people found in these 10,400 houses may be brought under the influence of the Gospel. In this great object we ask help of every reader. Further information will be given, and contributions received, by the Jubilee Fund Secretary, J. M. WEYLLAND, London City Mission House, Bridewell-place, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

MODERN PREACHING.—I.

BY AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

THE following important distinction is commonly overlooked: A writer may hold that the present age is, in relation to moral and religious questions, far in advance of former days; and at the same time maintain that there are dangers which now threaten society of a peculiar and alarming nature. Let us take one example. No intelligent man would assert that the world has ever before known men who systematically plot to bring destruction upon innocent persons in order to advance political designs, or to avenge themselves on others. A man is not to be charged with saying that the former days were better than these, because he alleges that in the history of the world lawlessness was never, as now, so fraught with danger, so unscrupulous, and diabolic.

So it is with the subject upon which I am constrained to write. Whatever advance the age has made in other directions, and the advance has been wide and palpable, in the matter of the incisiveness of the preaching of professional men there has been for the last thirty years a steady deterioration. I remember being in York on a matter of business during the ministry of the late Rev. James Parsons. Among the visitors at the hotel in the city where I stopped were gentlemen engaged in manufactures, and on the Sunday evening some of them went to hear the celebrated Nonconformist preacher. As they returned to supper the change from the tone of conversation of the afternoon was most remarkable and impressive. They did not talk about the sermon they had heard, much less criticise it. There was a positive awe upon some of them. The dead sleep of worldliness had been broken; the faithful preacher had reasoned of righteousness and a judgment to come. Instead of conviviality there was silence, and then retirement, probably to pray. I refer to this as an indication of the kind of preaching that was then by no means uncommon. There was scarcely a town in the kingdom where there might not be heard powerful, unaffected, and wrestling appeals to men with a view to winning them to repentance. People could not help going to worship on a Sunday night because the exhortations to reach the heart and awaken the conscience were at once so awakening, convincing, persuasive; and brought the living realities of eternity into distinct and immediate connection with men's thoughts and souls. No doubt there were sermons of a very different order. But I will not hesitate to affirm that there was in recognised places of worship much more preaching that directly aimed at conversion, that sought to bring the hearers to immediate decision for Christ, that warned against evil courses, and that was marked by thrilling, impassioned, personal address, than is heard in these places now. Congregations were not asked after the appeals of the sanctuary to sing some sentimental poem, or to listen to what no persons could sing except the members of the choir; but they rose, not unfrequently, to pour forth a cry, and, under the resistless power of the discourse, to sing in music with which they were familiar:—

> "O Thou that hear'st when sinners cry,
> Though all my crimes before Thee lie,
> Behold them not with angry look,
> But blot their memory from thy book."

To those who did not live in the days to which the above refers there may seem an exaggeration in the foregoing description. The fact, however, will be verified by hundreds of persons who worshipped in Methodist and Dissenting chapels thirty or forty years ago. Congregations on a Sunday night would in those days break up, not in a cold critical mood, but deeply contrite and subdued by the weight and solemnity of eternal verities. The exhortations to come to Christ would send home multitudes to pray. Sunday evening services were delightful, because preaching was enkindling and earnest. It is painful to say it, but I am bound to do so, after much inquiry, that somehow sermons are now strangely different, and that such arousing, stimulating preaching is not heard in pulpits where it formerly obtained.

On the other hand, the themes of the Christian ministry are, if rightly apprehended, unparalleled for their transcendent import. No Christian man will dispute that when our ascended Lord called Saul of Tarsus to the ministry He sent him to us Gentiles in order "to turn men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan unto God." And still men are alienated from the life of God; still, as in apostolic times, the Devil has got the unconverted world into his arms. "The whole world lieth in the wicked one." Adored be God, the "I AM" hath come forth as our Redeemer; the mighty sacrifice of the cross pleads for us, and the Spirit of grace is given. With a meaning that no human thought can fully reach, salvation or perdition is set before us. To deny this is to break with Revelation utterly. But in thousands of pulpits where do words, looks, tones, declare the solemnity of these considerations? Where in these pulpits are seen the zeal, the compassion, the fervency, and the fidelity these facts demand? Paul so entered into the meaning of the charge his Master had given as to be ready in self-forgetting absorption to make any possible personal sacrifice—"That I may by all means save some." Who, then, can estimate the perils, the unutterable loss an age sustains, when the vast and appalling realities of man's condition, and all that God intended when He appointed "the ministry of reconciliation," are shrouded, trifled with, or ignored? Those who fill pulpits may be clothed in the gown of distinction; the dignity of scholarship may be recognised; there may be no faltering of utterance; nothing to offend in style or demeanour; the rhythm of cadences may fall on the ear; homiletical ingenuity may please; and pretty rhetorical phrases may relieve truisms and platitudes of their tedium; but these things may be an impo-ition and a deadly snare. They may be no better in churches and chapels than sounding brass or a clanging cymbal, if men are not entreated on behalf of Christ to be reconciled to God.

Let me, however, say, to prevent misconception: I hold firmly the Divine appointment of the Christian ministry, and that those set apart as Christian teachers should be trained and educated men. Spite of exceptions, the most successful preachers of bygone times have been men of learning and scholarship. Especially have the men who have powerfully wielded the sword of the Spirit been cultured in theology, a science which would appear to be deplorably despised in these days. Neither do I plead for preaching which is wholly hortatory. A wide range of topics must be assigned to men who would faithfully interpret God's message. But there is a great deal of preaching in places where the culture and the message might be expected to go together, but which corresponds with that which Ezekiel describes when he says that the prophets follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing! (Ezek. xiii. 3.) Surely a minister of God is a man who has waited as on the steps of the eternal throne, and delivers his message as from the Lord. Wide may be his range of topics for the "defence of the Gospel," and "the edifying of the body of Christ;" but that is not Christian preaching which, by quickening words, does not aim at the hearer's hearts, and to which persons listen month after month, and do not hear one plain statement respecting the way of a sinner's salvation. There is not a congregation of any size in the land where there are not men and women who are in their sins; and if, instead of being shown their undone condition, and their need of Christ, and the renewing grace of the Spirit, they listen to sermons that never help them to know themselves, and never, with pleading intensity, convince and persuade them to set their face from earth to heaven—then surely men are found false to their holy calling. They are like lecturers on art, who never speak of drawing; or on healing, who never refer to medicine. Paul tells an evangelist that he is to preach with sleepless earnestness, in season and out of season, and that with all persistence and encouragement of teaching, he must reprove, rebuke, and exhort. It is not necessary that there should be always the fervour of excitement, but it is expected of men of God, who stand between the living and the dead, that they should throw their whole souls into their message, and be profoundly interested in the issue of that message, and appear as men to whom sin, atonement, perdition, and immortality have a surpassing meaning and a tremendous urgency.

No more awful calamity can fall upon an age than when religious services are without warmth, preaching without unction, and when churches and chapels are regarded as places without interest. Especially must this be so in this age. Life everywhere else is throbbing and intense. Pleasures have a culmination of fascinating and splendid attraction. Vice and corrupt passion in great cities spread alluring, enchanting, subtle, and most captivating snares. The press pours out an endless stream of fiction, while newspapers and magazines cannot be told for multitude. Infidelity and so-called Free-thought are putting forth an energy of propagandism which is little dreamt of by the Christian people who do not inquire. Even in what are called religious circles, people occupy themselves in excitements and engagements that offer but a thin covering for fashionable dissipation. In politics and commerce, money-getting was never before such an ambition, and party agitations rarely so fierce and unscrupulous.

With this seething eagerness all around, is it not treason to Christ and to the times that the pulpit should be unimportant, uninfluential, accommodating, and so obviously ailing to arrest the swollen stream of earthly-mindedness? In a second paper, I shall attempt to give some explanation of this state of things. The "Immortal Love" that "outwearies mortal sin" will be sure, in the failure of the ordinary, to work on man's behalf by special instrumentalities, but it were to be desired that the ministers of the churches might be the agents to meet that yearning for the truth of the Gospel which the Spirit is awakening far and wide.

"The Christian" Pulpit.

CHRIST THE WAY.

By Pastor THEODORE MONOD.

(Concluded from our last.)

"Jesus said unto him, I am the Way."—John xiv. 6.

FINALLY, Christ is not a part of the way, but "the way;" that is to say, the whole way, the way from beginning to end. Here again, what a grievous mistake we often make, as Christians, because we forget that Christ is the way from beginning to end. We need to know Christ not only as the Sinbearer, the Reconciler, the Redeemer, and further as our Leader and our Example, our Teacher and Guide; but as our Way—the whole way.

If He is not the whole way, what profit is it to us that He calls Himself "the Way"? Suppose I ask you the way from one village to another, and you point me to a certain road. I follow it, and in a little while I suddenly find myself before a wide, deep, rushing river, with no boat, no bridge, no possibility of my getting to the other side. I may see a further road on the other side, but of what use is that to me? Your so-called road is no road at all.

Or if a man falls down a great precipice among the mountains, and he cries out for help, and you throw down to him at the bottom of the abyss where he lies, say four rounds of a ladder, while you hold in your hand a little bit of a ladder many yards above his head, what is the use of that to him? You have a little piece in your hand, and he has a little piece in his hand, but there is nothing between. That is no salvation to him. Nor is the salvation that God has given us one of such description. Christ is the way, and all the way. He tells us that He is "Alpha and Omega," that is to say, the first letter and the last; what does it mean, except that He is the whole alphabet? He is "the first and the last," the beginning, the middle, and the end; He is "the way," all the way long. There is no day in my life, no hour in it, no circumstance, no temptation, no sorrow, where I have not Christ with me. All that I have to do is to put my trust in Him.

Strangely enough we all understand this, as regards the first step into life and as regards the last step upon the road. If a man is anxious about his soul, and he comes to you in the inquiry-meeting or elsewhere, saying, "What must I do to be saved? I am such a sinner; I feel terribly distressed and burdened." What do you say? Do you send him to his feelings, to his notions, to his efforts, to his merits? Do you even send him to his Bible? You do more than that; you send him to his Saviour. You say to him, "Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." When he does truly believe he is saved. He finds peace in believing.

And if a man is on his dying bed, and tells you that the sins of his life rise up like a mountain before him; that in spite of what he may have understood and what he may have partly and faintly believed, he is afraid at the thought of finding himself in the presence of the Holy God, what do you say then? Just one thing. You say to him, "Let go everything; turn your eyes from everything, and fix them upon the Lord Jesus Christ. 'Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved.'" And if he does that, he dies in peace, looking to the Saviour.

Now, why are we so loth to understand, and so slow to believe, that Christ is not only the first step, and the last step, but every step? Whatever your need may be, the thing you have to do is just this, which you have so often told others to do: "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." Is it light you need, and wisdom to know which path to choose? "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ." Take hold of Him. Rest upon Him. He is "the light of the world," and He will give you the light you need. Perhaps He may not give it as speedily as you expect it; but one day, and quite as soon as you need it, He will give you light, and will show you the right path.

Is it strength you need? Do you feel helpless and powerless? What does Christ say to you at such a time? "My strength is made perfect in weakness." Then you are made strong at once. Is it peace, is it consolation, is it patience? Step out upon Him, and you have them.

But there is a previous question. What is it that you desire these things for? I am afraid that a great many sermons practically miss the mark, just because we take it for granted that people have an object which they do not really have. What some people want is that we should teach them the way that will make them comfortable and easy, and satisfied with everything and with themselves, and take them to heaven at last; but will, after all, leave in their own hands the management of their life. They will admit Christ as a guest; they will give Him the best room in the house. But they will not admit Him as Master of the house. Therefore the first question is: What is your attitude towards Christ? Why do you want Christ? Is it simply for your own benefit, or is it for the service and the glory of God, and the good of your fellow-men? In short, keeping to the illustration furnished by our text. Where do you want to go?

Suppose someone should stop you in the street and ask you to tell him the way. You say, "The way to what place?" "Oh, I don't know; I just want to know the way." I think a good many people are in that state spiritually. They ask us to show them the way. "Well, my good man, where do you want to go? What is your object in life? What is your purpose?" He does not know; he has not quite made up his mind. Well, as long as you have not made up your mind, we cannot tell you the way. The Bible does not teach the way to a selfish or half-hearted life. It tells us the way to the true life, the life in Christ, the life for Christ.

This question, therefore, must be settled, and if it is not settled, it is time it should be for each one of us. Are we not weary enough and sick enough of our wisdom, of our strength, of our will? "We have turned every one to his own way," says the prophet. Have we not done it long enough? Does your own way satisfy you? Do you get your own way? I daresay not. But if you did, would it bring you satisfaction? You know it would not. "They are full of their own ways," says the Word of God. It is a terrible thing to be filled with one's own ways.

If we would know practically what this means—that Christ is our Way, our Life, our Strength, our Joy, and Blessing—let us settle this with Him, that we will follow Him and belong to Him, that we are his, that we take Him for our Saviour, for our Lord and Master.

Then let us not forget that in whatever depth of difficulty, of temptation, of anguish, of persecution, we may find ourselves, He is ever the Way. He is the way out of every trouble; He is the way from the very point where we stand to-night to the point where God would have us to go, whatever it is. Step by step we have but to set our feet upon his promises; we have but to rest upon his love, and He will never fail us.

Here is a backslider. No one, perhaps, is more miserable than a backslider. He has known something of the liberty of the children of God, and now he is in bondage again. He is sorely tempted, instead of accusing himself, to accuse others, to accuse the Gospel, and to persuade himself that after all these things are not true, are mere fancies. He is tempted to throw overboard altogether all that he has received, and to plunge into a selfish, unbelieving life again.

Is there a backslider here, who is ashamed of himself, and who knows not how to come back? He is feeling about for some blessing, he hardly knows what. He says to himself: "Oh that I might find the way that would lead me to Christ." That is a great mistake. Christ Himself is the Way. Instead of crying for the way to lead you to Christ, just look for Christ; cry to Christ; call upon Christ, and you will find Him at your right hand.

Between Him and you there need be nothing but your guilt and your faith. And that is nothing that separates from Him, but rather that unites to Him. It is because you are a sinner that He comes to you; He came to seek and to save sinners. Your faith, of course, does not keep Him at a distance, but brings you into fellowship with Him. So that there is nothing at all between Christ and you. Put your trust in Him and you are in the way at once, because Christ is the Way.

Are you in distress? Go straight to Christ, and then, with Him, to your troubles: which is far better than simply to go, with your troubles, to Him. He will show you the way of deliverance. If you have found Him, you have found everything. Shall we use an illustration to make this plainer? Let us suppose a child living in a cottage on the outskirts of a village. The child has been playing all the summer afternoon, and, from one thing to another, gathering flowers, running after butterflies, he has strayed into the neighbouring wood. He wants to get home, but he mistakes the way. Instead of taking the right way, he goes further into the depths of the forest. And now the day is fading; the shadows are lengthening; the sun is disappearing in the west. The poor child, weary, hungry, and cold, sits down and begins to weep. He has lost the way altogether, what shall he do? After a little while he sees a light in the distance. Listening, he soon hears a voice, and a faint sound of steps approaching. He hears his own name being called. Oh, be sure he does not remain there weeping at the foot of that old tree. He rises and runs. Who is it? His own brother, his elder brother, come from the father's house to seek him and fetch him back. That moment he is clasped in his brother's arms; his brother takes him to his bosom and carries him to his mother.

Well, suppose she should ask—not a very likely inquiry—"What way did you take to come home?" What could he answer? Just one thing: "The way I took? Why, I do not know the way. I know one thing—that, as soon as my brother found me, I was in the right way again. He was the way home."

When the sinner meets with Christ, he is in the right path again. However far he may have wandered, though he may have lost himself in the very depths of sin, though he may have tried hard and long to find the way for himself; when at last, weary and worn, he hears the voice of that Elder Brother, come "to seek and to save;" when he sees the light in the distance; when he answers to the call; when he says: "Here art Thou, and here am I"—then he is in the way.

I remember lately visiting a good woman in my parish. She said to me that she had as a boarder in her house a workingman, from Sweden, who did not know the French language. He had been ill. She thought he would be better cared for in the hospital, and told him she was going to send him there.

When everything was ready for him to be carried away, then (she told me) "he looked at me with such a sad, longing look, and said, 'Moi—vous'—'Me—you.' I understood that to mean that he wanted me to take care of him, so I kept him, and he is now quite well again."

I thought to myself that was a very short address of the young man—no verb in it, no connected sentence, only two words—"me—you." But she understood it; her heart responded, and she took care of him. Be sure that we need say no more to the Saviour than this: "Me—you." Here is the sinner; there is the Saviour. Come to Him and say: "I am out of the way; I give myself over to Thee." Then having found the way, let us remain in the way.

This is what we need, each one of us. And this is what our age needs. We must show to this generation that is at heart so weary and distressed, that has so thoroughly lost the way, and is trying so many ways that will take the place of the way God has given us, and finding none—we must say, yea better we must show, that we have found the way, so that others will join us in walking in it—that is to say, in Christ; day by day, hour by hour, doing and suffering his holy and blessed will, step by step, from grace to grace, until it be from grace to glory. Amen.

SOUNDING AN ALARM.

I enclose an extract from a letter I have just received from a lady over seventy years of age. I think the publishing of it in THE CHRISTIAN may be the means of doing much good.—J. F. F.

HOW is the work of God going on among you? Are sinners convinced of sin, and fleeing to the Refuge?

Oh for more of the burden of souls laid upon Christ's people, the yearning to save them from the wrath to come!

The love and mercy of God, the ability of Christ to atone, are freely proclaimed, but many go to and fro as the door on its hinges, and feel quite satisfied that Christ has done all for them. The views of sin and its punishment are very hazy and uncertain, and few seem to trouble themselves about it. Rarely is a verse of Scripture quoted that disturbs anyone's peace of mind, or causes a tear to drop.

The exceeding sinfulness of sin, the dust and ashes of repentance, seem things of the past.

Who cares to get into a life-boat if the ship be in no danger? Who thinks of escape if there be no peril? Who flees to the stronghold, if he has no anxiety as to the safety of his own dwelling?

If souls are not lost, what does salvation mean, purchased at such a cost?

Spite of all the college education and years of training, would that we could see again the days when even the uneducated local preachers could say: "There was hardly a sermon preached where there was not one converted." That is how John G—— accounted for his willingness to finish his Saturday night's labours, walk over to a distance of nearly twenty miles, preach three times, and be back in time to begin work on the Monday.

A dying gentleman said to his brother, "Oh, Charles, you never spoke to me in real earnest about my soul!" "Nay," he replied, "did I not often allude to it?" "Yes, you did, but that was nothing. You ought to have taken me by the collar and shaken me, and warned me to flee for my life." While I see the mote in my brother's eye, I too often forget the beam in my own, and can only say:

"Forgive me, Lord, for Thy dear Son."

But that will not bring from the pit those who are lost through my negligence.

JOY IN GOD.

By CHEYNE BRADY

IT is our privilege and duty to live happily in the Lord. Let what will happen, we are to rejoice in the Lord alway. The world is full of sin, the Church in many respects is backsliding, our own hearts are prone to evil, all is confusion, contradictory, tending downward. Though it be so, yet I will rejoice, I will trust, I will fear no evil. This gives glory to God. Grace is grace, over and above everything. We are to live happily in the favour of God, in the light of his countenance, in a full sense of his wondrous love, in plenitude of grace, looking for his presence in glory, and enjoying his presence and fellowship now. This is God's work in the soul, and heart, and conscience, founded on the full reconciliation done and finished in and by the blood of Christ.

"Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines; the labour of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat: the flock shall be cut off from the field, and there shall be no herd in the stalls. Yet I will rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation."

Although my labour and work for God seem to fail and appear unproductive, yet I will rejoice.

"Though He slay me, yet will I trust Him."

Though all be against me, sickness, impoverishment, yet will I trust.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me."

"Though our outward man perish, yet the inward man is renewed day by day."

Our blessed Lord, in John xv. 11, said: "These things have I spoken unto you that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." And in John xvi. 24, He said: "Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full." Again in John xvii., "These things I speak in the world, that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves."

What is this joy? Let us see the meaning of the word itself—joy.

First, it must be distinguished from happiness.

Happiness and joy in God are quite distinct, and a clear understanding of the distinction will tend to establish the soul in joy even when circumstances are adverse to a state of happiness.

Happiness, then, is the condition which results from external circumstances, such as health, prosperity, glad news, favourable position, the surrounding of friends and comforts. We are happy when things occur to us agreeably—when our happiness is propitious. Happiness is that state in which we attain possession of that which simply for itself is to be desired, and containeth the contentation of our desires.

Joy in God, on the contrary, is an internal condition; it springs from within; it flows from the soul. Joy in God is a perennial spring of ever-flowing joy. In the words of an old writer, "Joy, properly taken, hath its seat in the mind and spirit of man; nor is it there placed without the Spirit of God."

Happiness is at times a tumultuous feeling, a quick emotion, a lively passion, sometimes calm and subsiding; at other times blazing up, as the crackling of thorns under a pot.

Joy in God is not a rapturous state, nor an impulsive condition, nor does it result from flashes of excitement, or enthusiasm, or warm devotions, or religious impressions. Joy in God is not merely the spiritual joy prevalent in times of awakening, nor the effects of partaking of a gracious ordinance, nor the effects of a rousing voice, nor is it the joy which flows from a complacent contemplation of one's own work for the Lord. Such joy is often "as morning cloud and early dew which goeth away" (Hos. vi. 4).

Joy in God is Christ's joy. To speak of the joy of Jesus in his Father would be too high for us. It is a subject for meditation, for contemplation, for waiting on the teaching of the Holy Spirit. The joy of the God-man, Christ Jesus, when on earth is seldom spoken of, but his whole life of obedience was his joy. "I delight to do thy will, O my God." We are told He had joy at the well of Samaria, when He revealed Himself to the sinful woman. "I have meat to eat that ye know not of." Such joy as is in heaven over one sinner that repenteth. On only one occasion is it mentioned that "Jesus rejoiced in spirit."

The early disciples were filled with joy and with the Holy Spirit.

The kingdom of heaven is righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Spirit.

The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, &c.

The Thessalonian converts received the Word in much affliction, with joy of the Holy Spirit.

Peter, speaking of the Lord Jesus, says: "In whom, though now ye see Him not, yet believing ye rejoice with joy unspeakable and full of glory."

John wrote of fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ, that our "joy might be full."

Under all circumstances, then, we are to "joy in God," and "rejoice in the God of our salvation." For "in his presence is fulness of joy."

REQUESTS FOR PRAISE AND PRAYER.—Praise for blessing at services in Theatre Royal, Ipswich. Prayer for blessing on a special meeting of Y.W.C.A., Birmingham, June 5. Praise for blessing on services at Holmwood and Carlinghow; and prayer for blessing on Mission at Cross Stone, Todmorden, by Rev. R. D. Monro, from June 7 to 16.

THEATRICAL TEA-MEETINGS.—One of these gatherings for the women engaged in theatres was held on the 27th ult. at Waterloo-road Chapel schoolroom. After tea addresses were given by Rev. John Morgan, of Whitefield Tabernacle, and the Rev. Frank Smith. Mr. Forbes had obtained a number of tickets for Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings, and these were eagerly accepted by his guests.

SINGING THE GOSPEL.—The choir that led the service of praise at Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Hampstead meetings has been organised on a permanent basis, to assist in any evangelistic effort in that neighbourhood. A preliminary meeting will be held at Leighton Hall on June 7, at 7 p.m. Practices, second Saturday of every month at the same place. H. A. FARLEY, Hon. Sec.

TEMPLES OF THE HOLY GHOST.

By Pastor STOCKMAYER.

MANY passages of Holy Scripture encourage and even command us to seek the face of God. In Ps. cv. 4 we are exhorted to "Seek his face evermore." In Psalm cxxxix., however, we have the reverse side of the same great truth. In verse 7, the Psalmist exclaims, "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?" (Heb. "face"). Here, then, we have the face of God and his Spirit seeking man. Both supplement each other, and are one and the same thing, for no one ever seeks God unless He have first sought him.

Many people pray for years to have their sins forgiven, without it ever occurring to them that all they have to do is to accept the finished work of Christ, that there is no need for their conciliating God, but that, on the contrary, He invites them to be reconciled to Him. We may make known all our requests to God, but we are not to trust to our feelings, but to the fact that Jesus Christ has borne all our sins. Many Christians are entirely swayed by their feelings, and in times when they do not realise God's presence, they think they must bring Him down from heaven. But He never changes. He is not a God afar off; we need not bring Him down; He is ever near us. It is therefore most important for those who seek the face of God to remember that it is his face that is seeking them.

If we keep this great fact in view, we shall discover much that is unreal even in our most earnest prayers. Many Christians will lie on their knees for hours, asking to be filled with the Holy Spirit; but when the Spirit of God wants to speak to them and discover some secret sin to them, they refuse to listen to his voice. This is a plain proof that they are by no means as anxious to be filled with the Holy Spirit as they imagine, otherwise they would yield those points on which the Holy Spirit has a controversy with them. We need not think that by calling loudly upon God and wrestling with Him, we have to compel Him to concern Himself about us. Let us learn to know God such as He has revealed Himself in Holy Scripture. Let each one learn not to measure himself by his impressions and frames of mind, but to hold to the Word of God and trust his promises. This will stamp our prayers and our conversation with quite a different character.

Our prayers must have reference to the revealed will of God. And what is that will of God? What is the object He has in view, when He compasses about one of his creatures and his Spirit pursues him? What is the aim of the unwearying, patient reproving of the Holy Spirit? God desires to have the house which he prepared for Himself for his habitation. Our bodies are the dwelling places which God prepared and destined for his temple. The Holy Spirit demands this habitation of God, which he prepared for Himself. God demands these members of ours, which we had turned into members of sin, that they should henceforth become instruments of righteousness.

Among the curses laid upon Israel if they should forsake the law of the Lord their God, it is said, "Thou shalt build an house, and thou shalt not dwell therein." It is thus we have treated God, by allowing other spirits to dwell in his temple. All the work of the Holy Spirit in us has for its object to clear these temples of his from all his enemies, so that our members may again be permeated with the Holy Spirit and become members of Christ, after having so long served self. How is this to be effected? First of all we must get a clear view of God's purposes with us. We must realise that God desires to dwell in us, and that Christ gave up his own body that God may be able to take possession of us. In order to do this we must keep still, when the Holy Spirit is seeking us, and deliver up all the enemies which He discovers to us.

Before the Spirit of God can take up his abode in us, He must pursue us. The enemies of God must no longer have allies in his children. As soon as we meet with anything in ourselves which uses the unloyal language, "We will not have this Man to reign over us;" if there be any sin which will not yield the ground, let us come and appeal to the fact that Jesus Christ has overcome Satan and paid the price for our ransom. He has given up his own life, and delivered his body to be torn, in order that our bodies might be set free from sin and become temples of the Holy Ghost. Let sin entrench itself as much as it will, if we only hold fast the fact that Christ redeemed us from the power of sin on the cross, sin must at last yield. But we must take up our stand on the side of the Holy Spirit. We must not try to drive out the enemies ourselves, but leave it to Christ to redeem us. Let us never forget that the Lord shed his blood that our bodies might become temples of the Holy Spirit, which He wants to fill with his glory, in order that He may use them for his service.

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—I.

MARY, standing by the opened sepulchre, did not recognise her risen Lord, but thought He was the gardener, until He said unto her, "Mary," calling her, as one of his own sheep, by name. Then all her soul went out in her response, "Rabboni!" When He stood on the shore of the Sea of Galilee the disciples knew not that it was Jesus, until he whom Jesus loved, exclaimed, "It is the Lord!" Then Peter cast himself into the sea, and came unto Him. The eyes of the two going to Emmaus were holden by their slowness of heart to believe all that the prophets had spoken, so that they did not know Him; yet their hearts burned within them while He talked with them by the way, and opened to them the Scriptures, and at last He was known of them in breaking of bread.

How often in the Scriptures we see Jesus standing, and, like Mary and the disciples, know not that it is Jesus, our eyes holden by our slowness of heart, so that we do not recognise Him in Moses and the Prophets and the Psalms. Yet passages otherwise obscure become luminous when we see HIM there. For example, in Isa. xxv. 8 we are clearly led to Calvary: "He will swallow up death in victory." But the Prophet proceeds, "In that day . . . He shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them as a swimmer spreadeth forth his hands to swim; and He shall bring down their pride together with the spoils of their hands." This is explained in John xxi. 18 by the Lord's own words to Peter, "Thou shalt stretch forth thy hands . . . [This spake He signifying by what death He should glorify God.] Follow Me." The Lord spread forth his hands upon the cross, and Peter followed Him in the manner of his death.

The Apostle says, "Now we see through a glass darkly" (or as the margin reads, "in a riddle"), "but then face to face." It is when, by the teaching of the Comforter, we perceive the solution of the riddle, that we see HIM as in a mirror, when "Darkly here as in a glass, He doth make his glory [or his sorrow] pass." But when we see Him face to face, and are like Him, because we see Him as He is, we shall read the Bible with opened eyes, and wonder that here on earth we had not seen more in the Scriptures of the things concerning Himself. For the Young.

A THOUGHTLESS BOY PUNISHED.

I SHALL never forget an incident of my childhood, by which I was taught to be careful not to wound the feelings of the unfortunate. A number of us school children were playing by the road-side one Saturday afternoon, when the stage coach drove up to the neighbouring tavern and the passengers alighted. As usual, we gathered around to observe them. Among the number was an elderly gentleman with a cane, who got out with much difficulty, and when on the ground he walked with the most curious contortions. His feet turned one way, his knees another, and his whole body looked as though the different members were independent of each other, and every one was making motions to suit itself.

I unthinkingly shouted, "Look at old Rattle Bones!" while the poor man turned his head, with an expression of pain which I can never forget. Just then, to my surprise and extreme horror, my father came around the corner, and immediately stepping up to the stranger, shook hands warmly, and assisted him to walk to our house, which was but a short distance.

I could enjoy no more play that afternoon, and when tea-time came I would gladly have hidden myself; but I knew it would be in vain, and so tremblingly went into the sitting-room. To my great relief, the stranger did not recognise me, but remarked pleasantly to my father, as he introduced me:

"Such a fine boy is surely worth the saving!"

How the words cut me to the quick! My father had often told me the story of a friend who plunged into the river to save me, as I was drowning when an infant, and who, in consequence of a cold then taken, had been made a cripple by inflammatory rheumatism; and this was the man I had made a butt of ridicule, and a laughing-stock for my companions!

I tell you, boys and girls, I would give a great deal to have the memory of that event taken away. If ever you are tempted as I was, remember that while no good comes of sport whereby the feelings of others are wounded, you may be laying up for yourselves painful recollections that will not leave you for a lifetime. SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE WELFARE.—The annual united sale of work from the industrial and benevolent institutions affiliated to this central Society was held on Tuesday and Wednesday last week in the Duke of Wellington's Riding School, Knightsbridge. A large number of stalls displayed a quantity of the various articles made in the different Homes. The sale was opened on Tuesday by Lord Ebury, who said he was surprised at the extensive dimensions and unique organisation of the Society. It attracted to its centre some eighty institutions, whose work was encouraged and fostered by help and sympathy from the London committee. These institutions were not only in England, but on the Continent and even in Egypt, as he noticed Miss Whately's school at Cairo was represented. Information can be obtained from the honorary lady secretaries, Mrs. Whatten and Miss E. E. White, 47, Weymouth-street, W.

Cabmen at Mildmay Park.

A MEETING of cabmen, probably 400 or more, took place at the Mildmay Conference Hall on Friday week. First they gathered in the large basement-room for a meat tea, and then assembled in the large hall, where they were addressed by Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., who presided, Dr. Barnardo, Mr. James E. Mathieson, and Mr. P. S. Badenoch. From the hearty response at certain points bearing on total abstinence, we concluded that a considerable number are pledged men, and from the equal enthusiasm on points of personal piety a large number must be godly men.

The meeting was convened by the workers of the Cabmen's Institute, High-street, Islington, where a good work is going on, and evidently the tide of blessing is rising for this class, as for many others in our privileged times. The first meeting began at half-past eight, and the second ended at twenty past eleven. Rows of cabs round the hall told of some unusual gathering inside.

To Total Abstainers.

IN your issue of May 29, there is a brief letter from a correspondent addressed "To Total Abstainers," giving the formula for a "successful substitute for brandy, for medicinal purposes." As an abstainer for more than a quarter of a century, and connected with the medical profession twice as long, permit me to utter a note of warning against its adoption. For those who may be suffering from extreme exhaustion to resort to such means, would be to take a remedy which feeds the disease. The ingredients mentioned are truly medicinal, but dangerously common and deceptive, and only fit to be used under the supervision of a medical man. In other hands, they would be almost certain to lead to excess in dose or frequency, and if no other harm arose, would certainly prove a delusion and a snare. In case of sudden faintness, pour cold water on the wrists and bathe the temples with it. The other maladies require the attention of a qualified practitioner. Rest, with food frequently, in small quantities, with fruits or non-alcoholic drinks of any simple character, are, with prayer and patience, the only means I can recommend as a help to those who are emerging from the slavery of drink; in my experience they are effectual. Liverpool Seamen.

THE annual report of the Liverpool Seamen's Friend Society is a highly interesting record of work done among the seafaring population of this great seaport. The staff consists of one chief agent, three port missionaries, and one Bethel keeper, who acts as a missionary in a room near the Sailors' Home, known as "The Forecastle." These appear to have been fully engaged with sixteen weekly religious services, daily street preaching, letters to officers and sailors, visiting shipping and pay officers, sailors' homes, boarding houses, hospitals, and residences; looking for wanderers and missing relatives, and restoring them to their families; Sunday-school, Temperance work, reading room, library department, &c.

The library department is a very important factor in the work of this Society. No less than 1223 libraries were actually afloat in vessels on every sea at the date of the report, and there were thirty-four in the hands of the librarians, making a total of 1257.

The committee have resolved to extend their operations till every ship leaving the port (if the owner or captain will permit) shall be supplied with a library, for the use of the crew on the voyage, and appeal to the sympathy and co-operation of any who may feel interested. A number of friends have each furnished the cost of a library, which amounts to £4. Friends wishing to help on this or any other part of the work of the Society, will please address Mr. James M. Wilkie, South Bethel, Wapping, Liverpool.

London's Bitter Cry.

AN EAST-END ANSWER.

SIR,—Will you allow me, through your columns, to acknowledge the response to the appeal you so kindly enabled me to make on behalf of the poor needlewomen, and further to inform those kind friends who have contributed towards the sum of £500 I then pleaded for, what steps I am taking at present?

I have secured a suitable place of business, at a very low rental, at 8, High-street, Shadwell, where a shop will shortly be opened for the sale of articles of clothing, made on the premises by women, who will work but eight hours a day in a healthy workroom.

Garments of various kinds, for working people and their children, will be exposed for sale in the shop, but gentlemen's shirts, and under-clothing for ladies and their children, will be made and kept in stock, and it is hoped that numbers of persons who are desirous of helping the poor to earn fair wages by honest work, will give orders for such garments as they may require.

I shall live on the premises, and superintend the management, but with the greatest economy in the practical working-out of the plan it will yet be marred if the £500 be not forthcoming, and I therefore appeal most earnestly to the public for the £117 still required.

Although many of those who have kindly assisted the scheme have not specified that their contributions are loans, it is felt by my poor friends, as well as by me, that no effort must be spared to repay all those who have generously trusted us.

I append a list of some of the contributions received. Yours obediently,

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

Opening in Central London.

THE opening of the Mission at the Temple-gardens Hall, on Tuesday afternoon last week, was "the beginning of the end." Having, so to speak, circumnavigated the outlying portions of the metropolis during the past seven months, it was fitting that the great campaign should terminate in the very heart of the City. On Tuesday afternoon it was pleasant to find many of those who had been active workers in the various districts rallying around the evangelists: such men, for example, as Mr. Archibald Brown, of Stepney, and Mr. Stuart, of Holloway, both of whom led the meeting in prayer. The attendance of the public was very good indeed, and embraced all grades and sections of the community, from peers of the realm downwards. The hall itself looked more trim and tasteful than ever we had seen it before; fresh texts adorned the walls, and a slightly raised platform gave the occupants of the reserved seats a coign of vantage not hitherto accorded to them.

Mr. Sankey was in capital voice, and his second solo, "Pray, brethren, pray," paved the way for Mr. Moody's discourse on the Elements of True and Successful Prayer. This address has been given in our columns at length, so we need do no more than refresh the reader's memory by mentioning the points—Adoration, Confession, Restitution, Thanksgiving, Forgiveness, Unity, Faith, Petition, and Submission. If there is to be a large and lasting work of God in this last district, said Mr. Moody, it must be begun, continued, and ended in the spirit of prayer. When he touched on the importance of making restitution to those we had in any way wronged, the preacher mentioned the case of a man at Croydon, whose conscience was touched by the reference made to this subject. He went to his employer and restored some money he had appropriated. He was able then to enter into liberty of soul, and proved to be one of the brightest cases of conversion met with at the meetings there.

At the close of the prayer-meeting which followed on the heels of the sermon, Mr. Moody invited the intending workers to meet him in the inquiry-room. There was a large response, boding well for the prospective supply of helpers in the work of personal dealing, that forms so essential a branch of these special efforts. In the course of some very free and frank talk addressed to the assembled workers, the evangelist referred to a matter that had caused considerable difficulty and done much harm at Croydon. Among those who went to the inquiry-room, ostensibly as being anxious, were some whom Mr. Moody bluntly but correctly designated "tramps." Their real object appeared to be to beg for monetary help, and in too many cases they had succeeded. This, though well meant, was most objectionable, and opened a door for all sorts of abuses. He wished it to be distinctly understood that if any such persons were found in the inquiry-room they were to be directed to Exeter Hall, where their circumstances would be carefully examined, and if the necessity were apparent, help would be given. Mr. Moody proceeded to give many practical hints to the workers, admonishing them to the utmost deliberation and thoroughness in the work of personal dealing with inquirers. We doubt not the fruit of these kindly and important suggestions will be round throughout the course of the three weeks' Mission in Central London.

The Converts' Night at Croydon.

These farewells awaken very mingled feelings. There is about them much of "the joy of harvest." The faithful workers who have gone forth in the bygone weeks, sowing the precious seed, sometimes literally with tears, come again rejoicing over the goodly sheaves that have been garnered. The converts themselves have cause enough for holy mirth, and they are by no means loth to show it. But in the minds of many of them sadness must alternate strangely with the gladness. They have been in the full swim of the meetings perhaps for weeks; the moving speech of the evangelist, the sweet inspiring strains of the Gospel in song, the hallowed scenes of the inquiry-room have kept them in a very seventh heaven of delight. Now the Mission is over, and they must revert to the humdrum experiences and duties of daily life. These good-bye gatherings must be of great service in giving them a good start—an impetus in the Christian life that will not soon be spent.

In point of attendance the Croydon meeting was little if any behind its predecessors. In point of interest and practical utility the same might almost be said. To the glad surprise of many, to the certain satisfaction of all, Mr. Sankey appeared on the scene, and once more made his peerless voice to resound among the iron rafters of the tabernacle, which has many and many a time re-echoed with his tuneful notes through the winter months. Mr. Stebbins, too, was there. When his voice mingled with the voices of the Misses Beauchamp and of Mr. Sankey in singing "Along the river of time we glide," the great congregation had a feast of honeyed sound that comes but seldom to the ear. Then there were the Male Choir and the regular Mission Choir, both of which sang with heart and voice.

Adopting the metaphor of Dr. Gibson at the Hampstead Good-bye, we may say that these singing friends provided the "luxuries" of the evening; the two spoken addresses were the "substantials." Some very condensed notes of these are all that our space will permit.

REV. M. RAINSFORD'S ADDRESS.

I am asked to say a few words to those who have received the Gift of God—the Lord Jesus Christ. Why should not all receive Him? God is a great Giver, and the whole of salvation is just this—God giving, and poor sinners receiving. To those who have received this gift let me point out a few simple truths.

We read in John i. 12, "As many as received Him, to them gave He the privilege to become the children of God." Properly translated it is not "sons of God." A man may adopt a son, but he cannot impart to him his own nature. God does not merely adopt us into his family when we receive Christ, but He gives us his own Divine nature. Now I want to fasten one text upon your minds, "As ye have therefore received Christ Jesus the Lord, so walk ye in Him." The way to grow in grace is to grow in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ. Walk about your inheritance, and see what great things God has bestowed upon you in the gift of his Son. He is given to you as a Saviour. Go to Him for everything you need. Go to Him with your burdens, with your guilt, your failures, your backslidings. He is able to save you to the very uttermost. He is given to you as a Priest—transacting all your affairs with God, and all God's affairs with you. There is nothing God wants from you that Christ has not undertaken to accomplish for you; there is nothing that you want from God that Christ is not pledged to procure for you. He is given to you as your King. Let Him rule in your hearts, let Him live in your lives.

Now you are to walk in Him; that is a life of trust. There is a close analogy between the natural life and the spiritual life. Many of you have just got spiritual life; you are babes in Christ. A babe, of course, has a father and mother; God says that a mother may forget her sucking child, but He will not forget the one who has received life in Christ. Then a babe must eat; see that you feed daily on the sincere milk of the Word. A babe must have fresh air; see that you breathe heaven's air by constant prayer and supplication in the Spirit. Besides these things, a babe must have exercise, or it will soon die of apoplexy. So there are many Christians who have got a kind of spiritual apoplexy. If you want to grow you must work for the Lord. Those who water others shall themselves be watered. One thing more. A child may have all these things, but if he keeps bad company he will be ruined. ("Hear, hear," from Mr. Moody.) Let the young disciples of Christ take care whom they associate with. Are not those who have the image of God stamped on their brow sufficient companions for you? Is not the language of heaven sufficient music for you? Beware of evil companions.

Remember you have three Graces to conduct you through the wilderness—faith, hope, and love. Faith assures you that you stand on the Rock of Ages; though you may tremble, the rock will not tremble under you. Sometimes faith is feeble; then hope springs up, and looks out upon the bright future. Sometimes even hope grows dim; then love comes to the front—love that beareth all things, that hopeth all things, that believeth all things, that never faileth. All these come from God; He does not stint his gifts. Let nothing ever tempt you to doubt his love.

DR. PENTECOST'S ADDRESS.

One of the wise things about these Missions is such a meeting as this for the young believers. One of my troubles as a young Christian was that nobody told me what my privileges were. When I was converted and the truth dawned upon me that my sins, which were many, were all forgiven through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, I can assure you I was an exceedingly happy man. I met in the street an old man, a deacon in the little church where I had accepted Christ. When I told him that God had forgiven my sins, he said he was very glad, but he began to ask me about Regeneration, Justification, Sanctification, Adoption, and other things that I knew nothing about. I thought if Christ had forgiven my sins everything else would follow. When I looked at my Bible, with which I was not at that time very familiar, I found that Forgiveness of Sins was in Christ, that the New Birth was in Christ, that Justification and Adoption were in Christ—in fact, that everything was mine when I took Christ as my Saviour. So I want you who have recently received the Lord Jesus Christ to remember that in Him you have everything you need now, and everything you will ever need. If you have accepted Him, He will be your Saviour, your Lord, your Captain, your Deliverer, your Friend, your Brother; He will never disappoint you.

After some thoughts on being fully assured that Christ is able to keep that which we have committed to Him, the speaker went on to say that belief is always closely associated in the Scriptures with confession. People say they hesitate to make what they call "a profession of religion." God does not ask us to make a profession of anything that implies that we are going to do so and so. The Bible always exhorts us to make a confession of faith in Christ. There is a vast difference between a sinner "making a profession of religion," as if he were going to endeavour to live up to something, and the same sinner confessing Christ as his Saviour. To profess that we are always going to be faithful to Christ would be a rash thing to do, but we never need be afraid of confessing Him before men. Let it be our daily joy and privilege to confess Christ. Dr. Pentecost told of a lady he had met at Eccleston Hall who was offended because he spoke to her on spiritual matters, but who afterwards came and thanked him for it, and said she was now glad to let everybody know that Christ was her Lord and Saviour. He also related an incident of a commercial man in Boston who was converted, but he made up his mind he would be a Christian without letting anybody know about it. Strangely enough he was put to the test the very next day, when he met a business friend, who asked him to "go and have a drink." He declined, but would not at first give the real reason; ultimately, however, he was obliged to confess that he had taken sides with Christ, so that his resolve was broken through. The young disciple will find it an unspeakable advantage if he will from the very beginning make a thorough and outspoken confession of the Saviour. Unless a Christian is out and out for God he cannot hope to be either happy in his own soul or useful to others.

MR. MOODY'S PARTING WORDS.

Mr. Moody has usually preserved a comparative silence on these occasions, but this time he ventured on some final admonitions to the young disciples. I have been asked, he said, to urge the converts to unite themselves with some church or chapel. I think that is almost unnecessary. Mr. Rainsford has told you that you must part with your old companions, and, of course, you will want new ones. Unless a person has really been born of the Spirit, we do not care to have them publicly identify themselves with Christians; if they are truly converted, they will be sure to wish for the society of their fellow believers. It is like water finding its own level.

Then there is the Young Men's Christian Association. I cannot but think that if these young men are really in earnest, they will identify themselves with any institution that helps to carry Christ to those who are perishing. I am glad that mention has been made of the public-house. I have no bitter feeling in my heart against the publican, but we cannot doubt that the public-house is an awful snare to any child of God; if you take my advice you will not go near it. Coming back to this country after an absence of eight years, I think I do not exaggerate if I say that among all those of whom I have heard as having become backsliders, about nineteen out of twenty have been drawn away by the public-house. I believe I can do as much work—perhaps more—than if I had recourse to stimulants. God will give you all the life you need. I want to give you one passage of Scripture on the subject: "Whether ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." If you can go and drink in the public-house to the glory of God, then go. If you honestly regulate your whole lives by this maxim you will be kept right.

Let me say another thing. There are many Christians who seem to have no unction, no dew of heaven resting upon them. When they talk they are like sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal. I believe God will give us a baptism of the Holy Ghost if we truly desire it; but there are a good many things we may have to give up, if we find they are marring our testimony. If you are in earnest in wishing to be used of God, you will be willing to give up anything that hinders your growth in grace, or destroys your influence. In these closing moments of this blessed Mission let us take as our future motto: Whatsoever we do let us do it to the glory of God.

Ere the company was dismissed, all bowed in silence, and after Mr. Moody had led in earnest petition, a few friends sang, "My Jesus I love Thee, I know Thou art mine." And with that joyful confession ringing in their ears and thrilling through their hearts, the Croydon converts were sent forth to witness for their Lord in the face of friend or foe.

At Stratford Four Months after.

(By a Special Commissioner.)

One of the charges brought against the Prophets of old by Jehovah was that of healing "the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly; crying, Peace, peace, when there was no peace." Among the favourable symptoms which mark the inquiring age in which we live, is the increasing desire manifested to ascertain the true character of evangelistic effort, and the extent to which it is permanent in its duration. In our endeavours to meet this legitimate demand we have been anxious to obtain information on this subject from sources of an absolutely reliable nature, and for this purpose have secured personal interviews with those of the clergy, Nonconformist ministers, and prominent laymen, whose immediate contact with the work fitted them for forming an accurate judgment on so important a matter. It is, therefore, with no small pleasure that we are in a position to say that the unexceptional and universal testimony borne to the permanent and abiding results of the Mission recently conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Stratford are most unequivocal and gratifying.

To discover here and there a church that stood aloof from the movement and was consequently left without a share in the blessing, afforded us no surprise. But we found that even where the ingathering of converts into a particular church has not been large, a manifest and abiding stimulus to greater activity and personal consecration is thankfully admitted.

One of the most zealous workers in the late Mission says, "The good resulting from the late revival is simply immeasurable, both in its immediate and far-reaching effects." Stratford and its surrounding neighbourhood are fortunate in its possession of many bands of earnest, godly men and women, who not only threw their best energies into the meetings at the time of the Mission, but have since followed it up with indomitable zeal. Neither have the after-work labours been confined to the immediate neighbourhood—persons who came up from various parts of the country and were awakened at the meetings have been subsequently corresponded with and counselled. Indeed, it is evident that no effort has been spared to gather up the fruits of the revival, and equally clear that the labours of the devoted workers have been amply and richly rewarded.

Among the ascertained results, in addition to those already noted in your columns, we may observe the following: The Congregational minister at Manor Park Chapel has received some sixteen into his church, nearly all being brought to decision through Mr. Moody's preaching. A Baptist minister in the neighbourhood has also admitted into fellowship several who were brought to decision, though some had been more or less awakened for some time previously. A similar testimony is borne relative to the United Methodist Congregation. Rev. Mr. Jackson, minister of the Wesleyan chapel, says, "Our church has been quickened, our congregations increased, our prayer-meetings more numerously attended; a considerable number have been saved, and I have personally received much blessing."

The testimony of a clergyman (St. John's) is that out of more than 250 names received for visitation by himself and his curates, he has good reason to conclude that not less than two-thirds of the number are genuine cases of conversion. Many of these it must be observed are young. Another clergyman bore testimony to its being "a splendid work," and that among the converts were several young ladies who have consecrated themselves to the work of singing for Jesus, and are now seeking to bring others.

A Primitive Methodist minister rejoices in now "having two services where formerly there was but one." In one congregation a weekly Bible-class has been established, and in another a weekly meeting for inquirers. The factory men admit that nothing has ever stirred them like it before. A Baptist minister says, "We have conversions now at every service."

Mr. Boardman, the active chief of the stewards, tells of a prayer-meeting which he attended in the neighbourhood (where the pastor has himself been greatly blessed), and where he found ten young men, including three brothers, all brought to Christ through the Mission. Another minister writes, saying, "My testimony is entirely in favour of the Mission, for we have come in for a large share of the harvest."

Nor is it in the churches alone that the blessed work continues to go on. The Secretary of the Y.M.C.A. says that at any of their weekly open meetings a number may be found giving their testimony to having been brought savingly to the Lord during the revival. At the Deaconess' Institute, in the Romford-road, we heard from the excellent lady who is the Principal of the establishment a statement of the deepest interest relative to the good there received. A mothers' meeting has been started; a weekly meeting is also held, largely consisting of converts of the Mission, whose happy and assured state is a marked feature. "The awakenings still go on in our meetings, and the converts seem to receive a large measure of the Holy Spirit."

Since writing the above, we have had the privilege of attending one of the meetings at the Romford-road Deaconness Institute. Like Barnabas, we were glad when we saw the grace of God in these new converts. Their simplicity, assurance, and joy in the Lord are striking. They hunger and thirst for the word of life. The difficulty is not to get them to the meetings, but rather to separate, for they linger on in prayer, praise, fellowship and converse, long after the ordinary service is concluded. One of them informed me that in the factory where he works not less than fifteen of the men have been brought savingly to Christ beside himself.

Another outcome of the Mission, as your readers know, is the establishment of a Mizpah Band. The members are chiefly those who have been rescued from the evil of drink, and they are banded together for the main purpose of rescuing others. From what we saw and heard during a recent visit on Sunday evening, we are able to bear witness to the singular appropriateness of the Gospel service by the band. We were reminded of one of whom it is recorded, that he was "sitting, clothed, and in his right mind." The wives, too, how happy they looked. A gracious and lasting blessing this, even if there were no other fruit of the revival. An excellent address, showing Christ's power to save to the uttermost, was eagerly listened to and drunk in as only such an audience can. One evening in the week is set apart for testimony. On the Sunday we were there eight persons professed to be saved. Indeed, there are conversions at almost every service.

Our matter is not exhausted, but these facts, ascertained by personal interviews with gentlemen, from whom we are bound to say we have received the utmost courtesy, will be deemed ample evidence that Messrs. Moody and Sankey's work is an abiding one. We give God the praise.

The following appeared in a Stratford paper of a recent Saturday:—"It is generally known that, resulting from the blessing attending Messrs. Moody and Sankey's Mission, the building of a Conference hall and room for the Y.M.C.A. has been decided upon, and that our townsman, Mr. Frederic Smith, offered the Committee in gift a freehold site at the corner of Vicarage-lane, worth £1000, or failing the acceptance of the ground, £500 in cash. On measuring the ground it was found short of the requirements, so Mr. Smith has now most generously increased his cash gift to £1000; and another most generous gift has come from Miss Eccles, of Highbury (niece of the late Mrs. Thomas Curtis, of worthy memory), of a freehold site for the building in West Ham Lane, adjoining the Dispensary. About £3000 has been promised, and we trust, after these noble examples, friends will speedily contribute the remaining £2500 needed."

Notes and Comments.

HAVING to prepare this number for the press earlier than usual, on account of the Whitsun holidays, we have not been able to acknowledge or insert communications received after Friday morning last.

The proposed railway between Suakin and Berber seems likely to be carried out. In view of General Gordon's opinion upon the subject—and no man is better able to give one—all who desire the rectification of affairs in the Soudan will wish God-speed to the project. He has said, speaking from long experience in the country, that until such communication is made no real progress can be reckoned on; and further, that the hidden misery of peoples in the dark places of the Soudan exists because no light is thrown on those lands. If this project were completed, light would be given, and an entire change effected in the condition of the people. The difficulty of communication is the greatest obstacle in the way of good government.

The duty of prayer for General Gordon has been the subject of remark in several quarters the last week or two. The Archbishop of Canterbury has been appealed to, and recommended coupling the General's name with prayers for special cases as appointed in the rubric of the Church. The Christian World recently had a caustic note on the absence of all reference to Gordon in the many prayers offered at the several meetings of the Baptist and Congregational Unions. Assuredly prayer offered in spirit and in truth is a far mightier defence than an armed expedition, and its bloodless victory would be a nobler trophy and a deeper source of joy than a costly armament could under any circumstances prove.

The visit of Tawhiao, the Maori King, will doubtless produce something like a sensation in London for a time. He is said to have become a pledged abstainer, though once noted for the strength and copiousness of his potations. The way in which these representatives of heathen barbarism turn toward England as the central point of civilisation, and as the ground of confidence when counsel and help are required, is a tribute to the Christianity which has gone forth from our shores to the distant parts of the earth. A Christian community of some 30,000 strong is to be found in the dominions of the strange and swarthy monarch now on a visit to our land.

Dr. Gerhard Rohlfs contributes to the last number of Africa a most interesting article on the present condition of Abyssinia. This country has a surface of some 300,000 English square miles, with a population of scarcely two millions. The religion of the people is a curious compound of Roman and Greek Church, and of Christian and Judaistic elements, the Scriptures being both possessed and studied. The entrance of Protestant missions is barred by the warlike relations of Egypt to Abyssinia, and by the internal feuds which prevail in the country. The Negus, or chief ruler, it is said, longs for peace, and is eager to open up his territory to Europeans. Once let this be brought about, as it easily might be by English intervention, and the Abyssinians would soon be awakened to the reception of the truth, slavery entirely abolished, and a strong barrier to Mohammedanism set up.

Dr. Talmage has been preaching on the easiness of divorce under the existing laws of the States, and referred to the increasing freedom of opinion upon it in France and England. The subject calls for earnest attention, the sacredness of the marriage tie requiring to be upheld with firmness and tenacity. Dr. Talmage scores a good point when he says:—

"I want you to notice that the frequency of divorce always goes along with the dissoluteness of society. What we want in this country, and in all lands, is that divorce be made more and more difficult. Then people, before they enter that relation, will be persuaded that there probably will be no escape from it except through the door of the sepulchre. Then they will pause on the verge of that relation until they are fully satisfied that it is best, and that it is right, and that it is happiest. Then we shall have no more marriage in fun. Then men and women will not enter the relation with the idea that it is a trial trip, and if they do not like it they can get out at the first landing."

Success is insufficient in itself to bring satisfaction. The blessing of the Lord is an essential factor, and all labour without it is lost. An illustration of this is found in the confession made by an editor of a German paper which had an enormous circulation and brought him much money and reputation. He said, writing to a friend, "If I were asked if I am happy I should reply—

"No. For fifteen years I have been occupied with nothing but my journal; it is like a tyrannical power that rules me day and night, and has made of me an absolutely isolated man, and has reduced me and my family to the lowest point of misery. I have buried in this work fifteen of the best years of my life. I have not had a single Sunday. The direction of such a work is a malediction which holds you with an iron grip, and you have obtained nothing but a large number of subscribers. Pride may be satisfied, but happiness, I know by experience, is not to be found in it."

We are exhorted to "give all diligence to make our calling and election sure." The hurry and incessant strain of life in reference to outward things which it seems almost impossible to avoid, make the danger great of our neglecting the secret claims of the soul. We cannot be too often reminded that the character of our inner life is the only guarantee for the real success of our outer life, and that the ensuring Divine favour and acceptance is of infinitely more importance than any earthly attainment. Luther's famous saying, that when he was less busy, he could do with fewer hours of prayer than he found essential when he became pressed with duties, points a moral for us all. Many beautiful texts—promises, precepts, and exhortations—are adopted as mottoes, and are often exquisitely illuminated, and sent to friends. We fear, however, that there are few texts more applicable to a large number of real and genuine Christian workers than this: "They made me keeper of the vineyards, but mine own vineyard have I not kept."

In several American temperance journals we have seen it stated that Mr. F. N. Charrington "brews by day and mounts the Temperance platform at night." All who know him on this side of the ocean are aware that he has no connection whatever with the brewing interest, having renounced it at the outset of his Christian career. As one of the statements that we have seen bears the date of "London, January 26," we would certainly suggest that correspondents who are in communication with foreign papers should carefully become acquainted with the facts before giving such assertions to the world.

A clergyman's wife writes, in reference to a recent note, that several ladies give her their cast-off clothing, which she gives to others in needy circumstances in exchange for still older garments, which in turn she gives to the very poor, upon whom they look wonderfully well. Great benefits may be conferred on many persons by a judicious and kindly lady like this minister's wife.

The serious condition of the labour market is one of the subjects which call for the thoughtful attention of all who desire the real welfare of our country. The distress which exists among the working classes from lack of employment is very great; many strong and willing men finding no means of gaining a livelihood. Such a state of things is perilous to society as well as disastrous to the individual, and requires to be dealt with earnestly and without delay. Lord Carnarvon urges increased emigration, and to that end pleads for further aid to be given to funds which exist to help the needy to settle in colonial spheres. The wisdom of directing and promoting well digested emigration schemes cannot be doubted, and to a much larger extent than is yet realised the solution of difficulties like those involved in the English labour question must be sought in such directions.

In reference to emigration, we learn from Mr. John James Jones, of the Samaritan Society, who has just returned from Canada, that there is an overplus of skilled labour in that country, although an unlimited demand for agriculturists and domestic servants. It is essential that intending emigrants should carefully investigate the facts bearing on their own requirements and capabilities before deciding on the country to which they go. It often happens that, for lack of this, great disappointment is experienced where otherwise success might have been achieved.

A friend who knows Paris well, has just told us of the marked increase there is in that city of shops closing on the Lord's Day, and says that there is a manifest tendency to pay greater regard to the day of rest on the part of many in the middle and lower classes. It is very gratifying to learn, also, that Mr. McAll's "Popular meeting" movement gains ground rapidly. No fewer than thirty-five halls are now opened in Paris, in connection with his work. Evangelistic work of all kind is being pushed forward with growing zeal and success; one of the most recent efforts in this direction is a Mission of Christian women to the laundresses who ply their occupation on the washing-boats. Such signs of gracious visitation from God in the gay French capital can but excite praise and awaken hope of large spiritual results.

On the other hand, there appears to be deeper need than ever just now for Gospel work of all kinds in Paris. Pauperism is said to be greatly on the increase in the city; during the last winter applications for relief were 25 per cent. more than in the previous year. Intemperance makes rapid strides. The correspondent of Evangelical Christendom states that in the Department of the Seine there is a drinking-house for every 88 inhabitants; in the Seine Inférieure, 1 for 75; in the Rhone and in the Somme, 1 for 70; in the Pas de Calais, 1 for 54; and in the Nord, 1 for 52. Such figures are startling in the revelation they make as to the drinking habits of the people, and call loudly for zealous propagation of Temperance principles, as well as of the more direct forms of Gospel teaching.

A correspondent writes us as follows:—

"Having read it, I forward, postpaid, my copy of THE CHRISTIAN, with other periodicals, to ministers in neighbouring villages. Such packets are gratefully received, and sometimes acknowledged with remarks as follows:—'If gentlemen only knew the pleasure it affords ministers in country places to receive a supply of periodical literature, such as you occasionally send, I am sure many would send us papers after they have finished with them.'"

The subject of the "Rede" lecture at Cambridge last week was "The Measurement of the Human Faculty," the lecturer being Mr. Francis Galton, M.A., F.R.S. The fact that man's capacity is finite was considered to be a proof that it is measureable; temperament and character, with physique, forming the means by which measurement must be made. The lecturer spoke of the art of measuring intellectual power as the dawn of a new and interesting science. Assuredly, in these days, it is eminently desirable that men should learn to estimate aright their own capacities; too often the worship and undue exaltation of intellect leads to evil results in the rejection of Divine truth and the forgetfulness of God.

We have received a circular from which we extract the following:—

"A few weeks since the Rev. H. Bradford, the Baptist minister of Prince's-street Chapel, Northampton, preached a sermon on 'The duty of Christians to separate themselves from all unbelievers.' This was prior to the last election, and understood by the supporters of Mr. Bradlaugh in the congregation to be specially intended for them. Their opposition was aroused, and they soon secured an adverse vote which led to his resignation and withdrawal. But a large proportion of the people who approved of his faithfulness and were attached to his ministry followed him, and in compliance with their earnest entreaties not to leave them, he consented to remain in the town and form a new church on Union principles. This will require the erection of a chapel and schools, where they can worship God and educate the young apart from all supporters and sympathisers with Mr. Bradlaugh. An unsectarian committee, consisting of leading members of various Christian denominations in the town, has been formed to assist Mr. Bradford, of which Mr. David Sherwell, 9, St. George's-terrace, is hon. secretary."

The movement appears specially worthy of commendation and general support, Mr. Bradford's moral courage and faithfulness in a trying crisis having done much to confirm the undecided and strengthen the hands of those who are labouring for the emancipation of the town from the influence of Bradlaughism.

The fifty-fourth Annual Conference of the Mormon community met in Salt Lake City on April 4. A membership was reported of 92,000, and in addition there were 46,000 children under eight years of age. 28,838 church officials are appointed to have charge of members of the flock—one overseer, that is, to every four and a half persons, old and young. Ninety-five missionaries were sent out out by the Conference, twenty-nine of them to Great Britain. The monstrous delusion involved in this infamous system appears to command a growing influence over the minds of men in all parts of the world, fresh converts being reported in large numbers every year. Nothing of a distinctly religious character was done at the Conference, polygamy, and the increased independence of the community by means of home manufactures and productions of all kinds, being the topics discussed at all the meetings.

The fund for celebrating the jubilee of the Rev. C. H. Spurgeon continues to make progress, and the current month will witness several specially interesting meetings in connection with the event. One gratifying incident is the return of Mr. Thomas Spurgeon from New Zealand; his presence will add a joy to the proceedings which nothing else could impart. Among the objects selected by Mr. Spurgeon for absorbing the fund in course of formation, is the tabernacle now being erected in Auckland for his son. On the 18th inst., the poorer members of the church at the Metropolitan Tabernacle are to be entertained at a free tea, and on the 19th, a general meeting will be held, presided over by the Earl of Shaftesbury.

A new Nonconformist burial-ground has just been opened at Chingford Mount by the Committee of Management for Abney Park Cemetery, that well-known and specially-hallowed spot being soon to be closed. The new ground is seventy-eight acres in extent, and conveniently situated about seven miles from London, and is approached through Clapton, Walthamstow, or Tottenham. An address descriptive of the various methods of dealing with the dead in various nations in past history was delivered by Dr. Bevan at the opening ceremony last week. It was specially laid down as a principle governing the action of the Committee, that the new cemetery would be open to all classes of the community, and to all denominations of Christians, without any restraint as to forms of service.

A new Mission to the Jews is about to be established in Tiberias by the Free Church of Scotland, to be called "The Sea of Galilee Medical Mission." The report given to the "Assembly" by the deputies who had been appointed to visit Palestine to consider the prospects of Jewish Missions there, was very encouraging in its character. They stated that the younger Jews were manifesting a spirit of restlessness and inquiry, and an impatience of old Talmudical authority which made them specially open to efforts for their enlightenment on Christian truth. The signs of the times in relation to Israel are loudly calling for increased concern on the part of the Christian Church to bring them under the influence of vital Christianity.

Messrs. Bagster and Sons are about to publish a reprint of William Tyndale's "Five Books of Moses," first printed A.D. 1530. The text of Tyndale is given unchanged. The most striking parallel and different renderings and readings in the Latin and German versions are inserted, and difficult archaisms are explained in the margin. A contemporary Commentary in the Notes of Luther and Rogers (Matthew's Bible) is furnished, and the work, as edited by Dr. J. S. Mombert, will be a valuable addition to our theological literature. The cost to subscribers up to October next will be 21s. After that date the price will be 31s. 6d.

THE YACHT "KINGFISHER."—Mr. George Banaster, of the Children's Special Service Mission, is spending the summer in the Mission yacht Kingfisher, holding Children's Services at various seaside resorts on the west and north-west coasts, and visiting the seamen on British and foreign ships at different ports. He is desirous of finding one or two gentlemen to join him in the cruise, sharing the expense. Particulars may be had of Mr. H. Hankinson, 48, Paternoster-row, London. The "services held daily," mentioned in Mr Banaster's speech at the meeting of the Mission last week, were the children's services on the beach. He is adding to this work, as opportunity offers at each seaside town, a work among the sailors.

WHITECHAPEL IN THE COUNTRY.

ABOUT two years ago we were much concerned when we saw so many children and people looking pale, and exhibiting signs of failing health. We knew that much of the sickness amongst the poor could be prevented, and many precious lives saved, if pure air, proper rest, and wholesome food were provided in the country. The Lord disposed the heart of Louisa Lady Ashburton to give the land to erect two cottages, and to provide the means necessary to sustain such an important work.

"The Mary Baring Nest," for children, at Addiscombe, Surrey, was opened on June 13, 1883. Since then 260 poor children had received fourteen days' rest, change, and pure air, in this beautiful part of the country.

On Monday week "The Louisa Lady Ashburton Rest" for men and women was opened, in the presence of many friends and 400 men and women from East London, and who had been invited to spend the day at the cottages. After journeying from Whitechapel to Woodside and arriving at the cottages, the people gathered outside and sang a hymn of praise. They were then admitted to the grounds, and twenty at a time inspected the new cottage and also the "Nest" for children and the nice garden.

At three o'clock the people again gathered around the cottages. After a hymn of praise, Rev. Marcus Rainsford read Psalm cxlv., and asked the Lord's blessing on this new work. Lady Ashburton, addressing those present, said: "This cottage is opened for the benefit of poor men and women, for the sake of Jesus, and to the glory of God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost."

Another hymn was sung, and the people proceeded to a tent erected in a meadow close by, where dinner and tea were served. Addresses were delivered by Rev. M. Rainsford, Mr. A. Denny, and the writer.

We are so thankful that a gracious God has made this provision for the poor. Here at George-yard, with 2500 souls in connection with the schools, classes, and meetings, besides others under visitation in the courts, alleys, and back streets, we know well the value of the blessings of fresh air, good food, change, and rest. It is a beautiful sight to see sometimes from 300 to 400 young people gathered in our large room, but it is painful to think that a large proportion of those present will have been removed by death before reaching their twentieth year. A stay in the country, even for a short time, will be greatly beneficial. The children will gain force and fire and freshness, and roses will replace the pallor of their cheeks. The men and women dispirited and weak, the broken in health, and the bankrupt in pocket, will get a lift on life's road.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN will be pleased to know that the work amongst children at the George-yard Ragged Schools still prospers, the Lord is winning to Himself precious souls. Will they pray for a blessing to rest upon this new effort for the good of the bodies and souls of the very poorest? There are eleven rooms in the Children's "Nest" and twelve rooms in the "Rest" for men and women. The Lord Jesus is saying, "Ye have the poor with you always, and whensoever ye will ye may do them good."

WOMEN'S EMIGRATION SOCIETY.—A portion of a party of emigrants proceeding to Canada by the Peruvian, under the auspices of the Women's Emigration Society, of which the Princess Louise is President, were received by her Royal Highness at Kensington Palace last week. She takes a deep interest in the question of emigration, and addressed to each of the party some kind words of advice and encouragement.

May Meetings.

The Christian Community.

THE 112th anniversary of the Christian Community was celebrated on Monday, May 25, in the Hall, London-street, Bethnal Green. The members and friends first took tea together, and then Mr. George Williams presided over the public meeting.

The report, read by Mr. James Atkinson, the Secretary, showed that there were now 173 members who had held 12,950 meetings during the year, indoors and out, and had thus addressed an aggregate of 498,200 people, and had given 293,886 tracts and periodicals. In the open-air alone they had held 400 meetings with 70,000 hearers. The workhouses under visitation contained 10,000 people, and meetings were held in 150 halls and wards therein. Further, there were 30 common lodging-houses under visitation. Then there was the regular mission work at the halls in Thrawl-street, Spitalfields, and in Bethnal Green. The Temperance works and the free lectures drew together many hearers, and the Free Library was well attended. Altogether, for the £1422 contributed, the Society certainly had a good report to present.

Ten speakers were announced on the bill in addition to the Chairman, and of these only two were defaulters. The following spoke:—Rev. Ira. Boseley, Rev. R. Mitchell, Mr. F. A. Bevan, Col. R. Wilmot Brooke, Rev. J. De Kewer Williams, Rev. R. P. Downes, Mr. T. J. W. Bennett, Mr. G. Kirkham, the Rev. W. Tyler, and Mr. Webber; this last-named brother having been a member for the long period of 62 years. The speaking was good, and the meeting hearty; and doubtless while these devoted labourers rejoice in what has been already accomplished, they will gather fresh stimulus from such an anniversary, and attempt yet greater things for their Lord and Master.

Homeless and Destitute.

The annual meeting of the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children was held at Exeter Hall, on Tuesday, May 27, under the presidency of Lord Shaftesbury. There was the usual choir of 600 children, including the boys from the training ships Arethusa and Chichester, and the boys and girls from country Homes, who delighted the large audience by their performance of the musical programme during the first hour, under the able directorship of Mr. Proudman.

Mr. Williams, the Secretary, read extracts from a report, showing that more than 9000 children have been admitted into the Refuges since their establishment, of whom nearly 7000 of the boys have left for the Royal Navy and Merchant Service, the Army, to situations at home, and as emigrants to the Colonies, &c., and about 1500 of the girls for service at home and abroad. During the past year 474 boys had been gathered into the Refuges from the streets; also 54 girls had been received. They came from all parts of England, and no homeless boy or girl was refused admission. All the Homes were in a prosperous condition, the children well-trained in each department, a healthy religious element pervaded the administration, and the Divine blessing accompanied all

The Earl of Shaftesbury, who on rising received quite an ovation, said the whole public were indebted to this Society for making these boys and girls a security and honour to the State. "Look at these boys on my left," exclaimed his Lordship, and "here you see our future Mercantile Marine, and Royal Navy, who will attend our commerce and guard our shores. Some of the worst vagabonds of our streets are turned into our best sailors, imbued with knowledge, tact, and judgment. Then look at these girls on my right, what excellent servants they will make. Most of us know what an abomination a bad servant is, and what a blessing a good one. Oh that you would give us the means of extending our operations a hundredfold."

Rev. R. J. Simpson read three brief letters from boys in Canada, expressive of deep gratitude for the good received by them through the Homes. Rev. Stylcman Herring spoke of the Temperance movement, the emigration, and the grateful and prayerful element connected with the Homes.

Aged Christian Blind Women.

The fourth annual meeting of the North London Home was held at New-court Chapel, Tollington-park, N., on May 29. From the superintendent's report it appears that the institution shelters twenty-two patients. Two more are waiting to be admitted when the new wing is opened in July by the Earl of Shaftesbury; this will enable the committee to admit thirty of these afflicted ones. With the exception of infirmities incidental to old age, the health of the inmates is good, their ages ranging from fifty-two to eighty-nine years. Great kindness has been shown to the inmates by visitors. Various societies and friends, too, have helped them by subscriptions and gifts of flowers, which tend to make the life of blindness a little more fragrant. Services have been held on Sundays and Thursdays, which have been attended with great interest, and it is believed that the religious influence brought to bear upon the patients has been productive of blessed results.

Various friends spoke on behalf of the good work.

Field-lane Ragged Schools.

On Thursday last, at Holborn Town Hall, the Earl of Shaftesbury presided, for the fortieth time, at the forty-second annual meeting of the Field-lane Refuges, Ragged School, and Boys' and Girls' Industrial Homes, &c. Mr. Peregrine Platt, secretary, said the number of men and women received into the Refuges during the year was 510, of whom 225 had been placed in employment or otherwise provided for. Night's lodgings had been given to 15,000. The Servants' Training Home trained forty-two girls for service. The Industrial Schools were training 241 children. The Mothers' meeting, an important part of the Mission, was attended by about 300 women weekly, who were also visited and helped at home. The Crêche had fed and taken charge of many young children, so that parents could go to earn their bread. The Ragged Church services were attended by an average of 400, whose unsightly rags would preclude them going anywhere else. A vast amount of good work, that could not be chronicled, had been done through the Sunday Evening Services, the Night School, Band of Hope, Bible Ragged School, Penny Bank, and various other modes of operation. The treasurer, Mr. W. A. Bevan, said that £12,000 had been received during the year.

Several stirring addresses were delivered. The choir of 200 children rendered good service. Canon Cadman made an earnest appeal for continued and increased help for the institution, trusting that the recent labours of Mr. Moody in that neighbourhood had led them to greater devotedness than ever in the work they were doing. Rev. G. S. Reaney spoke to the boys. He had formerly been a telegraph clerk, with small pay, sharing half a bed, sometimes in a public-house. But he did not drink the publican's beer, and to his abstinence, Sabbath-keeping, and the habit of prayer, under God, he owed his success in life. Rev. R. P. Downes said that a Scotchman of great promise many years ago came up to London to try his fortune, but having no money, he slept on the ground in one of the parks. From this he caught a chill, and died. Had there been such institutions as these in that day his life might have been spared. Rev. W. H. King told an anecdote of a little boy who had read "The Pilgrim's Progress," and when asked which character he liked best, said he liked Christiana better than Christian, because she took the children with her to heaven. Rev. C. Schuadhorst, and Mr. Burson of the Exeter Hall Y.M.C.A. having briefly spoken,

The Earl of Shaftesbury said the state of society in London would probably have become intolerable and the place itself uninhabitable by this time, but for institutions such as these. People said this was his hobby, and that he was always harping upon it. "And so I will," continued the Earl, to the end of my life." Parental restraint he feared was becoming almost a thing of the past. Perhaps the reason why the young people so objected to go into domestic service was because of the restraint which is imposed. All the greater need, therefore, for these institutions, which disciplined and trained them for domestic service, and whose recognised system is parental. Think, too, of the mothers' meetings: he believed some of the best mothers in all London were to be found amongst the poor who attended these meetings.

Ragged Church and Chapel Union.

Major Smith presided last week at Exeter Hall at the thirty-first annual meeting of this organisation, which was formed in 1853, under the auspices of the Earl of Shaftesbury and others, on an unsectarian basis, with a view of providing places of worship for the destitute poor, by means of annual grants and other help. Rev. Burman Cassir, Southwark, read an abstract of the report, which stated that the twenty-three Mission-halls of the Union afforded accommodation for 14,000 hearers. The Society employs 106 unpaid agents at its preaching stations.

The Chairman referred at some length to the increasing popularity of such work as the Union carried on, dwelling particularly on the chariness with which soldiers were at one time admitted to places of worship, which prejudice he was glad to say had been overcome. Rev. R. J. Simpson enlarged on the necessity for such work. The "bitter cry" of the present day would have been infinitely worse but for the efforts of this and kindred organisations. He had never known mere secular education to save or restrain children from evil, and he was glad this Society had started the lifeboat to rescue them. Rev. Bevill Allen, expressed his sense of the value of Mission-rooms, for he, with many of his fellow-pastors, found that the poor would not come to aristocratic edifices. Rev. W. Frith, Rev. Wm. Tyler, and Mr. John Kirk also spoke.

The Church Army.

The Bishop of Oxford presided last Thursday afternoon at the first annual meeting of the Church Army, held at Prince's Hall, Piccadilly. Rev. W. Carlile read a brief report describing the origin of the movement, and the steps that had been taken to formulate, develop, and guide it. The result, after two years' experience, had been most satisfactory. It had now become by far the largest part of the lay department of the Church Parochial Mission Society. There were fifty stations now in active operation. The Battle Axe, the organ of the Mission, was composed largely of reports written by working men.

The Right Rev. Chairman remarked that this movement was a new mode of attack on those dire evils which result in such misery among the poor. They had been charged with imitating Mr. Booth's Army. This he frankly admitted, and was not ashamed to do so. He was bound to say he felt moved to indignation against the persecutors who in Switzerland had been guilty of acts of atrocious violence towards members of the Salvation Army, which were a disgrace to the nineteenth century. What he feared, however, was that the Salvation Army would become a sect, and after the removal of its founder would split up into several divisions. In the formation of the Church Army measures had been adopted which would effectually guard against any coterie being formed around a leader.

Lord Mount Temple said he felt great interest in the movement. He thought the country owed a great debt of gratitude to Mr. Booth for having been the first to organise a system of evangelistic work, that certainly penetrated the lower masses as nothing had done before. Rev. E. H. Hopkins bore testimony to the good done at Richmond by the Church Army. There were a hundred persons in communion with his church, who were brought to Christ through their efforts. The results too were abiding. Rev. E. Carr Glyn asked for tolerance and patience by the friends, until the Army was grown a little. If they heard ill reports, let them inquire at headquarters. Rev. F. S. Webster, of Oxford, introduced the "converts" to the assembly, several of whom bore brief testimony to the power of God's grace in rescuing them from the bondage of sin. Rev. S. A. Selwyn had found the Army work a great blessing to his own soul, as well as to his parish.

An important Conference on the work of the Army was lately held at Oxford, where it has done most excellent work under the leadership of Mr. Webster. The Bishop of Oxford presided, and spoke very highly of its work, as he had become personally cognisant of it. Like testimonies were given by Mr. Hopkins, of Richmond, Mr. Wilson Carlile, Mr. A. M. W. Christopher, and others, while various converts told of the good influence the Army had exerted on them.

Aged Pilgrims' Friend Society.

The seventy-seventh annual meeting of this Society was held on Monday week, in the Lower Exeter-hall. The Hon. Henry Noel presided. The Secretary, Mr. J. E. Hazelton, read a summary of the report, which stated that the society rendered assistance to aged Christians of every Protestant Evangelical denomination. Pensions of five, seven, and ten guineas per annum were granted, and four asylums or homes are established, in which 180 of the pensioners were comfortably housed. There were 1051 on the books. The pensioners resided in all parts of the United Kingdom. The asylums were situated at Camberwell and at Hornsey Rise. The Home at Brighton, opened in 1879, provided room for seven pensioners

The Chairman said he was pleased with the catholicity of the society, which did not confine its benefits to any one denomination. The housing of the aged was the right thing to do. It was computed that 2000 families in London were occupying only one room for each family. This society provided one room for each pensioner. He appealed for increased support of the society as having special claims. Rev. J. Gritton, D.D., Rev. T. Hull, G. D. Copeland, B.D., W. R. Skerry, Mr. William Heathfield, the Rev. J. Vaughan, Rev. H. Sinclair Paterson, M.D., and others also spoke on behalf of the society.

Zenana and Medical Mission Home.

This institution held its annual meeting last week, under the presidency of the Archbishop of York, in the Council-room of Exeter Hall. The object of the Home is to act as a training institute for medical ladies who desire to devote themselves to Zenana and medical missionary work in Oriental countries. It operates on an unsectarian basis. Its medical curriculum extends over two years, and the instruction is given gratuitously by numerous well-known London medical lecturers and examiners on various departments of therapeutic science. Certificates of proficiency are granted after examination. Much success has attended the labours of former pupils now engaged in active missionary work in India.

After the presentation of the report by Dr. G. de G. Griffiths, the Chairman warmly eulogised the objects and methods of the Home. Its ingenious and beautiful arrangement of sending out Zenana ladies avoided any shock to Oriental prejudice, and secured a ready access to the native homes. During the three years of its operations it had more than justified its existence, and given them good reason to predict its extended success in the future. There were plain signs that the old prejudices against Christianity in India were greatly weakened, and he attributed that largely to the proofs afforded by the Zenana Societies that Christianity was a religion of charity and help. Ladies could not only do this medical work among women, but nobody else could, and it was their plain duty to send out trained nurses and female doctors to minister to the crying necessities of their Indian sisters. The education given in the Home was thoroughly efficient and sufficient, and he hoped the Home would receive increased support.

Sir Richard Temple bore personal testimony to the need, both physical and moral, for such agency as the Society provided. Girls in India were only slowly being brought under the influence of education, and until female education was general, the demand for Zenana work would be existent. He could assure them that Christianity was making very rapid progress throughout India, and there was a real, solid, sound basis of hope for the future, if such societies as this would continue their grand work of active charity.

Rev. T. P. Hughes, of Peshawur, said that the difficulty of access to Zenanas had been thoroughly conquered by medical ladies. Such a mission was also the cheapest and most effective of Christianising agencies.

Dr. Routh and others also spoke in support of the Society's efforts.

GERMAN EMIGRANTS.—Some of the German journals call attention to the neglected condition of German emigrants in North America. A writer says:—"Thousands, after they have been there a few years, are worse idolators than Fetish-worshippers. Their farms, oxen, asses, and swine possess their whole thought and being. There is no difference in this respect between the educated and the uneducated."

SPURGEONIC PARAGRAPHS.

From "The Sword and Trowel for June."

RUINED BY BAD COMPANY.

IF the company of the wicked does not leave a smear it will leave a smell; if it be not deadly it will be dangerous. Some of us are more plastic or malleable than others, and we are the first to be impressed by our surroundings; it is to us, therefore, of the first importance to place ourselves in holy society, and shun all needless association with the godless as we would avoid the plague. We are ourselves acquainted with many who have been ruined by bad company—such were C——, who became a reprobate through spending his Sabbaths in excursions and amusement; F——, who was led into peculation and ultimate embezzlement through his friends of the billiard-table; H——, who was never worth a penny-piece after he had found his heaven in the banquets of the Freemasons; and J——, who went from bad to worse through the company of those who laugh at purity, and call vice pleasure. Indeed, the list is endless; and we shall be conceited to no ordinary degree if we imagine that we shall be safe where so many have fallen, never to rise again.

THE DELIGHTS OF GOOD COMPANY.

There must be disease in the mind of that Christian who would not find delight in the company of many men and women of our acquaintance; for their experience, their holiness, and their communion with God, have made their words as music to the ear. When a few true believers meet together, and hold converse upon the grand themes of our divine faith, the pleasure is as real as it is pure, as intense as it is profitable. We shall never forget an hour with George Müller, with Samuel Martin, with Baptist Noel. It has been our privilege to converse familiarly with many renowned persons, but we speak without any reservation when we say that with the most godly we have had the best-remembered and the happiest forms of intercourse. It will be among our sunniest memories throughout life that we have many times had the good Earl of Shaftesbury all alone in dearest fellowship at our own home; and, much as we have valued his public utterances, one of our highest joys has been to hear him pour forth a full-volumed stream of story and incident of a personal kind connected with his own walk with God. We were never dazzled by his rank, but we have been profited by his friendship in a way which may be more freely spoken of another day. Yet have we found equal joy and good cheer in the company of godly men of names unknown to fame. We could mention a score of intimates with whom "a crack" is a grand treat.

FOES OF LIBERTY.

We fear that we are "shooting Niagara," as Carlyle would say: we doubt not that Jesuits are working to stamp out the doctrines of the Gospel; but, politically, the worst foes of liberty at this time are those members of the House of Commons whose tatics are making Parliament ridiculous, and the working of the Constitution impossible. It is time that men of all parties should combine in the resolve that national business shall be conducted in a manner worthy of a great empire: at present we think certain of our senators might learn improvement in the way of manners even from a pot-house club.

"THE BELOVED MOODY."

It has been the Editor's great joy to take part on two occasions in Mr. Moody's work in Croydon. On Friday, May 16, all the students went over to Croydon, and formed part of an enormous multitude, who gathered to hear a sermon from their President. We are more and more impressed with a sense of the remarkable power which rests upon the beloved Moody. His words are plain and fresh from his heart, and a special influence from on high goes therewith both to saint and sinner. It is a happy thing for London that such a shower of blessings falling upon it.

THE TABERNACLE PULPIT.

We have lately received many testimonies to the usefulness of the sermons to aged Christians at home and abroad. The following instances will serve as specimens of many similar cases. One of our former students writes:—"I was speaking in a village under the shadow of H—— Castle the other evening. After the meeting I was told that an old lady was searching for me. I was brought to her, and she began to weep with joy, saying, 'You are from Mr. Spurgeon! My husband and I are over eighty; yet, bless the Lord, I can read Mr. Spurgeon's sermons! I get them every week, I do not know what I should do without them. Do tell him from me what a comfort they are to my soul.'" A friend, who sends a card announcing his father's death, says:—"I desire to tell you how much he and mother have profited from your sermons. He has been a Christian for sixty-six years, but for four or five years has not been able to attend the means of grace; but the sermon has been rich food for his soul, and every week, when read, it has been passed on to other families."

Romish Revolt in Canada.

SOME months ago a French-Canadian journal reported that several ladies of Montreal were in open revolt against their Confessors, because of certain questions which were put to them. In speaking of it one evening at the house of a rich and influential Senator, the latter suddenly said: "That has lasted long enough, we must put an end to it. Let us go over en masse to Protestanism, and get a preacher from Paris." He was applauded, but fear paralysed action.

Nevertheless, M. Réveillaud, in a book just appearing, "L'Histoire du Canada et des Canadiens Français," says "there is a breeze which announces a speedy awakening among the French Canadians." There are causes at work in the heart of the Canadian Church which may any day bring about a schism, the result of which would be the separation of a good half of the Franco-Canadian population from the Romish Church.

En attendant, we are permitted to see the first-fruits of a more complete Reformation in the existence, in the middle of the province of Quebec, of several small Protestant churches and communities of the French language. Montreal alone counts five of these, whose ministers are distinguished as much by their talent as by their firm and enlightened piety.—Le Christianisme.

Mr. Scroggie in Newcastle.

A SERIES of special evangelistic services to be held in the Circus of this City on Sunday afternoon and evening, has lately been organised by Captain Robertson, R.A. These were inaugurated by a fortnight's Mission, conducted by Mr. J. M. Scroggie. The opening meetings on Sunday, May 18, were very well attended, between 3000 and 4000 being present in the evening. As the preacher powerfully pleaded with his hearers, many seemed to be convicted of sin. In the after-meeting not a few were led to give their hearts to Christ. The meeting each evening during the week, in the Central Hall, were well-attended, and with very blessed results.

On the second Sunday the Circus was again well filled, numbers in the evening being unable to obtain admission. Mr. Scroggie spoke from the words, "Though He was rich, yet for our sakes He became poor, that we, through his poverty, might be rich." The address was marvellous; it seemed as though God Himself was very near to us. Many realised as they had never done before, not only the greatness of the riches their loving Saviour had given up to them, but the depths of the poverty to which He came down. It was a time of much blessing, and many precious souls were won for Jesus.

Mr. Withers, of Durham Cathedral, much helped the meeting by singing three solos very sweetly and impressively.

CHINA INLAND MISSION.

THE conductors of this Mission called together their friends and neighbours at the Mildmay Conference Hall last Thursday, both afternoon and evening, to hear reports of the work and to receive a fresh stimulus, by prayer and exhortation, for entering on the responsibilities of another year. The Earl of Shaftesbury was unavoidably prevented from presiding in the afternoon, and his place was taken by Mr. R. Scott.

In the evening the attendance was large, Mr. George Williams in the chair. After praise and prayer,

Mr. Broomhall, the Secretary, made some announcements with respect to the progress of the work at home. Since last anniversary thirty new missionaries have gone forth. An increase of income is also encouraging. During the year 1881 the income was £9544; in 1882 it was £10,608; in 1883 it rose to £16,290. Taking the Mission year ending at the present date, there was last twelve months an increase of over £3000, exclusive of a special donation of £2000; yet the year closed with a balance of about £10. He hoped next year to report an income of £20,000 at least. Among other things needed at home was a larger and more comfortable room in which to hold the Saturday prayer-meetings.

Mr. G. Williams said the Secretary's statement as to the expansion of the work was very encouraging, and a sign that the Christians of this land are beginning to feel their responsibility towards China. It is the highest privilege one can have, and an exceedingly great honour, to be permitted to help on a work like this. These good Chinamen who send to us "the cup that cheers" deserve our gratitude on that ground alone. Any blessing we can confer on them will return to us a hundredfold. All sections of the people are learning to take a deeper interest in the Chinese people; as an instance of this the Chairman mentioned that one gentleman had sent £2000 to the Bible Society to further the spread of the Scriptures in China.

As one of the earliest missionaries to China in connection with this Society, Mr. J. W. Stevenson recalled with thankfulness the great and wonderful progress that had been made. There is not now a province in the whole of China that has not been touched by its operations. Still there is ample room for further extension. Referring to his recent experiences in Bhamo, Mr. Stevenson was glad to record the baptism of the two first converts in that part of the country, in July last. There was some anxiety lately on account of a rebellion, but matters are now quiet and the missionaries have again settled down to work. Eight years ago there was not a single Mission station between Bhamo and Hangkow, a distance of 2200 miles; now there is a chain of stations, at long intervals of course, and not a few converts. China is now fully open to the Gospel, more so, indeed, than some European countries, or even some parts of Ireland. It is for us to enter in and possess that vast land for Christ. Inrelating some typical cases of conversion, Mr. Stevenson told of a Chinese woman whose conversion at sixty-eight years old strikingly showed the power of the Gospel in overcoming the ancient superstitions that are such a hindrance to the acceptance of the simple Gospel. An ancestral scroll, once belonging to this woman, was exhibited and explained by Mr. Stevenson, showing the power of the ancestral worship over the minds of the people. In the case of another who had been down-trodden by her relatives, and led a very cheerless life, there was a complete and remarkable change, after she had learned to know God as her heavenly Father. She has been a Bible-woman and devoted Christian for a number of years. A third case was that of a Chinese "agnostic," who after months of reading the Scriptures, and prayer, saw things in a different light. He confided in his wife that he had resolved to become a follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, and found that she, too, was longing for peace. She became an anxious inquirer, and by-and-by a true Christian. Others heard the Gospel story from the lips of the ex-agnostic, and not a few were converted. There are to-day three different native churches, mainly the result of that man's efforts. He presented a Chinese scroll to Mr. Stevenson, which, being interpreted, means "Come over and help us." This the speaker exhibited and earnestly applied at the close of his interesting address.

Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath, strongly urged his fellow-Christians to lay China and its claims, and the work of the missionaries there, as a continual burden on their hearts before the Lord. We are hearing of many converts all over London through Messrs. Moody and Sankey's labours. Shall not many of them give themselves to the work of foreign Missions? It may be that the days of persecution are coming on us again; if so, many will be scattered abroad in heathen lands. But it is better to go out as volunteers, instead of waiting to be driven, perhaps against our will. The speaker closed with an earnest appeal to young Christians to give their lives to the blessed work of carrying the Gospel to far-away China.

Deacon Abraham, the Nestorian brother, excited considerable interest as he presented himself. He said that many centuries ago missionaries were sent to China from his own country, and he felt much interest in that great empire.

Mr. James Mathieson cited the deeply interesting fact that five ladies, members of one family in Belfast, had given themselves to Mission work in China as the result of a speech at the Conference Hall two years ago by Mr. Grattan Guinness. He had heard of other results of the same kind from that speech. From his study of Scripture he had come to the conclusion that the plan of itinerant Missions adopted by the China Inland Mission, was the one that was most in accordance with early methods, and most likely to be useful in spreading the good news of the Gospel. He closed with a word of earnest advocacy on behalf of Medical Missions, both at home and abroad.

Last, but not least, came Mr. Hudson Taylor, who said he rejoiced in the efforts of all the thirty-one Protestant Missions in China (with perhaps one exception, a very high Church Mission). They were all doing good work, and as long as the messengers of the Cross went to China, he cared not what Society they joined. As Mr. Broomhall had said, God had answered their prayers to the extent of enabling them to send thirty new workers during the year. If all the thirty-one Missions were to increase their staff in the same proportion they would soon have a goodly band of workers. He believed the city of Glasgow had more ordained ministers in it than there are Christian workers of every kind in the whole of China. Mr. Taylor told how a great blessing often follows the testimony of the missionaries on shipboard, before they reach Chinese soil. If no other results were to follow their labours, all the money expended would be well spent. The past has been a year of special difficulty, through the action of the French with respect to Tonquin. Still, they were able to record gratifying progress in various parts of the country, in the matter of Mission premises. Among the things wanted at the present time were two really competent Christian male teachers. Some dozen children had been converted during the year in the schools, and some of these had been the means of much blessing to their parents. Better premises are needed in Shanghai, for the entertainment of the workers as they pass and repass to and from the field. Mr. and Mrs. Dalziel, who have been stationed there for some years, have been greatly used of God to the conversion of British sailors. It is desired, if possible, to set them entirely free from other duties in order to give themselves wholly to this work. Referring to the opium question, Mr. Taylor said that Gospel work among the victims of this drug is being signally blessed. This opium is a great curse among the people. One worker lately reported some twenty-five cases of suicide from this cause that had come to his notice. Mr. Douthwaite has paid a visit to Corea, and has been able to put into circulation many copies of the Scriptures. Altogether there has been great cause for thankfulness to God for what He has done. He looked forward with a certain hope that during the year to come the additional missionaries for whom they had prayed would be given, and that a fair margin of the needed resources would be supplied.

In some closing remarks, Mr. Williams referred to the fact that nine young men had gone forth to the foreign field from the ranks of the Y.M.C.A. during the year. He hoped that in the time to come not units, but hundreds would go forth.

Before offering prayer, Mr. Eugene Stock said that he had just heard that Corea was likely to be speedily opened to free Gospel effort; he hoped the agents of the Inland Mission would be able to seize the opportunity thus offered.

We understand that Rev. J. McCarthy, who has returned from a two months' deputation tour in Scotland, has been able to awaken considerable interest throughout the northern kingdom in the work of China evangelisation. It is expected that a goodly number will offer themselves for the work; some at their own charges.

The Connaught Institute, Brighton.

DEAR SIR,—As a large number of your readers are interested in this Institute for soldiers and mechanics, and have generously helped us in the past, I venture to ask you for space to lay before them very briefly a statement of advance. I am thankful to God to be able to say that every branch of the work shows distinct advance. Many have to thank God for the blessings of the Gospel, received through its various agencies, and are to be found now helping to draw others under the same influence.

As responsible trustee, I, with Mrs. Pennefather's consent, placed the whole practical work of the trust under the guidance of Miss Sooby, of the well-known Mildmay Association; she, with several others of the same Association, has worked most devotedly, and in a spirit of complete self-denial.

The following table will show without further comment how their labour of love is valued by those to whom they minister:—

Mothers' Meetings	50	80
Coal Club	38	150
Men's Night School	45	120
Boys' Night School	20	50

Sunday Bible Class (Women)	15	48
Sunday Bible Class (Elder Boys)	12	20
Sunday Bible Class (Younger Boys)	16	40
Sunday-school	120	240
Afternoon Meeting	20	50
Evening Meeting	370	700
Medical Missions on Patients	—	100

The bar and secular portion of the work show a profit. Over 500 abstainers pay 1d. per week regularly. We are much indebted to the Evangelisation Society for the generous supply of preachers on two Sundays per month, during the last two years. I have had to enlarge our Mission Hall, owing to the pressure for room and the numbers who had to be turned away; for this I would ask those of your readers whom the Master has made his stewards, for £200.—

Yours in Him, Frank Graves,

YOUNG GIRLS IN FRANCE.—An association of ladies has been formed in Lyons in connection with l' Union Internationale de la jeune Fille. It is proposed to send to every schoolmistress, without distinction, throughout France, an appeal drawing their attention to the danger to which young girls are exposed on leaving their village, without careful surveillance as to where they may be placed; 35,000 appeals have been printed, and are being sent out. This is the first step of the kind in France; let us hope it may awaken us to a greater sense of our individual responsibility in this respect, and to more vigilance on behalf of our young girls. M. EVANGELISING IN SPAIN.

ONE of the many devices of Rome to gain and retain her hold on the Spanish nation is by commanding the observance of saints' days, fiestas, as they are called. The amusements are, as a rule, innocent. Families exchange visits, dine in the olive woods or pleasure gardens, and follow up with music and dancing in large circles. Unhappily for this town and neighbourhood, the French from across the frontier have introduced dancing halls, so that now the people carry their festivities late into the night, instead of retiring early, as formerly.

On May 3 the great annual fair and fiesta of the Holy Cross took place. In response to our urgent appeal, the Trinitarian Bible Society had kindly sent us a grant of Gospels. Early in the morning thousands of people from distant towns and villages came into Figueras, looking very picturesque in their provincial costume. Owing to the disturbed state of the country, great numbers of soldiers and civil guards came pouring into the town, so we had a day of glorious opportunities. Pastor Rodriguez, aided by two or three schoolmasters, gave away thousands of Gospels to the passers-by, and were so alert that no one was allowed to escape without a book being offered. On one occasion a conveyance passed by, containing a portly priest and two women, his "Mayordomas," as they are called. Seeing the priest, Pastor Rodriguez only ventured to give one copy, which was at first accepted, but on reading the title-page, that "successor of the apostles" shouted out three times, with great emphasis, "To the fire! to the fire! to the fire!" and tore the precious little Gospel in pieces, which he scattered right and left, telling the people along the road to do the same. The command was, I am sorry to say, not altogether unheeded. The two women were equally bitter in their denunciations. Such cases were, however, quite exceptional. As a rule, the books were well received, and particularly by the soldiers. While the pastor and his helpers were hard at work at the entrance of the town, his brother, with one of the schoolmasters, were similarly engaged at the railway station, where they went in time to meet the excurs on trains and those by which fresh troops arrived.

Our hearts were greatly cheered the same day by the visits of two civil guards, who told us the joyful news that, through the reading of Gospels given to them last year, they had both been brought to Christ as their only Saviour. We heard from one of them that one night, when reading the "Pilgrim's Progress," his commanding officer asked him what he was perusing. "A new book of rules," was the reply. "How is it that you have received a copy and I have not? Show it to me. Oh, I see it is Protestant. While I am in command, I never wish to see one again. Do you understand?"

"But, sir, have I not been faithful for many years in the discharge of my duty? And while I continue so surely no man has a right to bind my conscience. Pardon me, sir, but I cannot give up my faith, if that is what you wish." "Very well, then, I will write to the Colonel, and get you dismissed; further, I command you not to speak of el Evangelio to any of the men." The sergeant received orders to caution the men on the subject, but the result was exactly the reverse of what the officer wished, for the curiosity of the men was so aroused that nothing but full explanation would satisfy them. Thus in the Spanish army we have two voluntary Scripture readers.

Sailors are equally laid upon our hearts, and we rejoice to be able to tell our friends in England that the Lord has given to us, after much praying, searching, and waiting, a suitable building just facing the landing-place in the port of Rosas, in which are now being carried on a day school, preaching of the Gospel on Sundays and Thursdays, a Sunday-school, and a Strangers' Rest. We have obtained permission from the Alcade to take Gospels, &c., to the vessels that, not paying dues, do not come ashore. We have, to save cost, bought a boat, which bears the name, understood in so many languages, el Evangelista (the Evangelist). Her first trip was to carry the "good news" to a large Italian steamer. We trust that many a sailor's heart may be won for Christ in Rosas. Gifts of Scriptures in various languages, also texts, will always be welcome.

Lying around Figueras are sixty-four villages. A good number have already been evangelised by the Mission, but there are others in which the Gospel has never yet been preached. This summer, instead of holding meetings in England on behalf of the Mission, we purpose spending it in Spain, and our special work will be evangelising. The roads in this part of Spain are bad in the extreme. When trudging along them we have often looked with longing eyes (at least we ladies have) at the peasant's little covered cart, and exclaimed, "What a boon one would be to us in our village work!" Maybe some wealthy servant of Christ, driving in his carriage and pair, would be willing to extend to his missionary brethren and sisters the comfort daily enjoyed by himself. How much time, as well as strength, might thus be saved! The price of a tartana, or covered cart, seating six persons, with a strong mule would be £40; and cost of keeping for one year £35. It may be suggested that the purchase should be made out of the Mission fund, but that is not possible, as we have just heard from England that there is such a small balance in hand that there is barely enough to meet the inevitable expenses of the next two months.

Reports and information regarding the Mission can be obtained on application to Colonel Baynes, 87, Elgin-crescent, Notting-hill, W., who will acknowledge any help sent on behalf of the Mission.

Evangelistic Work in Germany.

THE Mission in Branderoda, for which prayer was requested in your columns, is over, and has more and more convinced those engaged in it what an open door there is for the preaching of the simple Gospel throughout that whole district. Dr. Ziemann states that in his whole experience of two years in Germany he never met a people more spiritually dead, more ignorant of simple truths than here. The meetings held during the last week proved that if the Gospel were preached with living power those poor people could be reached.

Dr. Ziemann held meetings every night, to which the people came with eagerness, and listened with deep attention. It was gratifying to see even those faces, furrowed by care and hard work, lit up by the story of the love of God. Some came a long distance every night, and brought people from the surrounding villages. An impression was evidently made, and some touching testimonies of interest given at parting.

Dr. Ziemann, compelled to leave, parted with the deep conviction that if there is any place that cries for God-sent, earnest workers it is this district, with its many little towns and villages, hidden in remote parts of the country, far removed from the great thoroughfares of trade, unknown almost to anyone except the military officials, and so neglected by those who profess to feed the flock of God.

Impressed by the great need, and trusting in God, we have resolved to place here two evangelists, twin brothers, trained at Chrischona, near Bâle, gifted with fresh loving hearts and zeal for their Lord, which will give them ready entrance among the people. Besides holding meetings and visiting among the people, they will keep up the Sunday-school at Branderoda, which has already been started, and which is largely attended, even by children from distant villages; it is the only one in the whole district.

A. DE WELING.

THREE DAYS OF REST are regularly observed every week in Jerusalem. The Mussulman Sabbath, when all go to the mosques for prayer, is on Friday; the Jewish Sabbath, Saturday, which is observed with scrupulous zeal; and the Christian Lord's day, celebrated with more care than is often done in countries where the Christian religion is nominally predominant.—L'Evangéliste.

LIFE IN A LONDON INFIRMARY.

THE following account of life in a London Infirmary was given by a poor fallen girl who received blessing at Addison-road Hall, Kensington. Through the kindness of Christian friends she was received into a Home, and several times the worker, to whom God gave the joyful privilege of leading her to Jesus, was gladdened by seeing her bring others also (girls from the Home) into the inquiry-room, requesting that they, too, might be spoken with. F. R—— was ill, and so she is for a time in an infirmary, where there are at present forty patients, ranging in age from 18 to 83. From the infirmary, and at a worker's request, she has written the following:—

"Our mid-day meal is just over. The doctor and nurse are busily engaged opposite my bed completing an operation on the breast of a young woman who has been here since the birth of her baby, who died yesterday, aged fourteen weeks. I have felt much sympathy for her, as her husband, a young hearty man, who was out of employment at the time, was obliged to go into the workhouse with his three little ones.

"A written message handed in to the doctor caused him to leave his work, and hastily quit the ward, but a patient in a bed next the door caught his eye. He stopped for a minute to give one of the workers orders for a little brandy for her immediately. The order was promptly obeyed, but the poor sufferer, on its being held to her lips, refused it. The nurse went to her at once, and her words (she has a beautiful voice) came clear up the ward to me at the farthest corner: 'You must take it.' I suppose the poor thing still refused, for she added, 'Very well, then, I must report you.' The incident, common enough in a place of this kind, would have passed unheeded, but it came back to me so vividly the same evening, when nurse going her round with the medicines, found the poor creature dead. She had passed quietly away to 'report herself' to the Great Judge of all!

"Having never been in a place of this kind before, and only very lately brought myself, through God's mercy, to a knowledge of his redeeming love, I was much impressed. To die, as it were, alone, in the midst of so many, without one word of comfort or prayer, seemed so dreadful!

"The next evening, at exactly the same hour, a dear woman, whose slow, painful steps as she crawled, rather than walked, up the ward the day before, had called forth some unkind jest, fainted by her bedside, and breathed her last as soon as she was laid down. Again that night, between twelve and one, a sharp cry of pain awoke me out of a sound sleep. Another dear one, who had lingered here a great, but very patient sufferer for twelve long months, cried, 'Lord, have mercy on me!' and was gone!

"When I look at our day nurse's bright, kind, intelligent face, I cannot help thinking what a wonderful amount of power she holds over these poor suffering ones. Does she ever think, as she attends to their bodily ailments, of their precious souls? What opportunities she has of breathing a word of comfort if she were only a disciple of Christ. I often think if, before leaving the ward for the night, her sweet voice could be heard for a few moments breaking the silence, stealing softly through the semi-darkness, asking God's mercy on the suffering ones, leaving them to his all-wise care, how many a turbulent spirit would feel subdued; what a sweet calm would rest with the weary one, over whose bed the angel of death is hovering!

"Let us hope all our dear nurses may be led to think of this, that when called upon for their report at the last great day they may be found ready to give a good account of the treatment of the thousands of poor souls, as well as bodies, committed to their care. May God bless them, and give them bodily courage for their labours, but, above all, the courage to speak at all times for the Master."

Do ask prayer that we may be guided where and how to place the writer of these extracts. She says she is willing to do anything to gain an honest living, even to be a maid of all work.

SCOTTISH REMINISCENCES.

By GORDON FORLONG.

A GREAT TRACT DISTRIBUTOR.

TRACT distributors seldom receive the credit they deserve, while we who preach often get more credit than we deserve. Scotland owes a deep debt of gratitude to the early tract distributors. When some of us who began the work in Scotlond long ago were yet unconverted, I remember the human and superhuman efforts of one great tract distributor. Peter Drummond, of Stirling, was sowing tracts broadcast over Scotland at an extraordinary expense before one ripple of the great revival appeared.

I do not overlook the fact that the disruption of the Presbyterian Church had burst like a thunderstorm over Scotland some years before that. Hundreds of half-hearted preachers had sprung into vigorous spiritual life, and preached the "Headship" of Christ with power, and made the old gravestones of the old churches wake up. Poverty, joy, and blessing, went hand in hand then. No doubt Peter Drummond was a child of the Disruption, and took fire, perhaps, from McCheyne or one of his brethren. But that battle was in its very nature an ecclesiastical battle, and not so general as the later revival; but it ploughed and harrowed some of the land.

Peter Drummond gave tracts either for love or money—few in comparison bought them—but his fiery zeal found ways and means of scattering them over all Scotland. They appeared in every county. The minister might be willing or unwilling, but these arrows flew over his parish. Young ladies even in the English parishes used to write for Stirling tracts, and ladies in London circulated thousands of them. He must have expended an immense sum of money in printing and publishing, &c.

As to the character of the tracts, they exactly suited the then cold, dead state of Scotland. They were rousing tracts. No tract that I remember preached immediate rest and peace; they responded rather to the remark of an earnest Countess who wished for tracts. Some one gave to her a packet, saying, "They make the way of peace so very clear." "Peace!" said her Ladyship, "why the whole parish is full of peace already; there is not an anxious soul all round. Take away your tracts, and give me first some that will drive this false peace away."

Our Lord, when preaching upon hard, dead soil, once concluded an address thus: "How shall ye escape the damnation of hell?" and He left them with that word. Peter Drummond's tracts ploughed the whole land, and prepared men's minds to look at sin and judgment. When the Lord called me into the field in 1856, Mr. Drummond's labours yielded great fruit.

A GREAT EVANGELIST.

Brownlow North next year came forth to the work; he had exactly the same style of preaching as Drummond's tracts, only more vigorous. His style was rousing and awakening. He had not, as he told me himself, any assurance whatever of his salvation at first. He never preached a clear Gospel that year, and when we preached together I always spoke last in order to give the Gospel. A very intelligent person called to ask him how he could know he was saved. "Know," he said, "know; how can I tell you that? I suppose I ought to know, but I do not; let us sit down and look over the Bible at once." But his legal, awakening testimony exactly suited the public disease.

I took Brownlow North from his home near Elgin southward, and my friend, Mr. Macdonald, who was abroad at the time, kindly offered to me Rossie Castle, near Montrose, as our head-quarters.

We were compelled to preach very loudly and very strenuously, and crowds arose on all hands; not fewer, perhaps, than 200 churches sent to us preaching invitations, ministers sometimes, but oftener the congregations, and we were obliged to separate for work.

Faith was in these days our lever power. I will illustrate that by one circumstance that happened. A godly minister joined us at Forfar, and we asked him to preach and help. He was enthusiastic and zealous, but he said, "As to Forfar I know it well, you must not expect any fruit or good in Forfar." I turned to Brownlow North when he uttered these words, and said, "I really would not like Mr. —— to speak without faith." "Certainly not," said Mr. North; "we cannot let you witness here."

A "MAD" CONVERT.

As illustrating the dead state of the country at that time, let me give some particulars about an early convert. She lived with a sister and mother at the time of her conversion, and as she visited all her neighbours, urging them to think of their souls' welfare, the people in the street agreed with the mother and sister that Mary Ann must be deranged. They asked the opinion of two medical men, who easily agreed to give an order for her being removed to the asylum, and the day was fixed.

Her sister told me that she could not sleep that night; in the morning she said to her mother privately, "Mother, I have been wondering whether WE are mad, or Mary?" "Just what I have been thinking," was her mother's answer. "If Mary is right, WE are mad, and really the Bible is on Mary's side; all the curious things she says are written there. Let us put it off, she must not be carried away to-day."

In a week or so the sister was converted,—then the mother. A year or two after, Mary asked me to the house, and said, "Every one present in this full room is a relation of ours, and all are converted except one."

Tract distributors! who cannot speak a word, let me again urge you to go on distributing. A minister told me once that he was converted through a tract I threw out of a coach window at his feet as we passed the bridge of Ellon. Scatter broadcast, and in faith, with much prayer and great "hope," remembering our God is "the God of Hope."

Orphans in Nazareth.

WILL you find space in your well-known paper for a subject that should be brought before English and American Christians respecting Nazareth, the city of our Lord? Many of your readers have seen or heard of the large English Orphanage there, under the auspices of the Female Education in the East Society, where 100 girls are trained in the Protestant religion. These girls are betrothed when very young by their relations. The question comes, "To whom?" There is no Boys' Orphanage, though the land is bought, and money forthcoming, waiting for some one to take up this great work. Therefore, as Protestantism is at a very low ebb here, these girls have to marry Greeks or Latins, and go back to their old native life, and follow their husbands.

The Roman Catholics, who are fully alive to this, and are gaining great power, are building a large Hospital and Boys' Orphanage very near the Girls' Orphanage. What will be the result? Simply this: the English Christian Orphanage will be training the girls to become the wives of these Latins. Will Christian England allow this without an effort on her part? There never was a greater opening than now for workers. The people are willing to listen. Miss Lee, who is carrying on single-handed a large day school and mothers' meetings, could greatly enlarge the work if she had help. Miss Dixon, who has laboured for thirty years in the land—for the last ten in Nazareth—is so broken down in health that she is obliged to return to England. Will no one come to the aid of the Lord's work at such a time? Must the Orphanage be closed, and the Lord's enemies triumph? Mr. Huber, the German clergyman of the C.M.S., will give any information regarding the Boys' Orphanage. He holds the land, and many have offered to come forth liberally with money. I am sure Miss Webb, of the Society for Promoting Female Education in the East, 267, Vauxhall Bridge-road, S.W., would be glad to hear of anyone fitted for their work in the Orphanage.

May 6.

A Summer Day.

OH, the radiant light and sweetness
Of a sunny summer day!
How the calm of its completeness
Rests us on our homeward way!

When the snowy cloudlets shimmer
'Neath a field of purest blue,
And the smiling sunbeams glimmer
Over flow'rets crowned with dew;

When the birds' songs, rife with gladness,
Through the whispering tree-tops ring,
And no shade of care or sadness
Mingles with the song they sing;

When the quiv'ring emerald grasses
Bending, own the breeze's sway,
As with royal step it passes
O'er the meadows green and gay;

When with dimple and with chatter
Sunny brooklets foam along,
And the music of their clatter
Mingles with the sweet bird's song;

When with crimson-tippèd fingers
Summer paints the flow'rets fair,
And their sweet breath's fragrance lingers
On the scented, sunlit air;

When the waving branches quiver,
Bowing to the breezes free,
Bending low to kiss the river
As it hastens to the sea;

When sweet nature's silent ringing
Flushes o'er the joy-filled air,
And the radiance of its ringing
Flings its music everywhere—

Then I feel, with spirit rested,
Trouble hushed and pulses stilled,
That the words are true and tested—
"Earth is with God's goodness filled."

Mr. Radcliffe In Finland.

MANY of our readers, like ourselves, will be rejoiced to hear of the continued blessing that attends the labours of our much-esteemed brother and his wife and daughter in the Far North. In a recent private letter to Mr. R. Burn, of Aldersgate-street, from which we are privileged to quote, Mr. Radcliffe says:—

"The Lord has answered the prayers of Christian friends at Aldersgate-street in sending to me for the Finns an excellent interpreter. The night after he arrived (Tuesday) he was with me in the Factory Church at Tammerfors, and so every night till Sunday. On Sunday afternoon we had to move out to the great parish church, and the multitude surged into it. At the close of the evening service we urged only those who wished to speak to us, to follow us about a quarter of a mile to the Factory Church. The number was so great that with no workers and only one interpreter we could do nothing but speak to them all together. There were some precious liberations, and we tore ourselves away to come to this place (Tevastehus).

"This is the third place from which, by other arrangements, we have been torn from the crowds and an awakened people. How glorious it would be for some who are skilled in dealing with anxious souls to follow quickly after our flying visits. This people came out at a stroke for Roman Catholicism at their Reformation. The Lutheran pastors have been so kind in opening their churches to me. I wish the friends at Aldersgate-street would pray about what I say—that many Christian brothers and sisters might come in the summer to look for the awakened souls."

UNION IN HALIFAX.—Writing with respect to the movement for uniting the various evangelical bodies in Italy, a correspondent says: "If ever there was a time when union among the different evangelic churches in Italy was to be wished for, it is certainly at present, when the Jesuits are going from town to town in bands of fifteen persons, trying to excite the people and draw them to their false doctrines and abominable idolatry."

PORT SAID UNDER THE ENGLISH.

A VERY interesting communication on this subject appeared lately in The Methodist Recorder, from the pen of a correspondent. We make some extracts:—

"The first thing that strikes a stranger in landing is the number of nationalities you meet with. Here you have Egyptians, Turks, Arabs, Nubians, Abyssinians, French, English, Italians, Maltese, and Greeks. Perhaps the Arabs are the most striking and interesting, as they are certainly by far the most numerous section of the population. With all their vices, which, alas! are not peculiar to them as a people, the Arabs are a light-hearted, harmless, and withal a brave, and—when occasion arises—a hard-working race. They are very nimble and speedy at whatever they take in hand, and it is quite a sight to watch them when they are on board ship discharging coal or other cargo. They go at their work as if it was a matter of pure enjoyment, and accompany it with a kind of chanting Ah-ah-ah, generally consisting of two notes, which breaks and swells on the air with a not unpleasant effect. I have never, in all my life, been more struck with the value and function of music, especially in connection with work. One would think that nothing could throw an air of agreeableness over some of their occupations, such as unloading the ebon-coloured combustible which comes from the mines of Wales or Wallsend. See them broiling under an African sky, at times almost lost to view in clouds of coal-dust. However, they have set their work to music, and their wild barbaric shout, as the contents of the baskets are shot into the lighter below with almost bewildering rapidity, does tend to brighten and ameliorate their grimy toils. Something, too, of pleasure is felt in watching the light and graceful movements of these children of the desert.

"The facility which these people possess for picking up language is remarkable. Conversing with a young Arab who spoke English quite fluently, I remarked, 'I suppose you speak French, too?' 'Oh, yes,' he replied, with a smile, as if that were nothing. 'And any other language?' 'Yes, Italian and Greek too.' I have been informed that it is quite a common thing for these bright young Africans who are employed, or who seek employment in various ways about the harbour, to speak four or five languages. Surely there is a future before this versatile and attractive race. They are now only a rabble, degraded, despised, yet surely something of the old spirit still survives, and their indomitable courage in the recent battle was not unworthy even of the golden age of Saladin and his Saracen chivalry. It is sad to think that their morals, which are low enough, are not improved by contact with Europeans.

"At the Roman Catholic chapel there is a series of services on the Lord's-day in the language of the various nationalities. There is only one English service in Port Said, and that is the service of the Church of England, which is held in the storeroom of the Dutch Palace—formerly an hotel, but now converted into a barracks for our troops. Thither I repaired last Sunday morning, but on arriving at the palace was informed there would be no service. It appeared that the chaplain who usually officiates was at Suez, where he preaches once a month, and that in his absence the churchwarden reads the prayers. Unfortunately, however, the caretaker had gone away for the day, taking with him the key of the room in which all the prayer-books and hymn-books were kept, 'so that there could not be any service.' I expressed my disappointment to the Major, who was very courteous, and ventured to make one or two suggestions, but there was no help for it, and the little assembly dispersed.

"Only one hundred and fifty miles eastward lies the Holy City, Jerusalem! What are a hundred and fifty miles in England? Only a matter of four or five hours. But here how different! and it is a matter for regret that my arrangements will not enable me to visit the most sacred spot on earth. What names rise around me here! What haunting memories! Egypt, Palestine, Syria! Their glory has set—the night has fallen upon them. But surely a moral day is yet to dawn on this, the land of the rising sun. Is England here to wake these nations from their long slumber? Who can tell? How they will rejoice in the cheering light of the morning, and set their banners again flying in the wind, but the ensigns shall not be of Syria, or Egypt, or Judah, or any earthly kingdom, but of Christ."

In THE CHRISTIAN of March 6 mention was made of the Church and Hospital at Port Said, and it was stated that although £1400 is in hand, not a stone is yet laid. We are requested to say, in explanation, that the title deeds had to be obtained before any building could be commenced. Sir Evelyn Baring thought that the hospital-funds should not be commenced until £4000 were in hand. The title deeds have now been obtained, the land has been apportioned by the committee, and contributions for the church and hospital will be gladly received at the Anglo Egyptian Banking Company's Office, St. Clement's-lane, Lombard-street, London. The condition of the sailors in the Egyptian Hospital is so miserable that a properly-conducted British hospital is greatly needed. Lady Strangford has most kindly sent hospital furniture, &c., ready for use; this is stored in the Government buildings, and all that is now needed is the funds to build with and a doctor and nurses.

Gospel Temperance in the East End.

THE Blue Ribbon Gospel Temperance Mission, so well known throughout the East-end of London, under the management of Mr. William Noble, is now in the full swing of its summer work. There are processions every Saturday evening through the streets and slums of the crowded East-end, attended by banners and bands of the different Temperance Associations connected with the work, and a choir. Whenever a halt is made, hymns are sung for the benefit of those who from curiosity join the procession or lounge out of their windows and doors to see what is being done. A congregation, so to speak, having been thus collected, active canvassers of both sexes go round among its members and try to persuade them to sign the pledge. Whoever does so receives a card, and is at once invested with the blue ribbon, which is to mark him henceforth as a "teetotaller." The procession on a recent Saturday started from the Mission-hall in Hoxton-street, and thence made its way down various streets through Bethnal Green and Whitechapel. During the whole of the march, which lasted nearly two hours, the canvassing for pledges was earnestly but unobtrusively carried on, and with fairly good results. Not once in the march was a rude word or action used towards any member of the procession, and Mr. Noble avers that such has never been the case.

We were glad to find that representatives from Amsterdam and Switzerland, who had come over for the May meetings, paid a visit to the hall to see and hear for themselves, so as to adopt Missions abroad on similar lines. Friends at home might do the same with advantage to themselves and their churches.

LONDON TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL.—The annual meeting of this institution was held in Exeter Hall on Tuesday week, when the chair was occupied by Mr. B. Whitworth, M.P. The report of the board of management, an abstract of which was presented by the honorary secretary, Dr. Dawson Burns, stated that during the last year the in-patients had been 513, an increase of 25 per cent., and the out-patients 3333, an increase of 50 per cent. on the year preceding. The new wing, of which the foundation-stone was laid April 24 by the Duke of Westminster, would more than double the accommodation for in-patients. The medical staff had reported satisfactorily on the results of the treatment pursued, which in every case but one had been without the administration of alcohol. In the exceptional case the patient died. In a total of fifty-three typhoid cases admitted, all treated without alcohol, the deaths had been but five.

Slavery in Kaffirland.

AT the late annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society in Exeter Hall, Hon. F. W. Garland, a member of the Legislative and Executive Council of Natal, gave a vivid description of the condition of the native peoples in Kaffirland. He said:—

The two great evils under which the people groan and are burdened are superstition and polygamy. As to superstition, they have doctors to make the rain, and doctors to ward off the evils of lightning; they have medicine doctors, and witch doctors.

Another evil is that of polygamy. What does Kaffir polygamy mean? It means the sale of girls; it means trade in women. A Kaffir the other day had become bankrupt, and amongst his assets there was one entry of a girl worth £50. That was in Natal. To-day the law of the land fixes the number of cattle that a man is to be paid for a girl. The law of the Legislature of Natal, the law of the British Empire, states that ten head of cattle for a common man shall be the limit demanded by a father for selling his girl. If it is a chief who takes the girl there is no limit to the number of cattle to be paid. What is the result? Old men of course become the wealthiest. Old men who have the largest number of wives and the most girls to sell can get the most cattle; they can compete successfully with the young men who have only a small number of cattle. The evils of polygamy are thus shown in the terrible suffering inflicted upon the women who are sold. A father barters his daughter; he sells her and she knows nothing of the matter; it is only a transaction between the man who purchases and the man who sells.

The Legislature of Natal has interfered, and there is a law by which the people are compelled to have official witnesses certifying that the girl is willing to take the man to whom she is to be married. But what is the result? Only a week or two before I left Natal a missionary on the American Board, with whom I have been very friendly for the last thirty-four years, came to my home, and I saw that he was very much dejected. I asked him what was the matter.

"Ah," said he, "we have had a terrible trouble in our station the last few days. We had a nice, intelligent girl, and the father has been seeking for a long time to marry her to an old man, because he knew he would get more cattle than he would get by a certain young man that the girl loved. She refused entirely to have the old man, but at last, being continually worried and persecuted, she consented. She said there would be no peace for her unless she let her father have his way, and so she yielded. The marriage festivities began, but at a certain point in the festival the girl was absent, and could not be found, and the marriage assembly had to disperse. Presently they found the girl in a wood hanging by a monkey rope, as it is called—a rope made of grass, so strong that it will bear any strain. The poor girl, rather than be married to the old man, hung herself in this way."

Kaffir polygamy, as we have it in Natal, can only be called by one name—woman slavery—for that is what it means; and I am sorry to feel that the flag of England waves over any country that will not only consent to but will legislate to regulate the traffic in girls.

REV. W. H. HASLAM has been holding evangelistic services in Waterford, in connection with the Irish Church. The evening services were always numerously attended, and the deepest interest appeared to be manifested in the addresses. One day the Mission services were held in Tramore, instead of in Waterford. Mrs. Haslam also usually held an afternoon meeting for women. The "Moody and Sankey" choir, to the number of about 120, led the singing each evening. The preacher, in plain, simple language, but with marked earnestness, sought to lay before his hearers the fundamental principles of the Gospel.

Obituary.

MRS. RAWLINSON, CHOWBENT.

WITH great sorrow we note the death, after a long and painful illness, of Mrs. Elizabeth Rawlinson, of Chowb nt, Lancashire. She was for many years a most devoted and self-denying worker amongst the poor of her own town and neighbourhood. She had worn herself out in doing good. Her husband, Mr. James Rawlinson, has for some time made his business secondary to his efforts on behalf of the poor and needy, and he has lost a most efficient helper in the decease—or rather, the happy release—of his beloved wife from the painful disease (cancer) which closed her loving and beneficent life.

SIR BARTLE FRERE.

Our readers will regret to hear of the death of this Christian philanthropist and statesman, which happened on Thursday last, after a lingering illness. In the early days of his public career he did noble service in connection with the abolition of the African slave traffic. His policy with regard to the treatment of the Zulus during the late administration was disapproved by a large portion of his fellow-countrymen; but friends and critics alike will join in paying a tribute to his memory, for many services rendered to the cause of Christ and of humanity.

The Power of a Tract.

BY REV. J. OSSIAN DAVIES,

At Religious Tract Society Annual Meeting.

THE statistics of heaven will amaze us with the grandeur of the results of this society. Audacious tract! It stands before the hoary temples of India like Carey before it, and fearlessly claims them for Jesus. Catholic tract! Unlike other preachers, it clings not to the shibboleth of a sect, but preaches a full and free Gospel.

Soul-transforming tract! It will reclaim the outcasts of London, and will make them sons and daughters of the living God, and will in due time turn "The Bitter Cry of Outcast London" into "The joyful anthem of London redeemed." All-inviting tract! Like its Christ, it speaks to the poor harlot, that Jezebel of the night, until she becomes ready to wash her Saviour's feet with her tears and wipe them with her hair.

Ubiquitous tract! It enters the theatre and the Mission-hall, the sailors' society and the soldiers' home, the hop-pickers' camp, and the workhouse; it travels with lumbermen into the back woods of Canada, and goes down to the Derby races—even there to attack Satan in his stronghold. Humble tract! Without noise it goes down to the filthy hovels of London; no den is too foul for it, no man is too depraved for it; it passes not by the poor kerbstone trader or befouled gutter-boy, but speaks to them of a cleansing blood with a silence that is Divine.

Adventurous tract! It penetrates the snows of Greenland, the steppes of Central Asia, and the burning sands of the tropics, and tells the manacled sons of Ethiopia of the glorious liberty of the children of God. On the stormy seas of the North it sows the seed whose harvest shall be seen when the sea gives up its dead. Fearless tract! It penetrates the gory battlefield, and amid the hail of war and the prancings of the war-horse Death, it cheers the heart of the dying soldier, and surrounds his blood-stained couch with a cohort of angels ready to bear him heavenward. Like the angel in the book of Revelation, this society plants one foot upon the sea and the other foot upon the land, and its voice rings like a clarion through the continents.

No single tract shall return void to the great God. All that is true in the simplest tract must accomplish its mission, for the Divine Economist cannot afford to waste a grain of what is good, and true, and beautiful.

The Fruits of Foreign Missions.

IN his address at the recent annual meeting of the London Missionary Society, Rev. Wardlaw Thompson, secretary of the Society, who has lately returned from a long missionary tour, said:—

"I may be asked, 'What is your impression of this mission work? Do you think there is real and substantial work being done?' I am thankful to testify emphatically, and without hesitation, that mission work, as I have seen it, is a great and growing success. On my travels I have had to listen to a lot of adverse criticism on mission work. People got to know that I was a secretary of a missionary society on my travels, and acted the part of the candid friend. I was told in India and China that heathen servants were always better than those professing to be Christians, and in South Africa that Christianity spoiled the niggers.

"I am quite prepared to admit that there is some truth in the statements which have been made to me in regard to those who have professed themselves to be converts of missions. It is quite true that numbers of those who come under Christian teaching just have enough to be utterly conceited and spoiled; it is quite true also that some of those who profess to be converts present a very different outward appearance to the missionary to that which they present to the world at large; but I have observed, even in England, that there are gentlemen who, in the presence of a clergyman or a lady, are very different beings from what they are elsewhere, and it must be remembered that a large number of those who are under Christian instruction, and go forth from the mission station, and make use of their connection with those stations in order to gain credit with others, are really not Christians at heart. I have seen statements about the number of erstwhile Sunday-school children in prison which have shocked me, and I am not surprised to find that among converts from heathenism, there are a large number who are not worthy of the teaching they have received. Of course all these people go out into the world, and they give a bad impression of mission work to the Europeans with whom they come in contact.

"But I would say further, that much of the criticism I have heard is due to the thoughtless and unreasonable estimate of the results to be expected from Christianity. Old habits, old associations, are not to be shaken off in a day; national failings cannot be outgrown in a generation, and yet I have heard men speak as if they expected a convert from heathenism—sometimes a man who has been dragged out of the horrible pit and the miry clay of savagedom—to exhibit all the virtues of a long established Christian life. It is unreasonable. I have been content to find out the peculiar failings of the people in each district of the country to which I have gone, and then to compare as well as I could the Christian and the heathen, and I say with all emphasis that I found it universally true that the Gospel is the power of God unto the salvation of every one that believes: that there is a marked improvement in the habits and the characters of those who come under the influence of the Gospel of Christ, and that there are very many rescued from heathenism who are adorning the Christian profession by a consistent Christian life."

SAILORS IN SWEDEN.—Our Sailors' Home in Halmstad, Sweden, is now opened. Many prayers have been offered and heard. God has already blessed us abundantly at the meetings which are held in the Home. We hope that six sailors have been converted, and a number are seeking salvation. I am greatly thankful for the tracts and money which have already been given. May I ask for your readers' interest and prayers?

FR. ENGELKE.

Evangelistic Notes.

MARSH GIBBON, OXON.—Mr. J. Harris has been holding a sixteen days' Mission here, which has been richly blessed in the conversion of souls. His addresses were earnest and loving, and listened to by hundreds of persons.

VILLAGE WORK IN PONTYMOILE.—I am pleased to be able to report continued blessing upon our labours. Our open-air work is most encouraging, as in the neighbouring villages we get audiences of from three to four hundred people, which is marvellous for small villages. T. M. W.

TAUNTON.—Messrs. Mateer and Parker, two of Mr. Spurgeon's evangelists, have held a very successful fortnight's Mission in the Silver-street Baptist Chapel of this town. The attendance was very good, though not so large as in some other places where these brethren have laboured. The earnest Gospel addresses of Mr. Mateer and the very effective singing of his companion produced a deep impression on many minds; while about fifty persons, mostly from among the young, have already been led to avow themselves on the Lord's side.

MR. H. THORNE.—On Sunday, May 18, and following days, Mr. Henry Thorne conducted Mission services at Whitehaven. Through the Lord's blessing on his earnest preaching of the Gospel several were aroused to seek the Saviour. On the Friday evening he met with the members of the Y.M.C.A. (commenced through his instrumentality eight months ago), and gave an address full of wise suggestions with reference to the work of the Association. Mr. Thorne also spoke at a Gospel service at Maryport, on Wednesday, May 21, at the close of which he had the joy of conversing with many inquirers. G. H.

THEATRE ROYAL, IPSWICH.—A series of Gospel meetings have been held in this building with very encouraging results. Addresses were delivered by Mr. W. Rainer, Mr. Roberts, and others, the singing being led by a choir of fifty voices. They were well attended, and the after-meetings have been greatly blessed to many. On the second Sunday evening the building was crowded and great interest prevailed. The proprietor, who was present, kindly sent word that he would lend the theatre the following Sunday free of charge.

R. PENNY.

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Friday Morning, May 30, 1884.

* Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O.O.'s payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

* Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. In consequence of the Whit Monday holiday our Donation List is made up to Friday morning, May 30.

"They beckoned unto their partners."

Dear Fellow-workers,

The peculiar anxieties realised in the conduct of this work during the past eleven weeks have been such that I feel I must no longer conceal the recital of them from the large body of loving sympathisers who all over the world are, I know, praying for the rescued children under my care.

Our financial year ended on the 31st March, and up to the 15th day of that month the donations fairly kept pace with our needs, while the sum total for the whole financial year had been a remarkably good one, evincing a steady and growing interest on the part of the Church generally. But from the 15th March, a steady and serious falling-off has taken place daily.

To illustrate the extent and nature of this it is perhaps only needful to say that for many days, and almost weeks together, only so much has been received as would supply, at the most, one meal per day for my large family; thus to give, say, dinner only, to nearly 1,300, including adult helpers as well as children, in the different "Homes," at least £20 per day is necessary. Often our total daily receipts have been but £15 or £18.

But besides dinner other two meals must be provided daily, with clothing, education, salaries, rents, &c. Moreover, numbers of fresh children apply in the most destitute condition each week, whom we dare not turn away.

Thus of necessity a large daily deficit has occurred, which, multiplied by 77, the number of days in the 11 weeks since the deficit began, means a burden of no small weight, and one which is daily growing larger.

In such a crisis, trying as it may be, I can thankfully say my trust is only in the Lord God. His faithfulness and goodness in the past forbid the thought arising that all will not be well that He sends, whether poverty or sufficiency. So day by day our case is spread before Him, and I know from blessed experience, He hears and will answer such prayer.

To-day, however, I am reminded that I have not done all that I possibly could do,—that I have not yet with sufficient clearness stated to those who have been my co-workers for years, and who have a right to know the present trial of faith through which we are passing, the needs of the "Homes" under my care.

Hence this letter, which I only hesitate to send lest any should for one moment suppose the recital of my case in this form argued a failure of confidence in Him Who has fed and clothed my Little Ones these many years until now.

But this is not so—blessed be His name!

I know full well, as I have said, by happy experience that such trial of faith often means but a loving invitation to more complete and unreserved dependence on His strong arm, and I doubt not that in due season "the Lord will turn again our captivity as the streams in the south; then shall our mouth be filled with laughter, and our tongue with singing."

Faithfully yours in Christ's service among the children of our streets,

THOMAS J. BARNARDO.

18 to 26, Stepney Causeway, London, E.

P.S.—To those who may possibly hear in the foregoing the voice of The Master calling them to a neglected ministry of mercy towards the Little Ones, I would add that all communications should be addressed to our Treasurer, Wm. Fowler, Esq., M.P., or to me as above.

Notices of Books, &c.

We are informed that an English edition of the Life of the late Bishop Gobat will be published by Messrs. J. Nisbet & Co. in the autumn.

Almost too Late. By Helen C. Garland. 2s. Religious Tract Society. A very pretty story, with an excellent moral. It gives a pleasing account of a young girl's life before and after conversion, showing how a very real change was produced, but not without an emphatic warning.

The Sheet Anchor; or Philip Colville's Holdfast. By Mary Inman. 2s. 6d. Partridge & Co. This is a good story for boys, who will do well to form their actions by the principles enunciated. The whole turns upon a capital motto founded on Hebrews vi. 19: "Which hope we have as an anchor of the soul both sure and steadfast."

The work entitled My Bible, which Canon Boyd Carpenter, Bishop-designate of Ripon, recently contributed to the "Heart Chords" series (Cassell & Co.), has already passed into a second edition, while the same author's "Commentary on the Revelation," contributed to Bishop Ellicott's Bible Commentary, which has been reprinted in a separate volume, is now in its third edition.

Heart Fellowship with Christ. By Rev. W. Poole Balfern. 3s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. This book contains some very profitable meditations, based upon the various relationships which Christ bears to the believer. Each meditation is followed by a prayer, and these are arranged for the Sundays of the year. They are well calculated to impart spiritual help and benefit to thoughful readers.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have issued Part I. of a revised edition of Dr. R. Brown's graphic and popular description of The Countries of the World (7d.), illustrated. With it is presented a capital map of the world, surrounded by geographical and other information of a most useful character. Part I. of a re-issue of Butterflies and Moths (7d.) will also be gladly welcomed. The exhaustive and altogether excellent Encyclopædic Dictionary (1s.) has reached it fifth part.

Joyful through Hope. By Blanche A. L. Garvock. Seeley, Jackson & Halliday. Hope, the heroine of this tale, is a fair vision of a model clergyman's wife. Having experienced many family troubles and the poverty too often inseparable from such a lot, she could still say to her husband, "God has never, never failed us in any way; and though we still pray it, I think we may say as a fact—mayn't we?—that 'the God of hope has filled us with all joy and peace in believing'"? The glimpse into the deaconness's life which was her early labour of love is well worth the perusal of our girl readers.

In the Light: Memorials of Elizabeth Phœbe Seeley. Seeley & Co. A touching record of one of whom it may truly be said, "She hath done what she could." She did not aspire to great deeds—the gift of a cup of cold water satisfying her ambition—but her arduous work in the British schools in Syria was undertaken and accomplished with that Christ-like simplicity which characterised her whole life. This memorial, written by her sister, presents many features which an ordinary biographer would have left unnoticed, but which add to the interest of the book. The original poems also give an insight into the spiritual life of the subject of this interesting memoir.

Mission and other Appeals.

Ragged School, Pontymoile.—Persons acquainted with this locality will acknowledge the good which this agency has done during the past few years. The funds are now exhausted, and co-operation is invited by Mr. T. J. Wintle at the above address.

A Home for Gentlewomen of limited means has for some years been carried on in the West-end, which has afforded recreation and rest for many weary and overburdened ladies. A debt of £166 is now, however, overhanging the institution, for the removal of which help is earnestly solicited by Miss Strongi'th'arm, 19, Sutherland-gardens, Harrow-road, W.

Blair-street Mission Hall, Poplar, E.—Help is much needed to carry on the many branches of work in connection with this Mission among dock labourers, railway men, police, &c. The hall is situated in a densely-populated neighbourhood, near the East, West, South, and Milwall Docks. The secretary is Mr. George Fuller, 34, Cawdor-street, St. Leonard's-road, Poplar, London, E.

Buckhurst-hill.—An earnest appeal is made to your readers for funds to assist in carrying on a good Gospel work at Prince's Hall, Buckhurst-hill, amongst the very poor of the district. A very real work has been carried on for the past ten years. The freehold and building have been purchased, and extensive alterations and additions have been made to meet the requirements of the neighbourhood.—Charles Fuller, Queen's-road, Buckhurst-hill, E.

Sharnbrook, near Bedford.—It is proposed to build a hall in this village for evangelistic, temperance, and other meetings. The only place available for these purposes is a small room, formerly a loft, capable of seating about ninety persons, and wholly inadequate for the needs of the place. The people are anxious to do what they can, but the small contributions they are able to make will not go far towards supplying the necessary funds. Further information can be obtained from Mr. L. G. Stileman-Gibbard, Sharnbrook House, Bedford.

CONVALESCENT HOME FOR BOYS AND GIRLS.—The annual meeting of the supporters of this Home, in connection with Latymer-road Mission, was held last week at the Mansion House, the Bishop of Bedford in the chair. The Home was opened at Broadwater, Worthing, in May, 1882, in order to give children, whose constitutions had been enfeebled by sickness or want, a chance of life and health by enabling them to enjoy for a few weeks the benefits of sea air and bathing, good food, and watchful care. The Broadwater establishment accommodates only twenty-two children—too few for the ever-increasing exigencies of the work—and it has therefore been decided to retain it for the use of girls, and to take a suitable cottage for boys in some healthy place away from Worthing. The report, read by Mr. Aulay Macaulay, hon. secretary, stated that the committee had decided to extend the area of admission, and were now prepared to receive children from any part of London, or even the country, and they were also thankful to report that no infectious disease had ever appeared in the Home.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION IN PARIS.—A meeting was held last week in the reception saloon of the Mansion House, in aid of Miss de Broen's Belleville Mission in the Rue Clavel, Paris. The Lord Mayor, having briefly opened the business of the gathering, vacated the chair in favour of Mr. J. H. Fordham. From a statement circulated in the room, signed by the Earl of Shaftesbury, it was shown that there were few institutions in France or England more heartily deserving public and liberal support than this Belleville Mission, founded and conducted by Miss de Broen. The Mission consists of services in the iron room, medical attendance, orphanage, day, night, and Sunday-schools, household visitation, sewing-classes for destitute women, sale of Bibles, Testaments, and Gospels, tract distribution, study of the Bible, prayer-meetings, &c. The permanent agency consists of doctor, dispenser, evangelists, schoolmistress, matron of orphanage, ladies assisting, and occasional helpers. The expenses are about £2,000 yearly, for which there is no fund. A very interesting account of her work having been given by Miss de Broen, who made an earnest appeal for assistance to enable her to continue it, an address was delivered by Miss Kerr in further illustration of the good which is being done. Lord Shaftesbury, from personal observation, testified to the worth of the Mission, and to its claims upon the attention of a benevolent public.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

THE ANCHORAGE HOUSE, Regent's Park, N.W. THE MISSION HALL, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster.

Committee—GEORGE HANBURY, Esq.; Rev. H. E. FOX; Colonel STUART WORTLEY.

GOSPEL MISSION AND PREVENTIVE WORK.

In addition to the Sunday and Week-day Services, Sunday Schools, Mothers' Meetings, &c., in the Mission Hall, Classes are now held for the instruction of young girls of various ages in the truths of the Gospel, and for teaching them sewing, cutting out, mending, and other such things as may be useful to them in their various positions in life.

Bible Classes for domestic servants, young women in houses of business, and others, are being arranged. All classes are conducted by Ladies.

RESCUE WORK.

The Anchorage House meets a great and acknowledged want, in sheltering respectable young women who have been led astray. Many and many a poor creature, now sunk in the sinful life of our great cities, might have been saved had such an opportunity come before her in the early days of her sin.

Special Mission Services are held from time to time for women living in sin.

The whole work of the Mission is directed towards producing a clear and definite change of heart, through simple belief and trust in the Atoning Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. The work accomplished during past years shows that the blessing of GOD rests on what is done with that view only.

The expenses are necessarily heavy, and an earnest appeal for assistance is made to those who sympathise with work carried on on the lines indicated above. No debt will be incurred, and the work done can therefore only be in accordance with the funds sent in from outside sources, in aid of that found by the Members of the Committee and their friends.

Papers, containing a full account of the work of the Anchorage Mission, including suggestions as to the way found wisest by experience to overcome certain difficulties found in dealing with young women about to become mothers, and rules for admission to the Anchorage House, will be sent on application by letter (not post-cards), to MRS. H. STUART WORTLEY, President of the Ladies' Committee, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W., to whom, to any Member of Committee, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, subscriptions, which are much wanted now, may be sent.

Or, The Profit and Pleasure of Bible Study.

By GEORGE F. PENTECOST, M.A.

With Introductions by Rev. JOSEPH COOK and Rev. J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

"The Author is well known in this country, as well as in America, as an able and successful evangelist and preacher. The book is the well-arranged product of a fresh and vigorous mind; steeped in biblical thought and spirit: and is fitted in no ordinary measure to give clear views of the scope and purpose of the Bible; to confirm faith in its Divine origin and authority; and to guide to such a use of it as may build up the reader, both in holiness and comfort, and in zeal and usefulness, unto Eternal Life. While admirably fitted for young converts, no Christian can read it without both stimulus and profit."—The Outlook, Feb. 1, 1884.

TENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

ANOTHER CASE (THIRD) REPORTED by MR. C. CLARKE, STEAM PRINTING WORKS, HAYWARD'S HEATH, Sussex.

[Two cases were given (reported by Mr. C.) last week.]

Mr. Clarke writes as follows:—"MR. JOHN CHEALE, of BURGESS HILL, was given up in the winter of 1883 as an incurable case of consumption. I advised him to adopt your treatment, and he has been restored to health and strength."

Disease commenced with "severe cold, pains in the back and shoulders, phlegm mixed with blood. Then cough became violent, causing the rupture of a vessel. Profuse green expectoration followed, and often was mixed with blood. Breathing difficult, night sweats came on, distressing palpitation, loss of flesh over all the body. Two doctors reported the right lung much diseased, the left also affected." (Ordered medicine three times a day with honey and lemon-juice, cod-liver oil if found to digest well, sponging, and use of liniment.)

In one month there was much improvement; "cough much better, comfortable nights, able to walk about." In another two months the patient was "able to go to work."

Considering the state of this patient when commencing my treatment, the recovery was remarkably rapid and gratifying indeed!

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

NUTS TO CRACK.

For Infidels and Freethinkers.

By AN OLD DEIST.

Extracts.

2. I cannot gainsay the fact that human nature is bad, and as bad as the old book makes it. Of course it is not the duty of deists and freethinkers to admit this; because, having no remedy for it, why should they tell that the old fortress is rotten at the foundation? But let us admit it; it is too hard to be cracked.—Page 5.

* * * * *

10. We are also asked to explain, on the ground of Evolution, whether the bird laying eggs came first without eggs, or the eggs without fowls. If we say eggs first, where did the egg come from? Or if we say the fowl first, then did the fowl not come from an egg? It would puzzle the natural philosopher to say how it could possibly come without an egg.

* * * * *

19. Why is it that dying men never regret being Christians? And why do Deists often on their death-beds mourn over the fact that they were not Christians?

* * * * *

24. I cannot gainsay the fact, that the London Shipping Gazette has admitted that no ship is capable of meeting great storms and carrying heavy cargoes "that differs far from the proportions of Noah's Ark." How came the proportions of that great ship to be so worthy of attention in this nineteenth century?

THAMES CHURCH MISSION.

MISSION SMACK CHOLMONDELEY, STATIONED WITH THE SHORT BLUE TRAWLING FLEET.

MR. EDWARD BIRKBECK, M.P. (the "Fisherman's Friend"), speaking of Smacksmen, observed: "When they are on shore after an eight weeks' voyage they are tempted by every description of vice; and when afloat they are lured by what, in my opinion, is a growing and most disastrous evil to deep-sea fishermen—the floating grog-shops in the North Sea. These vessels are sometimes better known by the name of 'copers' or 'bum-boats,' and they sell liquor of the very worst and most fiery quality. It is a kind of drink probably unknown to the general public; it is bought in Holland, and produces the most maddening effects. There are many clear cases of direct evil done by the floating grog-shops, and details could be given if time allowed. Such facts convince me more and more that if there is one way in which great good can be done among the deep-sea fishermen, it is through the instrumentality of the smacks sent out by the Thames Church Mission. They are doing in the North Sea a grand work, worthy of the support of a great maritime nation like England; and I believe that the results of their effort, great as they are in the present, would, if only supported liberally by the public, be of untold value in the future."

"I do not know any agency in which the Religious Tract Society feels more confidence than in the Thames Church Mission. Some of the most interesting results of the distribution of their tracts are found in connection with the Mission. When by God's mercy a sailor is brought to the knowledge of the truth, and becomes an active servant of the Lord Jesus Christ, the blessing is not confined to himself, for he becomes the centre of a great and precious influence, operating probably where the Gospel message would not otherwise be heard."—Rev. L. B. WHITE, D.D.

"The Thames Church Mission is a vigorous and important agency for practically obeying the text which it takes as its motto: 'Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days.' It is, in fact, one of those valuable Home Societies which enable the British and Foreign Bible Society to put the Scriptures into wider circulation, just as the great Missionary Societies do abroad."—British and Foreign Bible Society Monthly Reporter.

"For moral purposes, for patriotic purposes, for social purposes, for religious purposes, there was never devised a better agency than the Thames Church Mission, and it ought not to want the means which are necessary to extend its operations. I shall be happy to do anything in my power to promote the extension of an agency which has been so signally blessed by God, and is so immensely beneficial to the whole community."—Rt. Hon. Earl of SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

Contributions towards the maintenance of this work are very urgently needed, and will be thankfully acknowledged by E. J. MATHER, Secretary.

MAGNETISM PERMANENT IN ITS ACTION.

There are many persons whose habits produce a torpid condition of nerve matter, for whom magnetic applications are doubtless the simplest and most efficacious mode of relief, because magnetic influence affords a natural and not an artificial means of recuperation.

It is a mistaken idea to suppose that the energising influence of Magnetism draws unduly upon the vital forces of the system, or will cause a corresponding reaction or inaction by and by. It operates only by natural law, restoring as far as possible such buoyant energy as is in every sense characteristic of the term health; consequently there can be no wasting depression, or decline of nervous power from this cause. As the functions of the whole economy are restored, both mentally and physically, and the healthy and harmonious action of all the organs re-established, the condition of the organism is more likely to be lasting and permanent than when the wear and tear of the system is going on under deranged conditions.

From Mr. F. T. FURMINGER, Curragh Camp, Ireland.

"Since the time when you first prescribed for me I have had no other physician, and my health has so greatly improved that I have been able, on two occasions, to go over to England to conduct large Bible-readings, each of two hours' duration, and I felt no subsequent exhaustion. You have made a cure of all that could be cured. It was beyond the power of science to eradicate all my maladies, but your treatment has so increased and kept up vital power and strength that I have been able to bear pain, and I believe it has prevented a deformity. You know when I first applied to you I had to be lifted in and out of bed, but soon after your treatment was adopted I became independent of such help, and could dress myself and get into my wheel-chair, and do many things; and, thanks be to God, this continues; so I have abundant cause for gratitude."

All those who experience loss of energy unfitting them for ordinary duties, and exposing them to debilitating, perhaps chronic disease, should make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the Odo-Magnetic mode of treatment. Mr. B. Copson Garratt has devoted many years of his life to the practical adaptation of the Superhuman force of Magnetism to the alleviation and cure of various forms of disease. His published essays clearly demonstrate the natural action of the remedy, and may be had on application at his Consulting Rooms, where a private list of 950 names may also be obtained.—B. POLITICAL ECONOMY AND THE POOR.

By Rev. S. BORTON BROWN.

IT would indeed be a sorrowful thing if this question of the state of the poor and their wages should be dismissed with the hopelessness which seems rather to cling to the communication which formed the leading article in THE CHRISTIAN of May 29.

The outcome of that article is that many eloquent and touching things might be said about the state of the poor, but it is not much good. Certain experiments have been tried and failed. Here are a certain number of poor, helpless, and useless women who get very little but starvation wages, but it is all they are really worth. The case would be different if they could be made more efficient and fewer in number. They would then earn more, and regulate the market, and bring up the price of wages. It seems to come pretty much, however, to this, that it is their own fault, not at all the fault of society.

We are, moreover, pointed to fixed and inexorable laws of nature, and reminded of economical principles; and told we must reduce the quantity and improve the quality of this ill-paid and under-fed labour. We are told that what is wanted is emigration, and besides that a reduction in the increase of population. Somehow or other I suppose people must not marry, or if they do they must not have children, if they happen to be poor—a doctrine worthy of Malthus, Bradlaugh, and Mrs. Besant; stopping the natural increase of population for a generation, if possible, &c. The conclusion arrived at after all is, that philanthropy and religion alone are not sufficient, and we must bring to our help a practical acquaintance with trade, and a knowledge of economical laws. Good as far as it goes.

But granted that the highest appliances and thought of Christian civilisation should be brought to bear on this question, which surely none dispute, what is wanted to be known—and a good many would be glad to know it, who know nothing of political economy—is this: Is there no hope in Christ and in Christians for an improvement of the present state of things among the poor and sick, the inefficient, the under-fed, and under-paid? Must this thing be left to take care of itself till political economists are decided even on what system of political economy is best, not for the human race, but for trade; until the present awful system of competitive industry reforms itself; and until the rulers of the world can decide how to cure this increasing poverty of the poor, the dreadful inequality of classes, industrial anarchy, and the gradual absorption of enormous capital into the hands of the few?

In our present Christianity of the Nineteenth Century, and in our boasted modern civilisation, there is very little hope possibly; or in present ideas of philanthropy, or even in present day practical trade ideas. But surely not in Him who says, "I sit upon the throne. Behold, I make all things new." There ought surely to be Christians somewhere who believe in such an Almighty Christ, and who are capable of dealing with such questions without being political economists of any earthly school. Surely Christ knows a little about trade principles and political economy, and foundation principles of righteousness, the principles of love, and of sacrifice through the cross. There must be surely something which He can say which can go to the root of this matter. Is it to be the Gospel of political economy and practical trade, in combination with the philanthropy and religion of the present day, or the Gospel of Christ?

I am quite sure the key is in Christ, and in his revealed will, in this as in all other questions affecting the earthly as well as heavenly welfare of men and women, and of the whole human race.

If the principles and commands of Christ were simply carried out by Christians, they would and must affect all political economy in course of time, all principles of trade, all questions of supply and demand, all cases of philanthropy, the labour market even, emigration, degree of population, and so on. But as long as the Christ-life does not prevail, and wherever it is not introduced fully and really, a most deplorable state of things will exist, and that state of things will even grow worse and worse. This is simply saying that Christ is the sole remedy, and Christians in whom there is the living Christ. To many this will not mean much. But properly apprehended it is the very thing, and the only thing, which can deal with this question.

Suppose every Christian so named were simply to keep "the new commandment" in this life, and in every word and action as the outcome of the Christ-life within them: "A new commandment give I unto you that ye love one another, as I have loved you." That word, if received as a living word, would settle the question whether we should enjoy a full meal when some poor soul whom we could help had none; would settle all questions of charity, all questions of buying and selling, of wages, of competition, and the whole range of practical trade and life. And suppose it should involve loss and ruin commercially in some cases, what then?

The fact is, it seems as though we Christians wanted to be Christians without the renunciation of self, of taking up the cross, and following Christ, except when and where we will, and as if we wanted the world's political economy to settle these things on trade principles.

Society cannot be saved without a real Christ, and without real Christians filled with the living Christ. Socialists of a certain type are going to try to do it now, and they are preaching what they call a new morality, which says, "Don't be selfish, working men; but let every man live, not for self but for all." They say, "Christ is a failure because his followers are as selfish as anyone else. Let us see what can be done without Christ and Christianity, which teaches 'Everybody for self, and the devil take the hindmost.'" Of course this is a lie, because they estimate Christ by too many of his professed followers. But if it could be shown by Christians that they could sacrifice anything to carry out the principles and life of Christ, and to live his life, that would be a gospel indeed, and there could be no gainsaying it! Nothing else than this can save the poor, or society, from its increasingly dreadful condition.

By Rev. J. GUINNESS ROGERS.

(In "Congregationalist.")

It is not to be denied that Mr. Reaney adduced some very startling facts, and presented his case with as much earnestness as ability, and he was well sustained by Mr. Spensley. But the question at once presented itself as to the possibility of any beneficial interference on the part of the Congregational Union. The law of demand and supply is a very hard one in many of its incidents; but so also is the law of gravitation. The difficulty is to see how to get rid either of the one or the other. Just now there is an outcry in some quarters against political economy, which seems to us to rest on an utter fallacy. Take this very case as an illustration. Everyone, we suppose, who heard Mr. Reaney's statements was shocked at the thought of the wretched remuneration paid for the work of the poor women in question. But political economy does not create that evil. It simply teaches that when twenty people are competing for work, the price of labour is sure to fall. It does not say that it ought to fall, it merely records the fact that by an irresistible tendency it will fall. Whether high-minded men and, above all, whether Christian men, will press to the uttermost the advantage thus placed in their hands, is a question political economy does not touch, for the obvious reason that it belongs to a region far outside its domain.

The less that questions of political economy are mixed up with considerations of Christian principle the better. We have to meet a state of society in which all the elements are not Christian. Even if all the members of the Congregational Union could be persuaded (as we hope it would not be difficult to persuade them) that hard dealings with poor people, screwing them down to the barest minimum, are not justifiable because the state of the labour market allows them, the evil would not be thus removed. Were all Christians to withdraw from this kind of business, there would be others to fill their places who would not be restrained by the scruples which Christians must feel. We do not urge this as a reason why Christians should forget the high law by which they should govern their whole lives, but simply to show that the problem to be solved is not so easy as might at first sight appear.

The subject is to come up again, and, when it does, it is to be hoped that there will be opportunity for the fullest discussion. We greatly honour those who feel that Christians, and Christian ministers in particular, ought to have something to say on the great social problems which are so largely occupying men's minds. But there is need for a very wise discrimination. We are in the presence of some of the most dangerous theories as to the rights of property, and they evidently have a fascination for numbers. We doubt the wisdom of using the term "Christian Socialism," lest it should convey a false impression. To be frank, we must admit we do not quite understand it; but it looks very like an edged tool with which it would not be very safe to play.

MODERN PREACHING.—2.

BY AN OCCASIONAL CORRESPONDENT.

IF, as is maintained by some expositors, the epistles to the seven churches of Asia were sent, with their reproofs and encouragements, to the chief pastors or bishops of those churches, we have in this a very sacred proof of the discriminating notice which the Chief Shepherd and Bishop of the Church is taking of the ministers of his Word. Still more weighty is this reflection if, with distinguished modern critics, we hold that, at the date of the Apocalypse, Timothy was the presiding minister of the first of the churches addressed by the ascended Lord. Even he is warned of a first love left, and is urged to "a sustained enthusiasm, and to seek a rekindling of the grace of God."

In offering, then, some reasons for that decay in the power and incisiveness of preaching to which a preceding paper referred, we would do so with the acknowledgment of the perils to all of us in this age, and of the peculiar temptations with which the great enemy of Christ will assail ministers of religion. Their temptations, however, are the danger of the whole Church, and their influence of gain or of loss is a matter with which all Christian believers are concerned.

Of late years, among Methodists and other Nonconformist bodies, great stress has been laid on intellectual studies as a preparation for preaching. Youths who have gone to college, from "the clerk's desk or the shop-counter," have been told that critical and scientific questions presented problems that the highest learning alone could solve. There is wisdom and at the same time great danger in such representations. Young men come to think that the indispensable qualification for the minister is intellectual culture. This thought, I have reason to know, is very general. It may spoil a life. Let a young man be chiefly impressed with the notion that the prime requirement for successful preaching is human learning; he will, under this persuasion, look for the fitness to uninspired and even heathen men. Let it be strenuously and ceaselessly pressed on him that the essential, paramount requirement is deep religious life, he will in this case be driven upon the all-helpful, sanctifying Spirit of God.

The difference between the two incitements is little less than infinite. Men, and their books, can furnish the intellectual training and the culture. The truth, however, that is to be burnt into a student's soul is that no men can make the successful preacher. The region in which he is fitted for his vocation is one lifted far above human curriculums. He alone speaks with power, who speaks as the oracles of God. He alone ministers with effects following, who ministers of the ability that God giveth. Before Barnabas and Saul were sent forth to the ministry, the large church in the Syrian Antioch fasted and prayed. We, therefore, soon after read of the two men so speaking that "a great multitude of the Jews and also of the Greeks believed." The indispensable preparation for the ministry is the hallowed fellowship of a saved sinner with Christ, and the opening of the heart by the Spirit to understand Divine sympathies.

Learning if you will, my friend; it will wonderfully add to the spiritual grace; but as a substitute for the anointing of the Lord it is weakness and death. Never could churches fall into such a delusion of the devil as when on an unsophisticated youth they too urgently press the human resources, those which living and dead men can supply, instead of ceaselessly magnifying and accentuating that which has been the qualification of all powerful preachers throughout the Christian centuries. Ah, we have need only to look round and see how dry and sapless are the sermons of mere human learning, and how the men who go in the strength of the "excellency of words and of wisdom," are clothed with mortifications before the Lord. Happy the preachers who, with all the help that man can give, cry out before God, with pleading cries of self-abnegation, "Our sufficiency is from Thee."

As another explanation of the failure in converting power that marks modern preaching, should be mentioned recent discussions on the doctrines of the restoration, or of the annihilation, of the wicked. It may be admitted that the widespread interest in these grave subjects has arisen from a not unnatural reaction against mediæval representations of the punishment of the lost. But such a subject called for the most reverential caution. Dogmatism was quite out of place. No man can see in the dark. Upholdings of the righteousness of God by human conceptions of what He must do may be presumptuous. No attitude prepares for the discussion of this theme, except that which never forgets the cries of anguish sin is always sending through creation, and the awful darkness that gathered round an uplifted Cross. To set aside by ephemeral articles and pamphlets the teaching of the greatest theologians was to incur a risk of the discussion filtering through lower channels as an opiate of moral poison. I blame no man, but must affirm that the idea of a "wrath to come" and a wholesome fear of the judgments of the Lord have departed from multitudes in this generation. Than this no greater detriment can be done to an age. Preachers have neutralised Scripture by reserve, and the people have come to think that future retribution is explained away. Yea, worse still: the Gospel itself has come to be looked upon—not as a gracious summons to return to a reconciled God—but as the announcement of a universal indulgence and clemency. Let the stern necessities of repentance be lost sight of by Christian teachers, and the old power of the pulpit departs. Preachers might ponder how Christ began his ministry (Mark i. 15); and with what message Paul came to Europe (Acts xvii. 30.)

Turn for a moment to the example of the Apostle. He spent "three years" in Ephesus. And how did he pass those years? He persuaded and entreated "day and night;" he did so "from house to house;" he warned "every one;" and let us note that day and night, from house to house, he spake "with tears." Was Paul mistaken? Why those tears, and labours, and importunities? Must he not have beheld an awful, inexpressible calamity which was overhanging lost men? "Explain to me," said a great Continental theologian, "those tears of Paul, if he has not before his eyes the image of some fearful punishment reserved for those who reject or turn away from the truth? Or to borrow his own energetic language: 'A certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries.' To such a man this Gospel was an offered deliverance at once merciful and terrible, as vast as the world, as high as the heavens, and as deep as hell."

In relation to all aspects of truth, the spirit of the age has been adverse to effective preaching. The province of faith has been belittled. The striking difference between much of modern preaching and that of the great preachers of other times has been that while the former tells men they ought to feel; the latter so exhibited Divine relations that their hearers could not help feeling. With us, Scripture is not enough. Reason must explain. The authority of the inspired Word has not been maintained. In the place of that authoritative testimony which is the preacher's function and force, Revelation has been measured by human standards, and weighed in human scales. The spirit of doubt upon the times has induced a false apology and compromise. Although modern criticism, materialistic philosophy, and sceptical science have not made good any single assault on the Bible, the commanding authority of the Divine Word has been let down by its very advocates. Who dare affirm that Christ's teaching of the malign power that rules the world, or man's lost condition, or the breadth of God's commandment of love, is enforced now as in days of great awakenings?

And this lowering of the immutable warrant for the preacher's testimony has had another effect. Congregations have come to decide for themselves what the ministers shall teach. Some, in pleading for what they term the simplicity of the Gospel, limit the scope of the preacher's message. Others, in that utter spirit of worldliness which has got into churches, clearly see that decided evangelical teaching carries with it separation from the world and a high spirituality. They do not like it, therefore, and many of them have so lost faith that they have come to believe that nothing will attach their children to religion but what they call æsthetics, and turning rooms for worship into concert-halls. In the Episcopal Church different tastes find their appropriate edifices, and in towns the parochial system is all but dead. This, however, is scarcely possible elsewhere, and no doubt just now there are ministers whose heart-sorrows and difficulties make them of all men the most pitiable. There is no cure but returning to the old paths, and exalting the unique, complete, and commanding claim of the Spirit's teaching. The doctrine of inspiration is more and more asserting itself, and will not fail a man who throws himself upon it. The penalty will come speedily and most disastrously to preachers who conceal, that they may not offend. Let others be content with the privilege of suffering with the Master. Their ample recompense will come. Time will help them. Men soon will come to ask more loudly: should not the sixty thousand sermons of professional men, which at heavy cost are preached every Sunday, tell more visibly on the moral and social condition of the nation? In words which I am glad to quote from the Bishop-Designate of Ripon: "The eternal laws of truth and right are ultimately found stronger than half truths and falsehoods. In a mysterious way, every devil-born flood of opinion or sentiment will sink beneath the surface. 'The earth helped the woman.' Creation is ultimately a witness for righteousness and truth."

An able weekly paper lately gave a wretchedly meagre and utterly defective representation of evangelical doctrine, upon which it founded a sweeping allegation of the "Decay of Evangelicalism." Rarely has anything been more prejudiced and unlearned. Every tyro in learning knows that "Evangelical" is simply a Greek word (from a master word of the New Testament) made English. According to the Imperial Dictionary it is that which is "consonant to the doctrines and precepts of the Gospel published by Christ and his apostles." Evangelicalism cannot perish. The Articles and Liturgy of the Church of England are steeped in it. The Methodist Hymn-book is brimful of it. Take it out of the devotional books used by all Christian people, and they would be mutilated unto worthlessness. Let the self-less men and women who, under the force of evangelical motives, are seeking to save the miserable, be removed, and every neighbourhood of sorrow would be overwhelmed with mourning. Silence the preachers of this doctrine, and you would do away with "the power of God," which is saving the world. Let the witness for this doctrine depart, and earth's very soil would cry out, for it has been wet with the tears and blood of the Son of God.

Evangelicalism, according to the definition of the authoritative standard above quoted, finds its unassailable place in the New Testament Scriptures. The so-called "modern thought" of this over-praised age will pass away, but the Word of the Lord can never pass away. Sure I am that even now, from literary circles and from intelligent artisans, who are so lamentably separated from all church organisations, would be heard this voice, if we could listen to its "We know nothing of your human name: and theological parties, but if we must have preaching, let it be after the New Testament. Let preachers in living words help us to understand Christ. If the selfishness which has everywhere broken the law of love brings death to the life, let us be told this. We want no clerical officialism. We repudiate priestisms of men; the world has had enough of them. It is not the exaggeration of mysterious sacraments nor church principles, we care for. We want a pacified conscience, help against our temptations, and to learn how God meets our dark and mournful condition. We want to hear in plain, brotherly, and feeling language about the Deliverer who came to redeem our miserable humanity, and how we can be made right, and enabled to overcome, and be lifted into blessedness through Him."

LESSONS FROM A ROYAL LIFE.

By Miss MARY GLADSTONE.

One of the most interesting papers in the current Contemporary Review — an unusually excellent number—is one by Miss Mary Gladstone on the Letters of the late Princess Alice, which have lately been given to the public in an English dress. It is full of gracious and highly-appreciative references to the noble and useful life of the late Princess, and closes as follows:—

ABOVE all things let us learn this lesson from the example of Princess Alice—the quickening, purifying, bracing power of pain. In every trial that she had to undergo—and perhaps these trials were more than ordinarily severe and frequent—we see how her character developed and strengthened. To her each trial was as an April storm to a young plant or tree, lending new vigour to the roots, new power to its growth, so that when the sun shines the buds are seen to expand and blossom—those same buds which without the rain-cloud would have shrivelled and died. Every time she was called upon to give up what she most deeply cherished, she counted with faith and gratitude the blessings that remained to her. "Thus do we learn humility," she said, with quivering lip. "God has called for one life, and has given me back four. How then should we mourn?" These words she pronounced when she lost her darling little "Sunshine" as she called her, her sweet "May-blossom," little guessing that in a few short weeks she would be called upon to enter the same valley of the shadow of death.

"I always wonder how there can be dissatisfied and grumbling people in this beautiful world, so far too good for our deserts, and when, after our duty is done, we hope to be everlastingly with those we love; when the joy will be so great and lasting, that present sorrow and trouble must melt away." How rarely do we see this! Every hour of our lives do not we add to our sorrows, by perpetually dwelling on the daily little rubs and difficulties of life? How seldom do we allow this wonder and gratitude to fill our hearts for the endless beauties and marvels that surround us! "I don't like what I don't like, so much more than I like what I like," a child once said to its mother. Most typical saying! We hug our difficulties and persistently ignore our blessings.

But she knew that the brightest light makes the darkest shadow—that if she was to be blessed with the fulness of joy, she must also realise the depths of sorrow—that in exact proportion to our joy is our capacity for grief, and that there is a love that lives through both. For—

"Where will God be absent? In his face
Is light, but in his shadow healing too."

It has been well pointed out that life generally includes for us three kinds of love—the ascending, as seen in filial affection; the equal love, as seen in marriage; and the descending love, as seen in the parents' relation with the child. For most of us it is a gradual lesson, an ascending scale, "steps along which to mount upwards," reverential trustfulness, the chief element of the first; reciprocity, a mutual giving and receiving of the second; and the perfection of disinterested love the characteristic of the third. "Then, and not till then, love enters upon its highest stage, and puts on the crown of sacrifice." In Princess Alice's life we see the three kinds—the love of the daughter, of the wife, and of the mother; the three elements which make up perfect love—reverence, equivalence, and sacrifice, in full bloom at once. "The Trinity in unity of love."

It is well for us that at the hour of death the mistakes and shortcomings which necessarily belong to our human frailty are lost in a mist of tears; that our graces and virtues, our highest aspirations, should live on after us, softening sorrow, kindling hope, strengthening faith, inspiring those who are left behind, stimulating them on to ever nobler efforts and higher aims.

"Through such souls alone,
God stooping shows sufficient of his light
For us i' the dark to rise by."

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—2.

GOD'S STRANGE ACT.

"For the Lord shall rise up as in Mount Perazim, He shall be wroth as in the valley of Gibeon, that He may do his work, his strange work; and bring to pass his act, his strange act." —Isaiah xxviii. 21.

THIS passage is usually, perhaps always, interpreted to mean that the execution of judgment is God's strange act. But if He be the Judge of all the earth, if righteousness and judgment are the foundation of his throne, how can the execution of judgment be his strange or foreign or alien act? Let the expulsion from Eden, the flood, the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah, and all other judgments give the answer.

Dr. Kay, in the Speaker's Commentary, comes a little nearer to the true interpretation when he distinguishes between God's own people and the Gentiles; and regards the strangeness as consisting in this, that his wrath falls upon Israel no less than upon the heathen. But so far from the judgment of his own people being God's strange act, the Holy Spirit declares, even in the New Testament, that "judgment must begin at the house of God."

There is one particular work, one special act, which stands out from all God's ways, as strange and foreign and alien and unusual. (For all these renderings have been given of the word translated "strange.") It is not strange that He executes judgment on the wicked, nor that judgment should begin at the house of God. These are parts of his ordinary and necessary ways.

But that He should condemn the Most Just; that He should visit iniquity upon the Holy One; that He should deliver the soul of his Turtle Dove unto the multitude of the wicked; that He should make Him who knew no sin to be sin for us:—that was his strange act—strange indeed to men and angels and devils, but the perfect and necessary outcome of his divine and everlasting love.

But how with reference to Jesus did Jehovah rise up as in Mount Perazim? How was He wroth as in the Valley of Gibeon? In both of these places the prominent feature was that God fought from heaven against the enemies of Israel. At Perazim He went out before David to smite the host of the Philistines (2 Sam. v. 24). At Gibeon He cast down great stones from heaven. . . . They were more which died with hailstones than they whom the children of Israel slew with the sword. And at the prayer of Joshua the sun stood still in the midst of heaven . . . for the Lord fought for Israel (Joshua x. 10—14).

But when Jehovah did his work, his strange work; and brought to pass his act, his strange act: He fought against Israel in the person of his Son, that He might save Israel in Him with an everlasting salvation. And the fighting against Him of men and devils was as nothing compared with the hailstones of wrath which were cast upon Him out of heaven, and which wrung from his soul the cry: "My God, my God, why hast Thou forsaken Me? I have eaten ashes like bread, and mingled my drink with weeping, because of thine indignation and thy wrath: for Thou hast lifted me up and cast me down. Thou hast afflicted me with all thy waves. All thy waves and thy billows have gone over me!"

If it was Abraham's strange act to lay Isaac on the altar, and take the knife to slay his son, how much more was it God's strange act to execute the judgment of a felon's death upon the Son of his love, in whom his soul was well pleased, in order that He might bring to pass that other strange act, to the praise of the glory of his grace, "wherein He hath made us accepted in the Beloved . . . according to the riches of his grace."

Read the wonderful story of the mystery and of the eternal purpose which he purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord, as it is unfolded in the Epistle to the Ephesians by the Comforter, who is the Holy Ghost. M.

LAMB AND FLAG SCHOOLS.—These excellent Ragged Schools continue the work of training the young in Clerkenwell with increasing energy and success, as may be inferred from the fact that the scholars have taken in six years no less than 343 prizes for long service and good conduct. In connection with the schools there is also a Mission carried on by means of open-air services, on Clerkenwell-green, in the summer. The district visiting has been greatly blessed, a fruitful branch of the work being visitations to Smithfield markets and the goods sheds of the Great Northern and Great Western Railways. The Hon. Superintendent is Mr. J. C. Sherrard, 7, Oxford-square, Hyde-park, W.

SANCTIFICATION.

A NEW book on this important topic from the pen of Rev. Evan Hopkins * will be welcomed by many. He is generally considered to be one of the safest teachers on a subject on which many have gone astray; for whilst maintaining in his teaching a high standard of holiness, he rejects as unscriptural those claims to sinlessness which we not unfrequently meet with in the present day. On this point we are glad to see that he says in the preface of this book:—

"We believe it is the distinct testimony of the Scripture, that we can never in this life say we have no sin. We accept those words in 1 John i. 8, as referring to believers, to Christians even in the highest stages of the Divine life. The Apostle, we believe, included himself in that statement, 'If we say that we have no sin, we deceive ourselves.'"

Mr. Hopkins' work consists of ten chapters, which indicate the following subjects by their several headings: Sin, No Condemnation, Life, Liberty, Sanctification, Conformity to the Death of Christ, Conditions of Power, Watchfulness, Conflict, Filled with the Holy Ghost. On all these various matters he has much to say that is interesting, and says it well. He abounds in pithy and apt quotations from well-known writers, and his expositions of Scripture are for the most part able and convincing; but we remark two or three exceptions to this, which, on account of the importance of the truths involved, we will briefly notice.

First we observe (p. 134) a very unsatisfactory exposition of that cardinal text, "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin":—

"There is a power in his death to separate us from sin. All cleansing is separating; when a garment is cleansed, it is separated from that which defiled it. So the 'blood of Christ cleanseth'—i.e., the death of Christ separates—from every sin."

Again, further on we read as follows:—

"Taking the 'blood of Christ' as equivalent to his death, and the effect of the death to be separation, we can understand how it is that the blood is continually cleansing us from every sin. Walking in the light, as He is in the light, the necessity of this constant separation from sin is felt more deeply continually. But the need is met by the divine provision, and we become more and more conscious of the power of that death to separate from sin of every kind."

But separation from sin as a practical matter is a very different thing from cleansing from sin as the result of the atoning or propitiating value of the blood of Christ, and it is this latter which is clearly the subject of 1 John i. 7. The one is separation from sin by being kept from committing it, the other is its guilt being blotted out after it has been committed. There can be no question as to which meaning is indicated in the teaching of the types of the Old Testament, and especially that of the day of Atonement, to which there seems almost a reference here. "On that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord" (Lev. xvi. 30).

The next exposition is, we cannot but think, an equally serious misconception of the meaning of a very important text, Rom. viii 1: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." Mr. Hopkins does not actually deny the universally received meaning of the word "condemnation" as here used, but he wishes to combine with it another meaning which seems, nevertheless, to supplant it in his judgment. This new meaning is that the Apostle is here speaking of condemnation as an experimental matter. In fact, self-condemnation, for he adduces as a parallel thought 1 John iii. 21; but we will give his own words:—

"Surely it is to this condition of soul that the Apostle refers when he says, 'Beloved if our heart condemn us not,' not if we stand justified in Christ, but if our heart be not accusing us 'we have confidence towards God.'"

Now it so happens that the word used here by the Apostle John is a totally different word from that in Rom. viii. 1. In the latter it is κατάκριμα, the well-known judicial word for condemnation, whilst in 1 John iii. 21 the verb is καταγινώσκω, formed of the two words "to know," and "against," so that it means rather "to bring a charge against," "to accuse," and points to the function of a witness rather than to that of a judge. Professor Westcott says of it in his comment on this passage: "The word is used of the internal judgment of conscience as distinguished from the formal sentence of the judge, κατακρίνω."

There is then no real parallel between these two passages, and the fact that a different word is used to express the self condemnation of an accusing heart, rather shows that such cannot be the meaning of the "no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus," of Rom. viii. 1., for here the condemnation is distinctly judicial. It is, however, but fair to Mr. Hopkins to quote a sentence that shows that he distinctly admits the truth which the ordinary interpretation conveys:—

"It is the believer's privilege to know that there is now no condemnation for him whether he thinks of himself as standing before God as a judge, or as walking before God as a Father. As in the one case he stands before God in Christ the Righteous One, who has met all the claims of the righteous law; so in the other he is abiding in Christ the Holy One, who has satisfied all the desires of a Father's heart."

But attempting to combine two different meanings in the one word is far from satisfactory, and even if the word could mean self-condemnation, how could it be broadly said, "There is no self-condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus"? for the appended words in this place are universally rejected by all critical editors. No self-condemnation may be, in the sense of 1 John iii. 20, an attainment, and a high attainment; but what is stated here is something true of all Christians as such. The Apostle John treats self-condemnation as at least a possible thing, and if so, it surely could not be said that there is no such thing "to them that are in Christ Jesus."

There is so much in this book that is interesting and profitable, that it is the more to be regretted that exception should have to be taken to these two expositions: but we hope that Mr. Hopkins is not wholly committed to them. Indeed, as to the latter, he writes with some hesitation, and more as though he would suggest than speak confidently. We sincerely hope this hesitation may increase, and that in a new edition they may be abandoned in favour of the sense which both texts have conveyed to generation after generation of Christians. For the consentient testimony of the most spiritually-minded Christians of all ages is surely not a thing to be lightly tampered with.

The chapter on "Life" is admirable. What could be a better exposure of the hollowness of the pretensions of the critics of Christianity in the present day than the following?—

"You may put a telescope into the hands of a man that is blind, and bid him look at some distant star, or on some lovely landscape. He tells you he sees nothing. Well, his witness is true. So the Agnostic affirms of all supernatural religion that he knows it not. His witness also is true. But if the blind man goes further, and asserts that because he sees nothing there is nothing to see, his assertion is untrue, and his witness is worthless, because he speaks beyond the range of his capacity. Such is the value of the natural man's opinion when he declares his mind on spiritual things."

We close our notice by quoting some very good and practical remarks on the importance of Christ and Christ alone being allowed to reign within:—

"When we are in the right condition, Christ and not self occupies the centre of our being. Then it is that He reigns with unhindered sway as King within. The writer not long since heard one who had been a Christian many years describe the nature of the blessing he had recently received, in the following words: 'I had heard of Christ being King. Well, He had reigned in me, but it was only as a constitutional sovereign. I was Prime Minister, and I did a good deal of the work myself. Then I found that He must be absolute Monarch. And so now He is.' How much is involved in that thought! How much turns upon this condition of things! In one sense, everything depends upon it.

'Higher than the highest heavens,
Deeper than the deepest sea,
Lord, at last thy love hath conquered;
Grant me now my soul's desire:
None of self, and all of Thee.'

Dublin Ragged Schools.

SOME five years ago a large whiskey saloon in Townsend-street was closed, and turned into a Home for Waifs and Strays. For the past year we have been asking the Lord to give us another public-house in like manner, which is next door to one of our Mission Infant Schools and the Girls' Home in Luke-street. About November last there seemed to be some hope that our prayers were then to be answered, but we were disappointed, and were almost beginning to despair, when one morning we saw the house closed. Upon inquiry, we found that the owner was willing to let us have possession for £30, which terms were agreed upon. A new floor was needed, beside a few other alterations to make the place suitable for a school-room. This will enable us to carry on this valuable Mission-school much more efficiently, besides getting rid of the daily annoyance of the public-house company.—Yours faithfully, Ellen Smyly.

John Wycliffe and War.

AS considerable attention is being directed at present to the career and opinions of Wycliffe, the following extract from his writings, in reference to war, may possess some interest:—

"Friars now say that Bishops can fight best of all men, and that it falleth most properly to them, since they are lords of all this world. Thus they say, Christ bade his disciples sell their coats and buy them swords; but whereto, if not to fight? Thus friars make a great array, and stir up many men to fight. But Christ taught not his apostles to fight with a sword of iron, but with the sword of God's Word, which standeth in meekness of heart and in the prudence of man's tongue. And as Christ was the meekest of men, so He was most drawn from the world, and would not judge or divide a heritage among men; and yet He could have done that best. Angels have withstood fiends: and many men with right of law withstand their enemies, and yet they kill them not, neither fight with them. Men of the Gospel, by patience and the prospect of rest and peace, have vanquished through the suffering of death, just as we may do now.

"But here men of the world come and say that by this wise kingdoms would be destroyed; but here our faith teaches us that, since Christ is our God, kingdoms should be thus established, and their enemies overcome. Well indeed I know that men will scorn this doctrine; but men who would be martyrs for the law of God will hold thereby."

THE HIGH PRIEST OF ISRAEL.*

ISRAEL stood doubly represented by the high priest in the presence of God. On the brilliant stones that rested on his shoulders, their names were engraved according to their birth.

ON THE ONYX ON THE LEFT SHOULDER.	ON THE ONYX ON THE RIGHT SHOULDER.
Gad.	Reuben.
Asher.	Simeon.
Issachar.	Levi.
Zebulun.	Judah.
Joseph.	Dan
Benjamin.	Naphtali.

The stones on the breastplate, however, were arranged in four rows of three; and the names were engraven on them according to the tribes.

THE FIRST ROW.

Carbuncle,	Topaz,	Sardius,
ZEBULUN.	ISSACHAR.	JUDAH,

THE SECOND ROW.

Diamond,	Sapphire,	Emerald,
GAD.	SIMEON.	REUBEN.

THE THIRD ROW.

Amethyst,	Agate,	Ligure,
BENJAMIN.	MANASSEH.	EPHRAIM.

THE FOURTH ROW.

Jasper,	Onyx,	Beryl,
NAPHTALI.	ASHER.	DAN.

As the Hebrew language is written from right to left, the stones, with their inscribed names, would probably be arranged as here set forth. This is the order of the tribes, as they were arranged in their camp, and in the march.

Does not this twofold arrangement of Israel, according to birth, and according to tribes, point out to us the two aspects in which we stand as believers before God, presented in our great High Priest, the Lord Jesus? If looked at in the onyx-stones, there was no difference between one of the children of Israel and another. They were alike children of the same father, and each was presented in the same glory and beauty. No order of precedence was adopted: no conduct evinced by any altered the arrangement. Reuben might prove unstable as water: and yet he was first in one of the stones. Benjamin and Joseph might be especial favourites: yet they were last. In point of fact, each of the two stones gave forth its glowing brilliancy equally to each of the six names inscribed thereon.

Thus it is with all the Israel of God. If viewed with reference to their birth of God, there can be no difference. One is as precious and glorious as another. The infinite cost of the blood of Christ has been paid alike for each and all. Each has indissoluble union with the risen Lord, in life and glory. Each has been loved with an everlasting love, and chosen from everlasting in Him. And the Lord, as the great High Priest, bears up each alike in the perfection of his own glory before God. The shepherd, when he had found the lost sheep, laid it on his shoulders, rejoicing, and bore it thus in safety to his home. The Great Shepherd of the sheep will not cease to bear on his shoulders the weakest of the flock, until He at last places it in the mansion of rest and joy, which He is gone to prepare. When the resurrection-morning comes every one of the redeemed will be like Christ, and will be manifested then in the same beauty and glory, in which now he is representatively upheld, on the shoulder of the great High Priest before God.

God has predestinated those whom He foreknew to be conformed to the image of his Son: and as seen in Christ—the First-born among many brethren—they are even now, not only justified, but glorified. A whole family, whether in heaven or on earth, yet named of the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, children and therefore heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ.

But the children of Israel were represented in an entirely different order, and after a different manner, on the breastplate of the high-priest. Each there had his own peculiar precious stone, and his own peculiar place. Judah was the head of the first row: and Dan took the lead in the last. The gorgeous colour of the ruby shone out from one: the soft refreshing green of the emerald was visible in another: the brilliant light of the diamond flashed out from a third: and the heavenly azure of the sapphire was displayed in a fourth. Thus, each had his own peculiar glory and beauty: each differed from, without rivalling the other; and each filled his appointed place in the order of God. There was unity, combined with diversity. God is able to create variety, without that variety involving inferiority. And so it is with the individuals that compose the Church of God. Each reflects Christ; and yet Christ is seen in each, with a peculiar beauty and glory, into which another does not intrude. Each has his place also in the body: a responsibility to exhibit Christ in that very place, which belongs to himself and not to another; for which he alone is fitted, and without which the symmetry of the body would not be complete, and its beauty would be defective. Moreover, the individual glory of the saint above will probably have a close connection with the place which he has occupied in the body below; a connection, which would inevitably be broken, were it not for the unwearied love and faithfulness of the great High Priest.

The Theatrical Mission.

THE annual meeting of this Society assumed a very interesting form when on May 29 the Lower Exeter Hall was prettily arranged for a tea to over 300 of the adult members. In the gallery were subscribers and friends of the Mission, who watched with pleasure the quiet and orderly behaviour of those assembled below. Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Johnson and sister sang jubilee melodies, and Mr. Johnson spoke with intense earnestness; Mr. E. C. Newberry also gave a stirring address.

In the evening, when the "Theatrical ladies" had quitted the hall, Colonel Sandwith occupied the chair, and the Report, a series of touching life stories, was read by Mr. Courthope Todd, whose eight years' experience has very clearly proved that this must be an individual rescue work. Rev. Dr. Glitton advocated this view of the Society's labours, and Mr. Mark Knowles, barrister, pleaded for the more practical development of a scheme which should furnish other work for girls anxious from conscientious motives to gain an honourable living apart from the boards.

The premises occupied by the Mission are wholly inadequate for its truly Christian purposes. Mr. and Mrs. Courthope Todd will hold meetings for the Society in the North of England from June 23 to August 14, and will be glad to hear from friends who can arrange such for them. All communications to the office, 21, King-street, Covent-garden, W.C.

SUNDERLAND.—Mr. Herbert R. Francis is preaching at Bethesda, the chapel built by the late Rev. Arthur A. Rees, and where he laboured so successfully for many years. His loss is deeply felt by his own people, and by the church generally. Mr. Francis is being much blessed in his ministry and many souls are gathered in.

A Missionary Breakfast.

THE Annual Missionary Breakfast, arranged for by Pastor Frank White, took place on Whit-Monday at Powis Hall, Westbourne-park. There was a good attendance. At the meeting which followed, Mr. White presided, special prayer was offered for those who had gone forth from the fellowship of the Church to foreign Missions. Letters were read showing that the latest accounts reported satisfactory progress and success in the various fields of labour. This gathering, said the President, began six years ago by a few young men, who suggested a missionary meeting instead of taking the usual holiday, had gradually increased to its present most cheering dimensions. The object was to stir each other up to greater zeal in the work of foreign Missions.

The first speaker was Rev. J. SMITH, of Delhi, whose address bore largely on the immense changes wrought in India during the past generation. Having spent forty-three years in the country he was able to speak from personal experience. These vast changes were seen, for example, in the personal safety which is now felt; forty years ago every ploughman carried a sword for self-defence. Through sanitary and medical reforms cholera has almost ceased its periodic ravages. Agricultural schools have been established for teaching husbandry, while the Government schools and colleges provide education for vast numbers of the people. The greatest triumphs have been effected by the Gospel. There are, however, hundreds of miles of territory in India without a missionary. Mr. Smith appealed that our best men and women should be given to the work. Coming more specially to his work at Delhi, Mr. Smith said they now had a church of 200 members. A marvellous work was being done by the native converts who go forth preaching the Gospel.

Mrs. WEITBRECHT followed with an address of deep interest, confirming much that had been said. India owed much to the labours of the late Dr. Duff, and more than she could express to the Baptist missionaries. She could thrill the meeting by narrations of the sufferings she had witnessed by native converts, who were banished from their homes through embracing Christianity. A recent case was that of one who had been decoyed to a spot where she was terribly beaten. The last account was that she had found her way back to the church, and is now protected. Volunteers were coming forward for the work. A lady in Somersetshire had just offered herself, paying all expenses. A soldier also had felt constrained to go forth as a colporteur, hoping to plant Scripture readers all along the line, from Calcutta to Lahore.

Dr. MONRO GIBSON reminded the friends that the first three petitions in our Lord's Prayer bore on missionary work. He would have them make it their prayer; they must of course live up to it, and that would make them all missionaries. He feared that too many Christians made the cultivation and advancement of their own spiritual life their main object, and in loving their own life they lost it, as our Lord said. They must learn the great law of losing their own life in order to save it. The same principle would apply to churches, many of which he thought were dying through trying to save themselves rather than to save others. This most profitable meeting closed with prayer by Rev. W. Page, of Chelsea.

A FRENCH WORKER WANTED.—We are asked by the director of the St. Etienne branch of the McAll Mission to solicit the aid of a Christian lady who would desire to work for the Lord on the Continent. The Mission is about one of the most interesting and encouraging of all the provincial branches. A special feature which does not exist elsewhere is that of a very important Medical Mission. There is plenty of work for two ladies if two could go. St Etienne is a town of 140,000 inhabitants. Every particular can be had on writing to the director, Dr. Hastings Burroughs, 35, Rue St. Louis, St. Etienne, Loire, France.

A VISIT TO A LONDON HOSPITAL.

SOME children in Dublin who had read of the pleasure which a present of toys had given to poor sick children in a London hospital,* set to work to prepare a boxful of dolls and other treasures, which they sent, when ready, to the Secretary of the Children's Medical Missionary Society for distribution. The lady who gave them away wrote to the Secretary afterwards a letter which will doubtless interest many children besides those in Dublin. It says:—

"I thought I had better take that box of toys myself, so I went this morning. I emptied the contents into baskets, and arrived at the hospital about 10.30. The porter came up to me at once quite eagerly: "Where do you want to bring those?" "To the Children's Wards. Where are they?" "Oh! all right! Go up to the first landing, and you will find the —— Ward. There are children in it."

I found the ward, and three little girls were occupying it; the other beds were vacant. One child, Emily, was such a wee pet. She was sitting up in bed having a tea party, with a set of toy tea-things and a slice of bread and butter and sugar. I went over to her: "Would you like to have a dolly to come and have tea with you?" "Yes, oh yes! my own dolly broke her leg." "Well, here's one; isn't she pretty?" (a dear old fat wax doll, dressed with a red cloak over a white silk skirt). Emily cuddled her up snugly at once, and hush-a-by-babied her, and turned her all over, admiring the bow on her hair, the rosettes on her shoes, and above all the beautifully embroidered under-clothing. She was such a dear little bright child, and seemed perfectly happy with her new possession.

Next Emily lay a little girl named Clara; she got a doll too, and a mustard box covered with pictures. Her little face brightened up as she took her presents, but she looked so ill, poor child, that we agreed that the doll should have a rest on her new mother's pillow. The other little girl got a doll too, and I told her of the Lord Jesus, who inclined other little girls to make sick children happy.

The "Sister" told me there was another ward upstairs with children in it; and one of the nurses came with me along the corridors and up the stairs. Such a pretty ward it was, with pictures and flowers and birds painted round the walls; and when I went in with the toys I got many a welcome. The ward was full. A boy at the far end was sitting up in bed, with a cage over his limbs. I had a train with me, and brought it over to him. "I've broke my leg, I have," he said, while he and I took the train out of the bag, and arranged the engines and carriages on his table. He was pleased. Then all the girls had dolls. There was one nice doll's bed, and I gave it to the eldest girl; and when the dolls in the ward get tired, she is going to give them a rest in it.

One dear child, Ambrose, was lying back in his little cot; he was very thin and weak. I brought him three boxes, and we shook them and guessed what could be inside, and then took off the lids, and looked at the pictures. "Do you love Jesus, Ambrose?" I said. "Yes; He died for us." "Who is 'us'?" "Little children. He loves us. I think of Him." "Yes, and when I go to church," said a convalescent girl, who came round with me to the cots, "I hear all about God, I do."

I then went off to another ward, where I heard there were some more children. I found two; one had just had her leg cut, and the sister said, "Perhaps you will give her something; she has been so very brave." So she got two dollies, and I sat on the side of the bed and heard all about the pains and aches. Next her lay a dear little child, whose foot had lately been taken off; and as I had not many dolls left I told her she should have her choice of them all. She chose accordingly the one which pleased her best, and then I asked where there was any mother in the ward who would like a toy for a child at home. Nearly every adult had some little friend. "Two little girls," "three little sisters;" "I have a little boy, miss." So the little boy got a pair of cuffs for next winter.

The boxes covered with pictures were so much liked, and you cannot think how the children brightened up over their presents. They showed them to the doctors, and talked to one another across the wards about them. It was such happy work! I wish you could have been there yourself, and the givers of the toys, too.

Who would like to help in the work of supplying comfort and healing for the sick bodies and souls of little ones in England and in foreign countries; or would like to read more about them? Those who wish to do so can have books, papers, and information on application to the Secretary of the Children's Medical Missionary Society, 47, Endell-street, London, W.C.

THE ORPHAN GIRL.

O Father of all forsaken, take pity on me, I pray;
I look to thy loving-kindness, alone in the world to-day,
Bereft of father and mother, who have passed to the better land:
Oh, list to my supplication, and lead me by the hand!

Ah me, when I think it over, the happy life we led Until that sorrowful morning they told us he was dead,
My strong, brave-hearted brother, who in the war was slain;
And our grey-haired father and mother were ne'er the same again.

Morning and noon and evening, she sat by the cottage door,
With dim eyes weeping and longing for him who would come no more,
Until, in the dreary autumn, she could no longer wait,
And passed from us to meet him within the golden gate.

Ah, father, loving and tender, he loved me well, I know,
But his heart was crushed and broken; he sank beneath the blow;
He always seemed to be searching for something he could not find:
So long they had walked together, he could not stay behind.

Alone in the world, O Father! 'Tis hard and cold they say;
In trial and temptation, be Thou my help and stay!
Bereft of father and mother, to Thee alone I plead;
O Father of all forsaken, be with me in my need.

My father, mother, and brother, they rest with Thee above;
And I, thine earthly orphan, I rest me in thy love;
I go as Thou wilt lead me, upon thy will I wait,
Until Thou bidst me join them within the golden gate.

SUNDAY IN THE NURSERY.

Under the care of a wise Christian mother, Sundays were associated in the minds of her children as holy, and also very happy days. Our "Sunday" picture-book and dissected pictures were always put away during the week, so that they came out with a fresh charm on that day. Our parents also made it a special day to us by allowing us to be more in their company at meals, and allowing us a little variation from the plain nursery diet. As we grew old enough to attend divine service we were always taught to look upon it as a special privilege, and were never forced to go against our will. Only once do I remember objecting, and immediately the little cape and bonnet were laid aside, and I had to remain in the nursery with the nurse and baby for a long, lonely morning, bitterly repenting the foolish speech that excluded me from the treat of joining the older ones.

The hour or two devoted by our parents to hearing us repeat our little hymns and texts, and in telling us "Bible stories," will ever be amongst the happiest recollections of our childhood. In summer time our father used to take us a quiet little stroll round the garden, or down the lane, and point out to us some of God's beautiful works, explaining the value and use of many of his creatures which are too often looked upon as objects of disgust, to be killed or tortured. As we grew older we thoroughly enjoyed copying out texts into a little book, and from that we soon learnt to take pleasure in finding all the passages we could under one heading (as "love," "children," "shepherd"), and arranging these in our little albums. I have found children take a (hitherto) inexhaustible delight in arranging a book with a picture pasted on each page, the texts applicable to the subject to be printed neatly below. Thus ordinary subjects are made to teach sweet lessons that will never be lost, and the scrap-albums when completed may often be found useful in brightening the hours of some invalid. Thus the little worker, seeing that his efforts have been of real use, is encouraged to begin another and another album.

Some of our little ones have found employment for many happy hours in preparing text-holders for a Hospital Flower Mission; and it is surprising how soon the little hand that has learnt to form printed letters will be able to copy a text boldly and legibly between lines ruled for it. This employment is additionally fascinating if an occasional holiday can be spent in the woods, and a hamper of flowers gathered by the same busy little fingers can accompany the texts to their destination. Should some of these employments seem of too secular a character, I would ask friends to consider that the little active mind and body—good gifts of the Creator—must both be supplied with employment, or they will suffer. Have we not all come across sad instances of children who have been restrained from all active pursuits on Sundays, learning to dislike it as the most miserable day in the week, and eventually throwing off that restraint, have rushed into an utter disregard of all sacred associations with the day? May we not put employments, such as I have hinted at, before our little ones, in a spirit which will lead them on in the footsteps of Him who went about doing good, so that the day set apart for the remembrance of his goodness may indeed be the happiest and brightest of all.—Woman's Work.

IRISH EVANGELISATION SOCIETY.

THE report of this Society's excellent work during the past year is one of very great interest. The committee and evangelists represent various sections of the Christian Church in Ireland, and the Society bands together those who feel that the salvation of the perishing is a work in which Christians should show a united front.

The following extracts from the recently issued Report will give a fair estimate of the importance and value of a work which gains admittance into many quarters where the simple Gospel is heard for the first time :—

"A district of country called Cross Hill, studded with farm-houses, has been wonderfully blessed by God during these services; in the first house as you go up the hill a wild young man has yielded to Christ, and in the second, about 100 yards distant from the first, two or three have professed to find Christ, and an old man of ninety years of age is deeply anxious. Pass another 100 yards or so, and a tailor addicted to drink and his brother have found peace; a short distance further we find three rejoicing in sins forgiven, one an old man; a little distance from this another old man found a refuge in the Saviour; on the top of the hill is a little colony of houses, and as far as I can learn nearly all have been converted; and this is not all, for just on the opposite slope of the hill an old man discovers, after attending church, as he said, fifty years, that he is all wrong, though thinking he was right; his wife was also led into the light.

"During the past month we have indeed had showers of blessing. Our second Sabbath service was held on the green, adjoining the hall, at 4.30, attended by not less than 1200 people, and many came from considerable distances; last Sunday's meeting was announced for 4.30. The hall was crowded to suffocation at 3.30. It was Mr. Peatt's evening for speaking; service commenced at 4 o'clock; and he gave a most beautiful address to young converts. Those who were unfortunate enough to be outside waited patiently until the first service was ended, then as the people left by one door, outsiders crowded in at the other. Mr. Clark gave a most stirring address at the second meeting. There were still great numbers outside; we were obliged to hold a third meeting, and the hall was closely packed. For six hours there was not even standing room.

"At Dromara, co. Down, meetings were held by two of the evangelists for some weeks. Some time after this the Secretary was asked by the Rev. W. J. Patton to send evangelists again, and upon his declining to do so after so short an interval, a petition was sent him signed by 2300 persons, entreating the Society to do so. Such an invitation could not be resisted, and at the close of the second series of meetings, Mr. Patton, whose own earnest work in the North of Ireland is so well known, wrote: 'I think I should write you about the two series of meetings held here by your Society's evangelists. The attendance at all the meetings was remarkably good. The whole country for two or three miles round seemed stirred. Persons of all the Protestant denominations attended. A great many persons who usually go to no place of worship attended, especially on week nights. Many of them have not clothes to go on Sabbath. This class was certainly reached and benefitted. The addresses were sound and Scriptural.'"

Mr. James Barton, Dundalk, as hon. secretary, concludes the report by asking the prayers of the Lord's children that the Holy Spirit may continue, and increasingly, to use this agency for the winning of souls for Christ; that fields prepared of the Lord may be opened for the work; that men of power, and men of prayer, may be raised up as preachers; and that means may be supplied for carrying on the work of the Society.

MR. W. FORBES conducted a three days' Gospel Temperance Mission last week at Finsbury-park Hall. Ministers of the neighbourhood took part in the meetings. Among those who signed the pledge were some notorious drunkards.

Whitsuntide Conference at Kilburn Hall.

AN interesting conference, embracing large and enthusiastic afternoon and evening gatherings of Christian workers and converts, chiefly in connection with the Evangelistic Mission, was held at Kilburn Hall on Bank Holiday, the 2nd inst. The meetings were of a highly representative character, Christian assemblies in various parts of the metropolis and its suburbs showing fellowship by the presence of friends connected with them, while there must have been many persons present from country places.

After songs of praise and prayer, Mr. J. DENHAM SMITH gave an address on seven desirable aspects of Christian life and walk. Remembering (specially in connection with the Lord's death); Purifying, 1 John iii. 2—4; Holding, Rev. ii. 24, 25; Comforting, 1 Thess. iv. 16—18; Hastening, 2 Peter iii. 12; Ministering, 1 Cor.; Abiding, 1 John ii. 28.

Mr. RUSSELL HURDITCH remarked that while, by God's grace, believers hold the truth, it also holds them. It might be that our efforts shall be used to bring in the last soul Christ and the Church are waiting for, to complete his body.

After an interval for tea, the evening meeting was opened with prayer, and Mr. HENRY GROVES spoke upon John xvi. 7. Knowledge of the truth in the love of it is attained only by the teaching of the Holy Ghost, and experience comes through the tribulation which worketh patience. Knowledge, without the power of love, is utterly profitless; but though we be slow learners, we shall make divine knowledge our own by personal experience, if we be taught by the Spirit, who is a listener in heaven and a speaker upon earth. God's promises cannot fail where there is a due observance of his precepts. May the truth of the "little while" of verse 6 be impressed upon us all by the Holy Ghost.

Mr. W. R. LANE pointed out thankfulness as helpful to true success in service, and that all Paul's epistles, except one, begin with expressions thereof. Mr. G. A. COLMAN pointed out that the extra blessing of our times brings with it extra responsibility. Mr. STEVENSON, of the China Inland Mission, said that China is now everywhere open to the Gospel and the natives are becoming very teachable. Of seventy new missionaries required God has given forty-nine. Who will fill up the ranks? Mr. HURDITCH mentioned that it was in Kilburn Hall the late Mr. Macdonald received his call to China. Mr. GEORGE HUCKLESBY referred to four characteristics of God's servants—Expectancy (John xxi. 22), Activity (Luke xix. 13), Stability (Rev. ii. 25), Obedience (1 Cor. xi. 26).

As three precious souls were brought into liberty at the last Bank Holiday meeting, Mr. Hurditch asked for silent prayer prior to an address by Mr. CHARLES INGLIS, to the unconverted, on the subject of the coming of the Son of Man to seek and save the lost. Thus closed the times of refreshing, and overflowing cups from the words of comfort and counsel by the Holy Ghost through God's servants present at these happy gatherings.

THE RATCLIFF STRANGERS' REST.—A goodly number of workers and friends met together on Friday, June 6, for the monthly gathering. Mr. Isaac, Hon. Sec., in briefly reporting progress, stated that there was abundant cause for thanksgiving in the conversion of men to God. Reference was also made to the recent departure of a sailor, brought to the Lord at the Rest, for foreign Mission work. The distribution of bags of Gospel books and good literature goes on steadily, as many as 1500 having been sent away last year. At the open-air services the attention paid to the Gospel message by many of the most godless of both sexes is truly encouraging. In addition to meetings held every afternoon and evening and Bible-classes for English-speaking seamen, the Gospel is daily preached both to Scandinavians and Germans in their own tongue, as well as to men of other nationalities. An address was then given by Mr. Denham Smith on "The Christian, his calling and destiny;" it was well fitted to stimulate the workers to renewed zeal and to a higher appreciation of the privilege of winning souls.

Rev. George O. Barnes in London.

THE Rev. George O. Barnes, "the Kentucky Evangelist," has for some weeks past been preaching in the far East of London. He is now at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road. Mr. Grattan Guinness has listened to his preaching in Bromley and Stratford, and has gone fully into the question of his views with him in private. The result is a pamphlet, entitled "The Heresy taught by the Rev. G. O. Barnes, the Kentucky Evangelist; exposed and answered by H. Grattan Guinness." Published by Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton.

Mr. Guinness says that Mr. Barnes preaches "a false, one-sided view of the character of God, a view which denies his justice, and pours contempt and hatred on his righteous judgments, wholly confounding them with the works of the devil."

Mr. Barnes is a very incisive preacher, and sets forth much important truth in a way very attractive to his present audiences. His sermon on Friday night was on Gen. xxiv., and he traced the typical teaching of that chapter with force and clearness. There were a few passages, however, in his address which evidently pointed in the direction indicated by Mr. Guinness, and it is manifest to us that a false view of God and of Satan underlies all his conceptions of the Gospel, which is not the less dangerous because there is so much that is true in his general preaching.

Two passages in his discourse were specially objectionable. One in which, after speaking of Abraham (type of the Father) sending forth Eliezer (the Spirit) to seek a bride for Isaac (the Son), he applied to God the words of Abraham: "Thou shalt not take a wife unto my son of the daughters of the Canaanites among whom I dwell." This, he said, taking the Canaanites to represent wicked spirits, showed that Satan was still in heaven. He did not know which heaven; Paul spoke of a third heaven, and he supposed there were at least seven; but at all events the devil was there somewhere. The implication, though not definitely asserted, was that as Abraham dwelt among the Canaanites, so God dwelt among the wicked spirits typified by them.

The other specially objectionable statement was that when he was a young pastor, not knowing as much as he does now, he visited a mother who had lost her son, and sought to comfort her with such platitudes as "The Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away." But the woman's eyes flashed, and she said, "Young man, I don't doubt you mean well, but you had better go." The idea conveyed was that the devil, not God, had taken away her son. And in speaking afterwards to a young disciple of Mr. Barnes, we found that the notion behind that was, that God could not help it: and that if He could help it, and did not, we do not want such a God. But those who have passed that way of sorrow know that the only comfort for a bereaved and breaking heart is not to gnash our teeth and say, "The devil did it," but to lay our head on God's bosom and say, "He hath both spoken unto me, and Himself hath done it." "I was dumb; I opened not my mouth, because Thou didst it."

The want of home training, the obsoleteness of systematic catechetical instruction, the absence of definite teaching of elementary and foundation truth from the pulpit, the general indifference, and even scepticism, as to eternal realities—all these combine to render the young of all classes peculiarly accessible to subtle and plausible error; and all who fear God, and revere truth, and love souls, must be on their guard against it, lest inexperienced and unstable souls be led practically to question whether God or Satan is the present governor of the world.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week :—June 15, Acts ix. 32—43; June 16, Acts x. 1—16; June 17, Acts x. 17—33; June 18, Acts x. 34—48; June 19, Acts xi. 1—18; June 20, Acts xi. 19—30; June 21, Acts xii. 1—12.

Notes and Comments.

MR. SANKEY sails with his family to-day (Thursday), from Liverpool for New York. He is much improved in health but not yet fully restored. We heartily commend them to the prayers of our readers.

We are glad to learn that the Midland Railway Company have decided to provide their servants with refreshments, consisting of tea, coffee, soup, bread, &c., at a cheap rate, at those refreshment-rooms which are under their management. We trust this commendable example will be followed by other companies; amongst no class of employés is sobriety more important than those into whose hands thousands daily entrust their lives.

One of the saddest features of London outcast life is the ever-growing number of young people who are homeless, and who as a consequence are compelled to prowl about the streets by day, sleeping in threepenny lodging-houses, or on doorsteps and staircases, or in cellars and passages, by night. School Boards, Sanitary Inspectors, and Police are alike powerless to cope with this aspect of affairs, which assumes larger proportions every week. No wonder that vice and crime fasten upon these hapless victims of overcrowding, and that they are too often driven to courses of life utterly opposed to virtue and honesty. What is to be done? Christian benevolence and philanthropic effort are nobly exercised, but the evil is beyond the power of these potent forces to remove. Homes at rents within the means of all are a sine quâ non, and at present our political economy and our social sympathies seem equally at fault in meeting the need.

The Mildmay Conference is coming on apace. Having regard to the wide range of Christian union which it covers, and the far-reaching influence exerted by its various assemblies, our readers do well to give it a prominent place in their prayers for Divine blessing and guidance. Nowhere is the true brotherhood of believers more recognised, or the spiritual fellowship of Christ's disciples more earnestly aimed at, than in these annual Conferences. The subject chosen for this year's consideration is "The Knowledge of God, as the special duty and privilege of his people." Increase in this divinest of all sciences is of incalculable importance alike to the practical and experimental welfare of the Church. The Lord grant a gracious anointing of his Holy Spirit to all who take part in the coming assembly.

Monaco, with its infamous Monte Carlo, so justly denounced for its gambling hells, appears not only to receive the benediction of the Romish Church, but is expressly forbidden by the authorities to allow any religious liberty within its area. According to a letter in the Record of May 30, no one is permitted to circulate the Word of God, or distribute religious tracts, permission, even if asked for, being refused. No Protestant Church can be opened, or private Bible-reading held by the Christian resident or visitor; the Roman Curia exercises its vigilance and authority to keep out from a spot notorious for vice, all influences other than its own, calculated to arouse conscience and save souls from perdition. Yet this same Church demands and enjoys full liberty for zealous propagandism in other lands.

Mr. Moody has decided to hold a week's services, exclusively for men, commencing on Sunday evening next. It is hoped that the converts from all the other districts will rally round him in an endeavour to gather in their unsaved brethren. We also commend the effort to the attention of mothers who are desirous for the salvation of their sons.

M. Ernest Renan has just published a new book entitled "Nouvelles Etudes d'Histoire Religeuse." In the preface he expresses his delight that the twenty-five years which have elapsed since he published his first "Studies" have been years of rapid progress in unbelief as to supernatural facts, and rejoices that theses for which he was anathematised then, are now accepted even in religious circles as laws for all honest minds. He says "the human race is getting to pray less and less, because it knows that no prayer has ever been followed by a result." He is certainly right when he asserts the rapid growth of refined scepticism, but we altogether deny the truth of his statement that belief in the power of prayer is waning, or the results of prayer less manifest. Never was the power of prayer more manifest by direct results, or more realised by multitudes of believers, than at the present time.

Applications come in from all sides on behalf of the various Missions which desire to provide a day's enjoyment in the country to the juvenile inhabitants of our crowded city areas. Could our friends see the conditions under which those exist for whom this charity is sought, and the happiness which accrues from the day's outing, they would need no pressure to render all the aid in their power to so deserving an object. Earnestly would we commend these appeals to the generous sympathy of our readers, and urge that speedy supplies be sent to augment the funds which we have in hand.

The following plea on behalf of the children under the care of the Ragged School Union adds weight to our entreaty. The responses that have come to our previous appeals this season have not, as yet, been anything like adequate to the need.

"Sir,—May I repeat my customary appeal to your readers at this season of the year, in aid of a fund to provide the committee with the means of giving the poor children of many of the Ragged Schools a day's enjoyment in the country. In addition to the day's holiday, it is proposed to give a fortnight's change of air to the few convalescent or enfeebled children specially needing it. The number who will thus obtain this great moral and physical benefit, as well as the extended holiday, must depend upon the response to this appeal, which I earnestly commend to your generous sympathy. "Shaftesbury."

The orphans of Sunderland have come in for an unusual meed of good fortune as many would term it, of special providential regard as we would prefer to speak of it. Under the will of Mr. Geo. Hudson, of Monkwearmouth Grange, the sum of £200,000 has been set aside for the maintenance, clothing, and education of orphan children belonging to that town. Such a benefaction rarely falls to the lot of any one class in a provincial town, and to no class could it be more beneficially applied than to those deprived of all parental care. Of such God has said, "Leave thy fatherless children, I will preserve them alive." In various ways does He carry out his merciful promise, all through the ages. We trust the testator's intention will be faithfully carried out.

The Society of Friends in Great Britain continues, although noiselessly and without obtrusiveness, not only to carry on its work of true Christian philanthropy, but also to increase in numerical strength. The statistical statement just made up shows that its total membership is now 15,219. There is abundant room in this lax and luxurious age for the testimony borne by this estimable body of Christians against worldly conformity, and in favour of spiritual devotion to the work of God. Ever foremost in the van of religious liberty and genuine goodwill to men, society generally may be congratulated on the permanence and advancement of their influence as a religious community.

At one of the meetings of the Free Church Assembly just closed, Mr Iverach, of Aberdeen (author of "Is God Knowable?"), made a suggestion well worthy of attention. Giving it as his opinion that in many cases the working classes of our great cities are only getting caricatures of Christianity, he asked why the Church should not set forth—not merely in fervent appeal, but in real statement—the organic truth of Christianity, by her wisest and noblest and best men? That there is need of a more intelligent setting forth of the foundation truths of the Gospel, few will deny. Not for the sake of controversy, not with the wisdom of words, but with sound Biblical exposition and clear statement of truth, should the vain but often powerful reasonings of men against the Gospel be met. Declamation is not enough in these days to convince men who are being trained more and more to think for themselves. We do not want less direct evangelistic fervour, but there is room for more intelligent exposition of the vital truths of revelation.

At the Conference on the Dwellings of the Poor, held in the Royal Albert Hall last week, Dr. C. B. Longstaff gave some important as well as curious information as to the population of London. This, he said, grows at the rate of 56,000 a year, or 150 persons a day. 125,000 are born every year, and about 80,000 die, leaving a natural increase of 123 per diem. The most numerous of the working classes are domestic servants, of whom there are 301,188, five-sixths of them women. Next in order are builders' employés, numbering 42,366. Printers number 26,226, and railway servants 21,951. Overcrowding, which is so sore an evil, can only be prevented by lessening the population, or at any rate, preventing its further increase, to which end Dr. Longstaff argues emigration should be urged on country residents rather than on Londoners. Some 200 people come up from the country to settle in London every week. These ought rather to go abroad.

Judging from the reports of the British and Foreign Unitarian Association meetings just held in London, Unitarianism in England is by no means in a flourishing condition. Progress was noted in America, Hungary, and Australia, but in England the prospect was spoken of as by no means bright. Complaint was made that the doctrines of the Atonement, the Trinity, and the infallibility of the Bible, were being taught to the large majority of children, sectarian education being stronger to-day, it was said, than it was ten years ago. It is a good feature of national education that it should set up an acknowledged barrier against the advance of the bare and lifeless creed which reduces the Son of God and Saviour of men to the level of a mere human teacher and social reformer.

The onslaught made by Rev. Stopford A. Brooke upon the fundamental doctrines of the Christian faith, in his sermon at the anniversary of the Unitarian Association the other day, serves to mark him off as wholly severed from orthodox belief. His denial of the incarnation and resurrection of our Lord was so emphatic, and his protest against vicarious atonement so strong, that there can henceforth be no doubt as to the cause he has espoused. It is well that men who have so entirely abandoned their old moorings should be known in their true standing, although it is with deep regret the spectacle is beheld of those once ranked with believers in the Christian faith, now active in denying its claims.

In reference to the late discussion on Dr. Kinns' work, "The Scientific Accuracy of the Bible," we have received a testimony in favour of his position in the controversy, signed by Lord Shaftesbury, the Lord Mayor, and others. The document also calls attention to other letters from several eminent scientists, testifying to the ability Dr. Kinns has displayed as an author. We have not taken sides in the discussion hitherto, and, therefore, content ourselves with chronicling this fact, without prejudice in favour of either Dr. Kinns or his critics.

Our readers are aware that our good Nestorian friend, Deacon Abraham, of Oroomiah, Persia, is now on a second visit to this country, desiring to elicit the sympathy of English Christians on behalf of his deeply interesting work among orphans. Those who may have an opportunity of hearing the Deacon tell his story of progress in Christian work in his far-off Asian home, will do well to embrace it. He is accompanied on this occasion by his eldest son, who purposes devoting some time to the study of the English language. The present address of the Deacon is 36, Gloucester-street, Queen's-square, W.C.

Temperance principles are so deeply rooted in the State of Iowa that by a majority of some thirty thousand the people have adopted an amendment to the Constitution, forbidding the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors therein, and directing the legislature to provide for carrying it into effect. The authority of the legislature to do this has, however, been called in question, and it seems doubtful whether the Constitution of the United States allows any one State to enact a law of so strictly a prohibitory character. The point is an important one, and the result of the inquiry concerning it will be watched with interest by friends of Temperance on both sides the Atlantic.

The progress being made in the moral and intellectual elevation of the freedmen of the Southern States is exceedingly gratifying. Reports of religious and educational movements among them are full of encouragement and promise. In spite of this, the prejudices of the white people against the negroes, are still strong and slow to give way, as is evidenced by the refusal to allow coloured persons to ride in the same cars with the whites. The testimony of a writer in the Chicago Advance is, however, that there is a growing conviction in the South that the railroad authorities should, as an act of simple justice, give equal accommodation to all who pay the same price. The common brotherhood of man is a lesson some people find it hard to learn, and harder still to practise.

With very great regret and sympathy with our dear brother, we have received the following. We commend Dr. Barnardo and his faithful helpers to the care of God, and to the prayer and sympathy of his brethren, whose almoner he is:—

"Dear Friend,—With great sorrow of heart, I have to announce that scarlet fever in a mild form has again appeared at our Village Home. About nine cases are already declared and one or two fresh cases occur daily. At any moment the outbreak may become more serious, both as regards the numbers affected and the gravity of the disease. We are, as you may imagine, taking every precaution that wisdom and knowledge of the disease can suggest, but I would earnestly ask for the believing prayers of the readers of The Christian that the epidemic may be stayed, if God will. Four years ago God mercifully heard and answered prayer in a similar state of things, so that out of seventy-one taken ill not one died. Now I would entreat the daily prayers of God's remembrancers. With an absolutely empty purse, such a visitation is peculiarly trying, for it always leads to much expense. You may imagine, therefore, with how heavy a heart I write, for our bank account has been overdrawn for weeks!

"Yours very truly in Christ's service,
"Thos. J. Barnardo."

The Early Closing movement calls for general public co-operation, and ought not to call in vain. Late shopping, except in very rare cases, is altogether unnecessary, and inflicts hardship on a large and deserving class of the community. The public have it largely in their own hands to bring about the desired reform, and we would exhort every one of our readers to do all in their power, both by example and precept, to help it forward. Tradesmen would find public sympathy far more with them than they seem to think, if they made a stand themselves for the principle of justice which is involved.

Truth, which is a journal representative of worldly sentiments rather than those of the Christian Church, has lately commented on the inconsistency of ladies who do their own shopping early in the day, sending out their servants for that purpose in the evening, thereby not only helping to keep up the system of late closing, but also exposing the girls themselves to many temptations. There needs to be more thought and care exercised all round in order to the securing such ends as are desirable in the interests of social morality.

The subject chosen by the Rev. Edward White as Merchants' Lecturer for the current month is one of unusual originality and freshness. It is "The Laws and Limits of Responsibility," and includes the general doctrine of liability for the consequences of our action and neglects; the moral law of partnerships; compensation and punishment; and pardon, not impunity. In the first lecture Mr. White dealt with the 21st, 22nd, and 23rd chapters of Exodus, which he said consisted of detailed applications to actual life of the general principles of the ten commandments, specially of the laws of the second table. He dwelt at length on the too much neglected truth that human action carries with it results of enormous magnitude to our fellow-creatures, and therefore involves responsibilities of appalling import. Nothing, as he said, is more difficult than to raise in most men's minds a vivid sense of the wide-spreading results of their character and conduct. Such a review of personal and social responsibility as these lectures include is of highest importance, and calculated to be productive of great good.

Next Lord's Day being Hospital Sunday, a word in reference to the funds of these institutions is timely and necessary. University College Hospital, for which a special plea has just been made by the Lord Mayor, will be compelled to lessen its operations if help is not afforded, and so with some others. Lack of funds on the part of charities so indispensable as these is deeply to be regretted. Not only by unexampled generosity of gift to the collections of next Sunday, but by widespread liberality and regular subscriptions from all parts, let us hope these national charities will be made increasingly effective.

"Evil communications corrupt good manners." The Sword and Trowel for this month contains a specially useful article by Mr. Spurgeon on the influence of company, in which he rebukes the craving there is in certain minds after what is called "admission to society." His words are of admirable import when he says: "We are so much under the influence of our comrades in life's battle that we dare not enter a regiment whose traditions are ignoble; we need to unite with the best, and rally to the most glorious banner. We are none too good when aided by the most helpful associates; we can none of us afford to be deteriorated by ill connections. The mountain of life must be scaled; crevasses, chasms, precipices, must be encountered. Almost without exception we must be roped together in this mountaineering; let the wise man accept only as his partners those who will pursue the ways of faith and virtue, for with these only will he reach the summit."

The sixth and last of the series of articles on Lay Service, by Mr. J. Van Sommer, in the Y.M.C.A. Record, is entitled "Delivering Addresses;" it contains, like the previous papers, some valuable suggestions and information. The six papers are republished in one pamphlet by Messrs. Shaw & Co., price 2d.

In a letter to The Glasgow Herald, Mr. William Quarrier, of 318, St. Vincent-street, Glasgow, states that he has resolved to double the accommodation at the Scottish Orphan Homes under his care. He has been moved to do this by the daily increasing number of perishing children who seek admission. The cost of this large extension of his work Mr. Quarrier estimates at £40,000. Doubtless the numerous friends throughout the country who are conversant with the past achievements of this truly noble institution will be glad to second our friend in this further effort.

We acknowledge with thanks the many responses which our readers have made to our request for a poem on Prayer. By far the greater number have sent us Montgomery's well-known and beautiful hymn, "Prayer is the soul's sincere desire."

The opening of a new room in the British Museum, devoted to Semitic inscriptions and antiquities, will be welcomed by very many to whom the study of Oriental history is a delight. A series of inscribed monuments, dating from the tenth century before to the thirteenth century after the Christian era, has been arranged in a separate chamber, and in order to completeness, casts of valuable inscriptions preserved in Continental museums have been added to originals possessed by our own authorities. The evidence to the truth of Bible records and to the leading facts of Christianity afforded by the "Stone Witnesses" which have come to light in recent times, is so striking that such a collection is of more than ordinary value and interest to Bible students.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

Where are you Going?—I.

By LADY HOPE.

A YOUNG man is standing at the corner of a street. He has walked down that street briskly enough, threading his way through the crowds that throng the pavements, ever passing and repassing on their way. At the end of the street he has made a sudden halt, and seems to be hesitating as to whether he shall turn his steps, when he is suddenly accosted by another man, who might be a year or two older than himself.

"Whither are you bound?" he asks.

"Whither am I bound?" says the first. "Upon my word, I don't know. Where have you been all this time? I haven't seen you—well, for ages. Remember the fun we used to have down the river together? Harry Ardent we used to call you. But that was not your real name, was it?"

"Yes, it was," said the other. "And what have you been about since those days? It does seem a long time since we met."

"Me? Oh, I have been just the same—slaving away at the old office till six o'clock generally, and then down to the 'Ball and Racket' (which you may perhaps remember in the far-off past) for my supper; and then off for some fun somewhere or other in the evening. There is always something going on—that is the best of this dingy old city. I declare city life would kill me off in no time if there were not always 'something up' that I could turn to. As it is, I have a jolly enough life—as jolly as most people have, that is to say. But you have never answered my question. What have you been doing all this time?"

"Oh, don't expect me to answer such big questions all in a breath. In the meantime we are walking on ever so far from the corner where you were standing. Which way are you going?"

"To tell the truth, I hadn't quite made up my mind. Shall we take the oars and go up the river? We have not had a pull together for a long time."

"I can't; for I am bound in another direction. If you like to come with me, that will be another thing. I shall be delighted to have your company."

"Where are you going?"

As this question was asked, the two men stood still, and faced one another. Burnett's cigar was in his mouth, and a short cane in his hand. For the first time he appears to notice that the accessories carried by his friend are of a different nature. At any rate, he opens his eyes and asks—

"What on earth have you got under your arm? I say, old chap, you have got a load!"

"A very light one!" Harry replies, smiling. "I have got so used to them, that I never know I am carrying them now."

"What are they all? Let us see!"

And immediately the young man shows in his two hands three books—a limp-covered Bible, with a strap round it; a copy with music of Sacred Songs and Solos, and a square, flat book, entitled The Christian Choir.

"What has come over you?" asks the other man. "Quite a theological library! and all carried under your arm too! I never saw such a thing in my life;" and he bursts into a hearty, genuine fit of laughter.

Ardent looks quietly at him, and smiles too. The man's fun is contagious.

"It must look very odd to you!" said Harry. "It is so long since we have met; and now when we turn up again, here you find me——"

"A regular divinity student!" said the other man. "What on earth has happened to you?"

"If you will come down to the Thames Embankment with me now, I will tell you exactly what has happened. But I have not time to wait any longer here."

"Oh! the Embankment! Now I begin to understand—to guess something. You have been infatuated, I do believe, by those two Americans. No word's bad enough for them. Regular downright ranters they are. I know all about them. I have seen their pictures selling for twopence apiece; and great big advertisements up everywhere. But really, now, I do declare, that if they have gone and done this—turned your head, I mean—they ought to be—— Well! you make me downright angry, you do."

"What is there about them that can make you angry?" Harry asks.

"What is there to make me angry? Why, their interference. What business have they to come and meddle with us—with our set, I mean—and take you right away from us? I could not conceive what had become of you. Can't they be content with all the old women, and the dowdy people, and the missionaries to the heathen, and all that lot, without coming down upon us? It is too bad, I declare it is! I wish they would come and try to convert me. I am ready for them. They would find it a pretty tough job, I can tell them. And to tell the truth, Harry, I should never have thought you would have let them convert you."

"How do you know they have converted me?" Harry replies.

"How do I know? Why, you look uncommonly like it," John Burnett replies.

"I told you that if you would come with me to the great iron building where they preach, I would tell you all about it; but I cannot stay here. Will you come?"

"I will walk a part of the way with you. Really, this is the best joke out. So, you acknowledge that they have converted you?"

"No, I deny it. They have not converted me."

"Oh, I say!" says Burnett, once more taking a good look at his friend. "You deny it, do you? What on earth makes you rush along in such a hurry, with all those books under your arm, then? and what makes you go near that low place down there? Why can't you go to church, if you want to be so religious?"

"You have never been in the iron hall, and yet you call it 'low.' I don't think that is fair. And after all, between ourselves, Burnett, some of the places we have frequented together, you and I, have not been the best of places, have they?"

His companion looks annoyed, and answers—

"Oh! if you are going to take to preaching yourself—which, by the way, is 'every man's trade' just now, I shall say good-bye."

"Not a bit of it," says Ardent. "If you are going to pass comments like this upon my resorts, it is but fair that you should give yourself the opportunity of judging of their truth. I should not like you to go and say to another man what you have just said to me."

"Oh! indeed no! I should not think of going in. But there is some hope yet for you, if you won't allow that they are converting you. Do you go there for fun, or what is it?"

"No, indeed, I don't go there for fun! I am in right good earnest about it."

"Well! so long as you don't get converted, and become a 'pious Christian,' I don't care. Come back amongst your old friends, and let us have some more jolly times together. And then you can tell us all about your experiences during the last three months."

"Stop a minute," says Ardent. "I am quite willing to tell my experiences. But I should like to tell them quietly. I don't want you to misunderstand me."

Mr. Sankey's Departure.

We have had, at last, to bid a final and very reluctant farewell to our dear friend and brother, Mr. Sankey. Since Whitsuntide he has been compelled again to relinquish his post, in deference to medical advice. He is, however, much improved in health, though not sufficiently so to resume his work. He has accordingly taken passage to his trans-Atlantic home, and sails with his wife and family from Liverpool to-day, the 12th inst. We know we have the hearty sympathy of all our readers in wishing him God-speed and fully restored health, as we unite in praise to the Giver of every good and perfect gift for the valued services which he has rendered, in so sweetly singing the Gospel, whereby multitudes have been persuaded to "let the Saviour in."

Many a time, too, has he materially helped the general warmth and interest of the meetings by a few pointed words of exhortation and of prayer, or a brief incident connected with the hymn he was about to sing. His kindly face, his genial manner, and humility of spirit, have gained for him a warm place in the heartfelt esteem of all who have had the privilege of a personal intimacy with him, while those who have been associated with him in leading the service of song in the various districts he has visited, will ever remember him with respect and affection. Having thus spent so much of his bodily strength in the service of the Lord, may he reap the promised blessing a thousandfold into his own bosom.

The Embankment Mission.

Despite the much deplored absence of Mr. Sankey, the meetings at the Embankment Hall have gone on with unvarying interest and success. The additional burden thrown on Mr. Moody has only served to bring out into strong relief the wonderful resources he has at command. The audiences have been composed, literally, of "all sorts and conditions of men." Being at a convenient distance from the fashionable parts of the town, the meetings have attracted not a few of those in the upper ranks of life. On the other hand, "the residuum" of society has not been unrepresented. To each and all the same Gospel of the Grace of God has been proclaimed, and many deeply-interesting scenes have been met with in the inquiry-room night by night.

One evening last week, after a very telling address from the words, "There is no difference," Mr. Moody held a conversation in the inquiry-room with Rev. Newman Hall, who was present, on the meaning of such elementary doctrines as Repentance, Faith, &c. A very large and attentive company of seekers listened to the dialogue, which proved most helpful in paving the way for personal talk.

LAST SUNDAY'S SERVICES.

The early meeting rejoiced the hearts of the Lord's people, as a continual influx of persons filled tier after tier of seats, until, with the exception of a few chairs on the far platform, the large hall was covered. One gets accustomed to see the busy neighbourhood of the embankment well thronged on week days with passengers and vehicles, but it presented a somewhat unusual aspect on the early Sabbath morning. There was a perfect dearth of conveyances, and yet the people were there; in groups of twos and threes they had wended their way to the iron tabernacle.

Nor were they ill-rewarded for their early attendance at the house of God, for with even more than his usual fire did the speaker expatiate upon the necessary qualifications for efficient service. The marked interest which the audience occasionally expressed in audible appreciation, showed how thoroughly they were enjoying it. Although the address was nominally for Christians only, Mr. Moody invited any unsaved ones to rise for prayer—a step not often adopted at this meeting; but the responses made to the request fully justified it.

At the close, Mr. Moody invited all the Christian men present to remain, and expressed his ardent desire to conduct a only, commencing on Sunday next, until the following Sunday, June 15—22. Excited by this suggestion, a chorus of "Amens!" rose from the assembly. "That is all very well," observed the speaker. "It is easy work to shout 'Amen!' and say 'Go on, Moody!' But I want you to do more—I want you to lead in this work. Who will promise to attend every evening?" A large number gave the requisite assurance, and promised to render all the assistance in their power to further this object. Several who could only attend two or three nights agreed to send substitutes on the others. "Now," said Mr. Moody, "it's your work; you go ahead, and I'll follow." We earnestly commend this new addition to the stated services of the Mission, to the earnest prayers of our readers.

SPECIAL WEEK OF SERVICES FOR MEN

The next hour and a-half were occupied in distributing tickets for the eleven o'clock service. It was a novel sight to see passers-by in Fleet-street and Ludgate-hill frequently accosted with the question, "Would you like to go and hear Mr. Moody?" and the invitations were, with very few exceptions, cordially received. The result of this canvassing was a hall full of nominal non-church-and-chapel-goers, who paid great attention as the speaker declared what Christ is to all who will receive Him—a Saviour from sin, the Way, the Truth, the Life, and the Light of the world. Many were bathed in tears, and the inquiry-room was soon filled with an anxious throng, seeking the way of life.

Most interesting cases are not infrequently found outside as well as within the inquiry-room. A pleasant-looking navvy, who was asked if he was serving the Lord, responded with unmistakable emphasis, "Yes, thank God, I am. I was converted ten weeks ago." "At these meetings?" "No, down at Camberwell, where I live, through the Salvation Army. I have walked from there to-day with my brother, whom I have brought here trusting that he may find the Lord. He's in the inquiry-room now, and I've been praying God to save him. I didn't know whether we should be able to get in without a ticket, but I asked the Lord to guide us, as my brother was anxious about his soul. He knew all about it, and has answered our prayer." After a few words of encouragement we left him, rejoicing in our hearts that the Lord is faithful in answering the prayers of his servants, even in comparatively little things.

The afternoon gathering of women was very full, numbers not being able to obtain admission; in the evening the men came out in such numbers that an open-air "overflow" was held in the street by Mr. Edward Trotter, assisted by a few members of the choir. Mr. Moody spoke very impressively upon confessing Christ, and at the close asked those men who were willing to do so to rise and remain standing, which was a greater cross to bear than simply rising and resuming their seats as usual. But a large number overcame all timidity, and like true men stood before their comrades as anxious to serve God. A goodly sight, indeed!

Before closing, Mr. Moody submitted his proposition regarding the Mission for men next week. Loud responses arose, and a forest of hands were uplifted before he had time fully to explain his object. But when this was done, nothing could have exceeded the evident pleasure with which the suggestion was received, so that due steps have accordingly been taken to carry it into effect.

The singing was conducted during the day by Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, who, it is hoped, will be able to continue until the Mission closes. They are assisted by several ladies, who have given their hearts and voices to the work.

Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins.

NORWOOD.

The interest created by a fortnight's Bible-readings lately given by Dr. Pentecost in St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Norwood, of which the Rev. Robert Taylor is pastor, excited a strong desire that he might give some purely evangelistic addresses in that district. When it became known that he was to give a series of such addresses from the second to the sixth of June, thanksgiving and prayer abounded among believers. Efforts to secure a larger place of meeting failed, so the addresses were given in St. Andrew's Church. A good half-hour was devoted to praise and prayer. Mr. Stebbins each evening gave two Gospel songs with much sweetness and effect.

Dr. Pentecost on successive nights opened up with great charm and fulness the Gospel of the grace of God, and always gathered up his expositions in a direct personal application and appeal that it was hard for any soul, at all anxious, to set aside. This was continued in the short after-meeting, when each night the effectual work of the Spirit was made manifest by the confession of some that they had found peace and joy in Christ. By the young and by the old, by school girls of tender age and by gray-haired men, the Saviour was joyfully accepted, and willing testimony was borne to the Lord.

The church was able to hold all that came till the Friday night, when every available space was occupied with chairs and forms, and the small gallery for the choir was filled. It has been a precious week to believers as well as to those who have been quickened. Mr. Taylor assisted in the work each evening; the other local ministers were unable to be present, but the meetings were composed of Christians from all the evangelical churches, with friends and neighbours whom they had influenced to come and hear the truth. It was a time of sweet fellowship and much rich and lasting blessing—a blessed foretaste to the believers of the time when clearer vision in the presence of the Lord will break down all the petty barriers of the present separation, and make apparent to all, what was so much realised in their meetings in Norwood, that believers are all one in Him.

Mr. Taylor is to have a meeting for the converts on the Wednesday evening, for testimony and for help. W. C.

THE MISSION AT ECCLESTON HALL.

By LADY HOPE.

Have we ever had so rich a season, with regard to spiritual helps by the way, as in this memorable year of 1884? God, in his great mercy and love to us, has sent across the ocean to our shores a whole band of messengers, and truly their message is from Him! Truly it is well carried! There is not a cut-and-dried sentence, a dull thought, a wasted word, in the teachings they give us. When we are with Mr. Moody, we see the glorious work of conversion going on with a reality and a rapidity that is almost impossible to follow. We can but watch and wonder, and praise too, for the waves of blessing that seem so suddenly to have overtaken us. But there is not only this glorious work, in all its arousing power, to be witnessed, and his heart-stirring addresses to be heard, and long, I hope, remembered. We have also the great privilege of hearing the most clear and explicit Scripture teaching from his friend and coadjutor, Dr. Pentecost. He has a special gift in building up Christians, strengthening them, feeding them, and presenting Scripture in a manner altogether his own.

While there is great simplicity in his method of expression, there is also great depth and much spiritual insight in his exposition. He has a rare power of imparting to the mind, as well as to the heart, the great truths of the Gospel. Amidst quaint illustrations not a few, and anecdotes quite thrilling in their beauty and pathos, we find the Word of God in its pure grandeur, brought down like a veritable sledge "hammer" upon the "rocks" of doubt and unbelief, shivering them as it falls.

We go there, with our "I thought this," and "I thought that," our difficulties, our flimsy cobwebs, like entanglements of hazy, misty speculation; and we find, to our surprise, that he knows them every one! He has thought them all out for us! He knows just the objection that is going to be raised before it comes! He has been troubled by the very same "objection" himself; but he has had it met! And he brings us to the trysting-point that he has found, and where he has himself obtained relief. He gets us into the attitude of prayer and faith there, and we are relieved. We leave that place with a burden rolled from off our shoulders. But a new burden is placed upon them! It is one of responsibility, of Christian position, of duty to God and duty to man, greater than ever—when the cavilling, doubting spirit has been silenced and in many cases entirely removed!

It is curious to find one's little pet theories of doubt and argument taken in another's hands, each held up to the light and exposed, till we are filled with shame and surprise, while we recognise ourselves as its owners, and then see it hurled to the ground, dashed in pieces, or torn to shreds. It was worthless after all; and yet we had made our boast of it. It had been our excuse, our shield, the screen that stood between us and God, and hindered our communion with Him; but we see it to be nothing—only a Dagon, that must fall sooner or later. It has fallen now, thank God!

Yet it is all-important to notice that while our mind, our heart, and our ear are pleased and delighted with the varieties brought before us by this singularly fresh and lucid teaching, there is no "hay or stubble" about it. There is but the one way of salvation put forth, even Christ Jesus Himself. Faith in Him, communion with Him, trust in Him—these are the doctrines taught. All Christ. Only Christ. Everything human, everything of self, is put in its true light. It is altogether sinful, most corrupt. It is "altogether vanity." Christ must be all in all. In these times of varied teaching, when our ear gets wearied, and our hearts ache, with the new ideas and extraordinary opinions that we hear every day, it is rest indeed to be allowed to "sit down under his shadow with great delight, and find his fruit sweet to our taste." If a commonplace simile may be used to describe in some measure Dr. Pentecost's teaching, this great preacher never leaves his one track, but he runs a vast number of trains upon it. He gives us an untold amount of new, fresh thought in our Bibles; but he never puzzles and distracts us with popular ideas, or new superstructures, or something here, and something there, out of his own head, or out of somebody else's head, but apart from Christ, and apart from his Word.

It is an interesting sight when you enter the Hall to see the crowd—their attention rivetted by the words that fall on their ear, and are so evidently entering their hearts. Ladies and gentlemen, servants and working men with their wives; business men, and those that serve them; all meet together, and receive the truth that is being taught to them, and enjoy it too, heartily, thoroughly; you can see this by their faces. In the afternoon the meetings are chiefly composed of ladies and gentlemen who have left their drives and calls, and other manifold engagements, that they may hear this strangely new, and yet delightful, exposition of the "Old, old Story," that sounds so sweetly to them.

Sometimes those who desire to give their hearts wholly to God are invited to "manifest it by rising," or by "coming forward," as an outward testimony that they are in earnest about the step they are taking. To this call there are many responses. Oh, what a wonderful sight! What a wonderful thought! Barriers breaking down! Hearts yielding to their Creator, their Lord, and owning Him as their Master, their Saviour!

One very important part of this work is the sweet singing that blends with the preaching, from time to time, adding strikingly to the effect of the words spoken. Mr. Stebbins sings delightfully, and some of the melodies he has given us, with their impressive words, will ever remain graven on our hearts.

Another correspondent writes: The afternoon lectures last week at Eccleston-street Hall were not announced in time to allow of much effort to make them known. But yet they seemed to rival the earlier meetings both in the numbers present, the interest awakened, and the results. It is particularly satisfactory to note that an increasing proportion of the audiences consisted of the class which these meetings are specially designed to reach. The mechanic and the peer have the same place in the love of God, but the spirit which led the apostle to become all things to all men will ever prompt us not only to beat up the highways and hedges, but to seek to break through the barriers with which wealth and station surround themselves. It is in this spirit that the system of "reserved seats" has been pursued in these meetings. And God has used it. Many have thus been induced to attend who were never seen before in meetings of the kind, and not a few whose names are known in society in London have professed, either openly or by letter, to have received the Gospel. Dr. Pentecost's ministry seems to have special acceptance with such.

The meetings will be continued during the current week, when Dr. Pentecost will preach daily (Saturday excepted) at half-past three, and again at eight o'clock; and meetings on the afternoon and evening of Sunday, the 15th, will bring the Mission at Eccleston-street to a close. That these final meetings may be abundantly blessed of God is the earnest prayer of many who have received blessing in the hall during the past month.

Holiday Work.

Derbyshire.—Miss Kelland, Primrose Cottage, Matlock Dale, writes describing the many opportunities there are, during the summer months at that beautiful holiday resort, for preaching the Gospel to the crowds who flock thither for health and recreation. She is very anxious that more should be done to reach these friends, and will be glad to communicate with any who can lend a hand in the work.

Southend.—I want to arrange for open-air services on the beach here. I can generally have some music and singing, but the visitors having come, our townspeople are so busy that they cannot assist in the speaking department. If any of your readers who purpose spending their holidays here are used to open-air work and will send me the dates of their visit and when they would help, I could manage the rest.

H. W. Childs, Baptist Pastor.
4, Queen's-road, Southend-on-Sea.

Westmoreland.—A time of real blessing was experienced at Kirkby Stephen at the Whitsun Hirings, when a united effort was made by the Christians of the district for the benefit of the hundreds of people who flock to these hiring fairs from every nook and corner of the hills and dales of this beautiful neighbourhood. The noise and din of the shows with their brass bands, &c., together with the attractions of the dancing room, public-house, ballad singers, &c., renders any ordinary Gospel preaching almost out of the question; recourse was therefore had to the help of a hearty, zealous band of Salvation Army soldiers from Penrith, who with their brass band, headed processions through the town, and succeeded in clearing large numbers of people off the streets into the Temperance Hall, where crowded meetings were held, and a most blessed time of refreshing was experienced by many of God's children. Mr. J. N. Carr, of Carlisle, threw himself heart and soul into the day's work, both in preaching outside and indoors, and in distributing books, &c., in the fair.

BECUANALAND.

FROM A SOUTH AFRICAN CORRESPONDENT.

[The following article is a little wide of our usual scope, and raises certain points with regard to native treatment on which our knowledge of the facts does not enable us to adjudicate. Being written, however, by an English missionary on the spot, we have deemed it worthy a place in our columns. It was written before the arrival of Mr Mackenzie on the scene of his new labours; we need hardly emphasize the request with which the article concludes.]

VERY deep interest naturally centres in the coming of the newly appointed British Resident for Becuanaland, and very deep interest will undoubtedly be manifested in the plans he developes and the course of action he carries out. This interest—equally deep in the minds of all parties—is of a very different character in different sections of South African society: and I suppose I may say the same to some extent of English society also.

To the Boer party and those whose sympathies are with them, the appointment is an unwelcome one. The main ground of their objection is the fact that Mr. Mackenzie has been a missionary. As far as this objection goes it is the old, old story, "once a priest always a priest;" it is urged as though the exercise of a man's highest powers in the service of God must of necessity unfit him for any other kind of useful work, and in an especial manner disqualify him for political and diplomatic appointments. No doubt much could be said on both sides, and even missionaries would, I think, say that the fewer of such changes the better, even for the interests of Mission work. The present, however, is a special case, and must be acknowledged to be so by all parties. The circumstances which led to the appointment are in themselves exceptional.

The expectations and hopes arising from the appointment have never been cherished before. Those who are best acquainted with the existing circumstances of the country, and those who know Mr. Mackenzie best, are deeply impressed with the necessity for a man specially qualified for the work that has to be done, and also with the fact that such a man has been, as it were, compelled to take the position by the force of circumstances. One cannot help feeling that if a weak-kneed brother had been chosen for the office, less importance would have been attached by some to his past history. At the same time, we can hope that the future judgment, even of the Boers themselves, will be influenced by measures rather than men; even they may have reason to rejoice that a sturdy Christian man has been appointed to do a work which will make special demands upon all the patience and perseverance and zeal and hope which any could possibly possess.

Before setting themselves to anticipate and look for the results of this new departure in Becuanaland, there are one or two points upon which I think the English public should modify the opinions which, from sundry indications, I fancy they now cherish. Much has been lately said about the main road to the interior. While one rejoices over the decision of the Government regarding the immediate future of Becuanaland, one cannot but feel regret that the necessity for keeping open a main road to the interior of Southern Africa seems to have been a much more powerful factor in the settlement of the case than any arising from higher claims and considerations. That large tribes of defenceless natives should be shut out from all hope of a helping hand from the Government of the Queen of England, and hemmed in by those whose past history as a people and personal proclivities point them out, to some extent at all events, as the natural enemies of such people, seemed a matter of but little importance. But when it was realised that one of the outlets for Manchester cotton, and Sheffield cutlery, and Birmingham guns, was in danger of being closed, then the nation in the persons of its representatives became excited, and no one could endure the idea of such a possibility.

After all, the importance of this road to the interior as a highway for commerce is more fancied than real. As a fact, the Transvaal already has the trade of the interior passing through it, and by liberally devised measures may retain it. I have just had an opportunity of talking this matter over with a gentleman who has long lived on the old road into the interior, and he confirms me in the opinion I before held, that the traffic on that road has for several years been small. A large proportion of the trade is now done with Natal, and of course passes through the heart of the Transvaal. Most of the wagons loaded up at Kimberley also pass through the Transvaal. That road is less heavy, and water is more abundant, and even many native wagons take that route by preference. Should the Transvaal succeed in getting a railway from Delagoa Bay, and should they be able as a people to move in any moderate degree with the age, that which was once the main road to the interior for commerce will never assume its old importance. Of course, none will regret this, inasmuch as it will imply progress among our neighbours; while the dangers arising from any possible proclivities in another direction will, by the new settlement, be fully provided for.

There is another opinion which needs a little correction before the English public will be prepared to study the future of Becuanaland intelligently. It is thought that the chief difficulties of the British Resident will arise from the Boer side of the new boundary line. Many of those who are well acquainted with the actual state of things doubt this. The very knowledge of the fact that the British Government has put its foot down has for the present settled the Stellaland and Goshen difficulty, as far as these communities are Republics of Europeans. It is the native difficulty which will test the powers of the new Resident to the utmost. The quarrels and divisions between the native tribes have been at the bottom of all that has occurred in these parts during the past few years, and they still exist and threaten to give trouble. When the English Government annexed Griqualand West in order to secure the Diamond Fields, one section of the Batlaping tribe looked on and acquiesced, while the country belonging of right to another section of the tribe was taken away from them. The wheel went round, and when it came to the turn of the acquiescing section of the tribe to become deprived of lands and cattle—also unjustly—the previous sufferers and their sympathisers thought it was now their turn to stand on one side and let things take their course. Some of those who had suffered in consequence of the Act of the British Government, and from what they regarded as treachery to the national interests on the part of some of their own people, joined the freebooters and land sharks on the latter occasion, while others maintained the position of independence they before enjoyed, and refused to move in any way.

Some of those whose friends lost their power by the English annexation, and fought with the vain hope of recovering it, were allowed to return as before to fountains outside the Griqualand West boundary line. During the last year these fountains have been given away to their European helpers by those who suffered most at the hands of the freebooters. This act is regarded by them as a just punishment upon those who refused to help them in their troubles; but to other sections of the tribe, and to other tribes of the Becuana nation also, the act will be attributed to a feeling of personal resentment, and the question is being widely asked, Even should the Boers come, could they do worse than some of our own countrymen are trying to do? As yet the occupants of these fountains have simply refused to move, and in some cases have driven away the European grantees; and one of the first acts of the President will necessarily be to grapple with this difficulty—a difficulty which may possibly become a far more serious source of danger than it seems at present.

Such are some of the matters awaiting the new Resident, and they are such as to give him a claim upon the sympathy of Christian people, and may cause complications which will need special prayer on his behalf and on behalf of the cause he has at heart.

Becuanaland, April 2, 1884.

THE GOSPEL IN FRANCE.

NOYON, THE BIRTHPLACE OF CALVIN.

PASTEUR CADOT, of Chauny, Aisne, France, writes hopefully concerning his efforts to re-introduce the Gospel in its native purity into the benighted district which gave birth to the great Reformer, but from which the last trace of Protestantism was driven with himself. The completeness of the victory which the Catholics have achieved over the simple Huguenot worshippers in this historical district has given point to more than one Lent oration in Notre Dame, Paris.

The devoted evangelistic pastor, considering the neglected Noyon in his parish, or certainly within his Divine commission, essayed to make the attempt to carry to it the Light of Life. He reckoned upon all or even more priestly opposition than he actually encountered.

We leave him to give his own experience, with just one mention that it is contained in a private letter in response to an inquiry for the true facts of the case, seeing that only the briefest hints have as yet appeared in the English religious journals.

He says:—"I had hoped ere this to have received the authorisation of the Minister of Public Worship, but in the meantime I availed myself of the new law of public meeting, and gave the Mayor twenty-four hours' notice upon each occasion of holding meetings. Our first Conference was held in a hall which was far too large for our purpose, but which was the only one we could hire. There were many persons in the town who would have allowed us the use of a large room in an hotel, or an unused workshop or store, but this they knew would give offence to their Catholic clientèle, and consequently injure their business. I had, therefore, no alternative but to hire a dancing saloon, in which our meetings were immediately followed by a ball of a not very select character. Our adversaries were not slow at making very untoward remarks upon this unseemly overlapping of the sacred and the profane. Indeed, the Mayor urged it upon the Prefect as a special reason why that functionary should not endorse our application for authorisation to the Minister of Public Worship. He urged that it discredited our religion, and he feared the results of such an outrage of the religious feelings of the community. I, having a chance of reply, cited the case of the Saviour Himself, who went uninvited to the house of Zaccheus, the notorious publican; and that the blessed Lord was specially known as the 'Friend of sinners,' in consequence of like intercourse with the vilest of his day, whom He came to save. But the arguments of the Mayor, which I presume had political expediency for their base, prevailed with the Prefect, rather than mine.

"But the Lord was preparing better answers for me, at least to my own soul. The proprietor of the hall and his family confessed to being so far influenced by what they heard at our meetings that he resolved, though at some sacrifice, that no more balls should be held in his house. Having put his resolution into effect, a preaching desk and forms now take the place of the orchestra, &c. We are sure that all lovers of the Lord Jesus will join with us in hearty thanks to God for his wonderful goodness to his servant. No sooner were the balls closed than two fiddlers who had been engaged at them confessed to having heard words whereby the Lord had brought about a change of heart, as they had listened to our pleading while waiting for us to retire previous to the dancing. I had never before seen a parallel case of closing a dancing-room by the preaching of God's Word. They came to dance, but returned to their homes to mourn (Eccl. iii. 4), and that for sin. Immediately upon this change in the situation, I wrote to the Prefect, pointing out to him that the divorce which had taken place between the preaching and the frivolities of the ball-room removed the only pretext raised by our opponents against our authorisation which had any show of reason. In his reply to me he confessed his agreement with me, and stated that my application would now be forwarded to the minister of Public Worship. Pasteur and Senator Pressensé has also written to support our request, so that I await the result with little doubt. Brethren, pray for us; we labour together for eternity."

Mr. Scroggie at Newcastle-on-Tyne.

AS stated in the last issue of THE CHRISTIAN, a very successful series of evangelistic meetings has been held by Mr. John Scroggie in Newcastle-on-Tyne. A considerable number of persons profess to have undergone a saving change. On the evening of Sabbath week the circus was crowded, and a solemn awe seemed to rest on the vast assembly from the beginning to the close. The after-meeting was one of great heart-searching; some souls were deeply wounded by the arrow of conviction, and were willing to close with Christ Jesus as their Saviour.

Many most interesting incidents have occurred in connection with the meetings. Let me name one or two:—"Returning," says one Christian worker, "to my lodgings after distributing some tickets for the meetings, I saw my landlord at the top of the stairs. I gave him an invitation to the meeting and a ticket, and began to pray for him. On coming to the meeting I saw him and his wife and daughter all there, sitting in the gallery. On arriving home, after 10 o'clock, I heard them singing that hymn—

'I am thine, O Lord, I have heard thy voice,' &c.

In a few moments I heard a knock at my door, and on opening it I saw father, mother, daughter, wishing me to sing and speak with them. I saw an answer to my prayer. I told them of Jesus. We knelt in prayer. They all decided for Jesus. My own soul was filled with such joy as I could not express. They are going on their way rejoicing in the Lord." Several soldiers, it is believed, have found the Saviour through these meetings. A soldier's wife came one evening to the meeting, gave her heart to God, and is now an earnest Christian worker. "I went to hear Mr. Scroggie," said a soldier in the hospital, the other day, "with the ticket that I got. I gave my heart to God, and am now feeling very happy." By his providence as well as his Word God has been speaking to the soldiers in our barracks. One young soldier attended the meeting at the Central Hall (the place where the meetings were held on the week nights) on the Wednesday night, was taken to the hospital on Thursday, and died on Friday morning at four o'clock.

Since Mr. Scroggie left us, fruit has begun to appear in some quarters. A Christian lady wrote to the writer of this notice yesterday and stated the following pleading incident:—"I have this moment had an anxious soul here who has left rejoicing in Jesus. She wrote to Mr. Scroggie, the day he left, and as he could not see her, I wrote to her asking her if she would come and see me. She was deeply anxious, and so she came just at the time I fixed, and I never saw a clearer case of conversion."

Many Christians have been greatly quickened by the services. One marked feature in all the fortnight's meetings was the large number of men who were present. Many of them stayed to the inquiry meeting.

Mr. Scroggie has gone to Biggar, in Lanarkshire, N.B., to carry on the Lord's work there. Will friends remember him in prayer? The meetings here will be continued in the circus on Sabbath afternoons and evenings. Ned Wright took the services last Lord's Day.

Little Things.

"As mountains are formed of little grains, and little drops make ocean's depths, so the sum of life's great joys and cares is made up of little deeds and little words."

ONLY a word of comfort
To the weary ones you meet,
May lighten their heavy burden,
For sympathy is sweet.

Only some self-denial
No earthly friend could see;
But the heart will hear a whisper,
"I know 'twas done for me."

Only some sweet wild blossoms
Brought to a sick one's room,
With their scent and smiling presence
May brighten the weary gloom.

Only a text of scripture
Read in an earnest tone,
May bring forth a blessed harvest
Where such good seed is sown.

Ah, who can tell the power
Of little words and deeds?
They float out from the Christ-like life
Like many light-winged seeds.

The years will come and vanish,
With footsteps still and fleet;
And at last some seed forgotten
Will blossom round your feet.

All work that's done for Jesus
Is certain to endure,
And if not here, yet there above
The harvest will be sure.

Rescue Work in Poplar.

ON leaving The Elms, Walthamstow, last November, I fully intended taking residence in Manor College, Kirby-street, though having possession of only half of it, the other part being promised later on. But a severe outbreak of scarlet fever in this other part, resulting in two deaths, quite prevented the carrying out of that arrangement. In February last, the Committee dissolved, and it was decided that we should work as associates. Then I had a severe illness caused by blood-poisoning, which left great weakness and inability to do anything for some months.

Through the mercy of God that has all passed away, and I am now able to resume my duties and, taking a new departure, go forward in the cause of Rescue Work.

In 1883 we were able to send 120 girls to service; four married; fourteen emigrated; two died; twenty-four were sent to other homes; twenty-seven to friends; three to lunatic asylums; six to the Union; eighteen to hospital; and six were dismissed. This made it an expensive year, and disappointments, which I could not in any way help, left a debt which sorely fettered me when I came to Manor Cottage in May. There was, and still is, a great deal to do to make the Home comfortable, but some special efforts have nearly cleared off the liabilities, so that with much lessened expenses the work will now, I hope, proceed to be very useful. Since November we have admitted forty-five, and sent twenty to service; fourteen are in the Home now; we have an efficient staff of unpaid workers. Scarcely a day passes but some applicants have had to be refused for want of funds.

Associates are now joining who will work with me cordially, and I most prayerfully ask to be spared the necessity of turning girls away for want of means. Any lady who will give me the use of her drawing-room for a meeting will do us a kindness; I am glad to tell the method of our work, and the results which have gladdened our hearts. Our Treasurer is Mr. Henry Green, Blackwall, E. Gifts of clothing of any kind, and also subscriptions, will be most thankfully acknowledged by me. I shall also be glad to see anyone who feels interested in the cause on Mondays, Tuesdays, Thursdays, or Fridays.

Letters to the Editor.

POLITICAL ECONOMY AND THE POOR.

Sir,—I thank you for your insertion of Mr. Samuel Smith's remarks on "The Wages of the Poor." In nothing is it more important that legislators and philanthropists should be thoroughly instructed than in the laws of Social Economy.

The science of Political Economy, which teaches these laws—laws of human nature—is fixed and inflexible as human nature itself; it in no degree checks the operation of spiritual motives, as I see in page 12 of the same issue it is sometimes supposed to do, or discourages the efforts of philanthropy. On the contrary, its function is so to guide men under the operation of all such motives, as that their actions shall most effectually secure the ends at which they aim. There is nothing more dangerous than unenlightened philanthropy. In social dynamics, so far as success is concerned, mere purity of motive goes for nothing. Motive power must drive one in the right way, or he comes to grief; and that, in such cases, the grief not of himself only, but of the unhappy objects of his philanthropy. W. M.

Dear Sir,—Doubtless many of your readers' with me, will be glad of the interest taken in the welfare of the poor by Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., and others in the higher social scale. "The liberators, the deliverers, and the advancers of humanity, have always been those who were moved by the sight of injustice and misery rather than those spurred by their own suffering, for the more men need help, the less can they help themselves," says a modern writer.

But correct thought is absolutely necessary to right action. I feel bound to point out to Mr. Smith what I think will be admitted to be an unfortunate statement in his article on "The Wages of the Poor," viz., "It is hopeless to strive against economical laws, that are in their action as fixed and inexorable as those of nature." I think a full and scriptural refutation of such a statement is found in The Christian of November 15, 1883, page 5, which I quote: "He (the Apostle James) warns the rich of the miseries that shall come upon them. He will not recognise the infallibility of political economy. He does not believe in the righteousness of blind obedience to the laws of supply and demand. He will not assent to the proposition that wages rise and fall by a righteous sliding-scale which needs no interference. He says the hire of the labourers is kept back by fraud, and the cry of the workers is entered into the ears of the Lord of Sabaoth."

I am sure every servant of "the righteous Lord who loveth righteousness," will see the paramount importance of embracing and propounding scriptural sentiments and convictions on this burning question. A Reader.

Dear Sir,—It may be, as Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., says in his article on "The Wages of the Poor," a true commercial principle to pay labourers according to their number, and not according to the value of the work done; yet to me it savours of extortion. I have lived many years in countries where the extortion is all on the other side, where the labourers are few, and they ask more than the value of their work. For instance, I have known farmers turn their cattle into the ripe corn rather than pay extortional labourers 1s. 6d. an hour to reap it. No doubt emigration is the true remedy for over and understocked labour markets, providing a due proportion of capital accompanies any large influx of immigrants; else the sad old cry would come ringing back to these shores, "I have no work to do." A Citizen from the Other Side.

"THE CLERGY REST-HOUSE."

Dear Sir,—Many of your readers will be glad to hear of the establishment of "The Clergy Rest House." Long experience of the necessities of the "working clergy" has shown us how little provision has been made for the resting of those who are emphatically bearing the burden and heat of the day. With small incomes, which they can do little to increase, and not seldom pressed down by family cares and sickness, they have too often no means of getting any change, even if they can for a time cease from public work. These cases are not few or hidden. They meet us everywhere.

Through the thoughtful kindness of some Christian friends, contributions have been sent to enable the taking and arrangement of a large and comfortable house at Bournemouth, in its most salubrious part. There a simple, but comfortable family home will receive the weary one. The expenses are far below those of lodgings, while all trouble and care in "providing" for each day is removed. I shall be glad to give any further details that any friend may desire.—Yours faithfully, (Mrs.) Mary E. Litchfield Layton.

The Fisk Jubilee Singers.

On October 6, 1871, the first party of Jubilee Singers started from the city of Nashville, Tennessee, almost as a forlorn hope, with the desire of raising funds for the extension and support of the Fisk University for coloured teachers. The story of their successful campaigns, by which £30,000 was raised for the educational training of the young freed-men and freed-women of the States—those whom the Emancipation Proclamation of President Lincoln had delivered from the house of bondage—is too well-known to need repetition.

Thirteen years have nearly passed away since that first party ventured forth "in weakness, and in fear, and in much trembling;" and now the Fisk Jubilee Singers are again amongst us, delighting us, as of yore, with that wonderful singing which must be heard to be appreciated. Many changes have taken place in the personnel of the company; but Mr. Loudin and Mr. Thomas still remain, while the places of Maggie Porter, Ella Sheppard, and the two Jacksons are filled by others, to whom it is equally pleasant to listen, who sing their slave-songs with the same grace and pathos, and who merit as cordial a welcome. Hearts are still touched by the old favourites, "Steal away to Jesus," "My Way is Cloudy," with the refrain, "Send Them Angels Down," "I've been Redeemed," "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot," and scores of others.

The present party have also a new selection of pieces, which are just as touching, just as "spiritual." The Jubilee Singers gave sacred concerts at Exeter Hall on both last Saturday and Saturday week. They are open to go to any part of the country. Letters should be addressed to Mr. H. C. Loudin, care of Messrs. Hodder & Stoughton, 27, Paternoster-row, London, E.C.

As we were preaching under the well-known clock-tower at Epsom on the night of the Derby, we were conscious of a double power being at work. There was the constraining power of God in the testimony of the brethren, and the restraining power of God in keeping the people quiet. Certainly in this respect there is matter for thanksgiving. We are able to do now by the educating process of our work what we could not have done some years ago. For example, on this said Derby day six of us preached on the course itself for two hours till it was cleared for the first race, during which the amount of opposition was hardly worth mentioning, while some thousands heard the voice of warning and entreaty. This in itself shows that our work tells in making the people bear with the Gospel even if they do not receive it.

Another sign of progress was noted. Hitherto we have regarded "the miller" as a part of our reward, but this time there was no flour-throwing. The crowd at our meeting on the course on "Show-out Sunday" was also larger and more steady. But this doubtless was due in part to additional attractions. I hoisted an enlarged copy of my Dutch picture, "The Broad and the Narrow Way," on the stand from which we preached. We had also a musical instrument, and some part singing, including two female voices. On the Derby day also I had an ordinary English copy of the above-named picture hoisted on a pole, with a "Chart of Life for Sailors of all Nations"* on the other side. These served to attract the people while the brethren were preaching.

But the bulk of the work consisted, as usual, of tract distribution and personal conversation, on all the roads and footways leading to the downs. Here our brethren of the Open Air Mission and London City Mission stood day by day sowing the good seed of the Kingdom to thousands of thoughtless wayfarers. Probably during the week from 50,000 to 75,000 tracts, books, and cards were thus distributed; and it is impossible that this labour can be in vain.

The Goodly Heritage.

"The lines are fallen to me in pleasant places; yea, have a goodly heritage."—Psa. xvi. 6.

Fairer than others have, the lot that falls
Into my lap, cast there by Heavenly love,
Then why should I repine if Jesus calls
To momentary pain, my faith to prove?

Better than my deserts—O humbling thought!
No faithful servant I, reward to claim.
E'en when my best and hardest I have wrought,
Not single was the eye, nor pure the aim.

Far other might have been, had guardian care
Not overruled for good my wayward will.
Restraining mercy met me everywhere,
And changed to blessing what had else proved ill.

Lord, grant me light that I may understand
The fulness of this heritage divine;—
The hidden treasures of this goodly land,—
The riches of its growth of corn and vine.

Help me to realise it as my lot,
That with contentment I my cross may bear.
Then at my trials I will murmur not;
But in them all behold a Father's care.

Its value may I feel as day by day,
The time draws near when fadeless crowns are given.
Through toil to rest, is thine appointed way,
And life on earth prepares for life in Heaven.

Epping. Frederic Wagstaff.

A South African Bible Society.

The Rev. Dr. Hole, of Cape Town, who visited this country some years ago, writes to us the following interesting letter:—

"I am now in prosecution of a Mission entrusted to me by the British and Foreign Bible Society—no less than a tour, to advocate its claims through the whole Colony, the Orange Free State, the Transvaal, and Natal. I left Cape Town on March 12, and do not expect to return until November 15. At first I was somewhat doubtful of what I could do. I wished to avoid the mere secretarial presentation of facts and figures, but felt it might be difficult to combine these with the preaching of the Gospel. I find, however, that I can do both; and my tour resolves itself into a great Mission effort, which enables me to go from place to place, and, while advocating the Bible Society's claims, forming branches, &c., to lift up Christ.

"The Dutch ministers are most cordial and sympathetic, and, as an Episcopal clergyman, I have the opportunity of preaching the Gospel from the church pulpits. These have not in any case up to the present time been refused to me, my custom being to preach (on Sundays) in the English churches in the morning, giving the rest of the day to my other meetings.—Yours very faithfully, "Charles Hole."

Requests for Praise and Prayer.

PRAISE.—For the awakening and conversion of souls in the tent meetings, nightly, behind Trinity Hall, Battersea.

PRAYER.—For an evangelist returning from Adelaide, that he may be benefitted in health and blessed to many on board during the voyage.——For blessing on evangelistic work by Mr. Arthur Stavert, in Sutton Bridge, Lincolnshire.——Mr. Gawin Kirkham asks for distinct blessing on an eight days' Mission at Hull, commencing on June 8.——For blessing on tent services near to the Post-office at Kingston, Surrey, conducted by the London Evangelisation Society.——For Gospel meetings in a tent at Bromley, Kent, every Sunday in June.

Obituary.

REV. H. W. WITTEVEEN.

THE Church of Christ in the Netherlands has lost one of her most devoted and eminent ministers. On May 9, the Rev. H. W. Witteveen, of Ermelo, fell asleep in Jesus. In every sense of the word his life was Christ. Formerly a minister of the National Church, he was ejected from his parish for unflinchingly maintaining church discipline, and refusing to obey the commandments of men, contrary to the ordinances of his God and the dictates of his conscience. He soon gathered a little flock at a Mission church, which became the nucleus of Mission work to all parts of the world, Egypt, Soudan, Palestine, South Africa, Sumatra, Java, the United States of North America, &c. Also in his native country his evangelists laboured with signal blessing.

He was a mighty man of prayer. Daily he used to shut himself up in his little chapel to pray for hours together for his various institutions; many a wanderer has he been the means of leading to the fold. He was the first in this country to make the attempt to bring lunatics under Gospel influence.

Evangelistic Notes.

KENT.—A Conference of Christians was held in the tent at Bromley, Kent, on Bank Holiday, when several came together from various gatherings. A very happy and profitable time was spent.

TOLLINGTON HALL, Hornsey-road, formerly occupied by the Salvation Army, was re-opened last Sunday evening by a band of Christian workers. The prayers of fellow-workers in the Lord's vineyard are desired, that the meetings may be blessed to the conversion of many souls.

LONG ITCHINGTON, WARWICKSHIRE.—A series of services has been held here in a tent by Mr. F. Holmes, of the Evangelisation Society, London, and Mr. Humphries, of the Village Mission, in which the Lord has given much blessing; many have professed conversion and several backsliders have been restored.

COATBRIDGE, N.B.—A three weeks' Mission, conducted by Mr. George Cooper, has closed here. Great interest was manifested in the meetings; this was largely due to the fact that the ministers and their congregations threw themselves unitedly into the work. The results have been very gratifying; very many have given evidence of real blessing received.

Religious Services for the People.

THE Lord Mayor presided on Saturday afternoon at a meeting of about 250 ladies and gentlemen held at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Reckitt, Caen-wood Towers, Highgate, in aid of the Society for Promoting Special Religious Services for the People in Theatres, Halls, and Mission-rooms. In opening the proceedings, his lordship said that the object which had brought them together was a very important one. If they looked at the condition of the large masses of the people in the poorer parts of London, they could not but feel that there was a great gulf separating them from the Christian influences around them. As those masses would not come to the Church, the Church must go to them. And that was the object of this association. He appealed to the public to give the support needed, and expressed the hope that, with the assistance of the Christian public, they might go on for another quarter of a century doing the same work, and that God would continue his blessing on their labours.

Rev. T. C. Udall, deputation secretary, said the object of the association was to be an auxiliary to the churches and chapels of London, and not in any sense a rival. They required £3000 a year to carry on their services, and he asked the meeting to remember their poorer brethren in Bethnal-green, Southwark, and other parts of the metropolis. The claims of the Society were also cordially advocated by Rev. Burman Casin, Mr. Arthur Pease, M.P., Rev. Newman Hall, Mr. R. F. Horton, Rev. H. W. Dearden, Mr. G. Nokes, Mr. H. M. Bompas, Q.C., Rev. D. Trinder, M.A., &c.

Notices of Books, &c.

Some very useful expository teaching will be found in a little volume entitled THOUGHTS ON SUBJECTS OF PRESENT INTEREST IN THE CHURCH OF GOD (6d.), by Rev. W. B. DOHERTY, St. Matthew's Vicarage, Bristol, from whom it may be obtained. Scriptural, Christ-exalting, and discriminating are terms fitly applicable to the chapters it contains.

We have received from W. Mack, 4, Paternoster-square, a volume consisting of FOUR-AND-FORTY YEARS' EDITORIAL ADDRESSES, written by DAVID ALFRED DOUDNEY, D.D., as editor of the Gospel Magazine. They are justly said to contain Christian counsel and comfort, and will doubtless be specially welcome in their book form to readers of the magazine, and others who sympathise with the school of thought it represents. The price is 2s. 6d.

HEATHEN MYTHOLOGY CORROBORATIVE OR ILLUSTRATIVE OF HOLY SCRIPTURE. By HUGH BARCLAY, LL.D. Hamilton, Adams & Co. 2s. 6d. Will be found to be a most suggestive and useful work. First delivered in the shape of public lectures, the contents of the book were afterwards published serially in the Christian Treasury, and now in collected form furnish a handy book of reference for Bible students. A large amount of information gathered from various sources is presented in small compass. A brief sketch of the lamented author's life is prefixed.

THE LIFE OF PASTEUR GEORGES FISCH (in French), by his Son, gives us a most attractive picture of a man devoted to God from his youth. His zeal in the furtherance of God's kingdom in France was great. Mr. McAll in Paris found in him his most active auxiliary, "his right arm," as he said. His youth was bright and full of trust in God; whether engaged in athletic pursuits, or in distributing tracts (for which he was once imprisoned for three or four days), his object was to do all to the glory of God. His last words were, "Pray; I have great confidence in prayer." (Paul Monnerat, Paris.)

REASONS CONCERNING OUR HOPE. Alexander & Shepheard. 2s. 6d. The author conceals his name, but, whoever he is, has rendered good service to the cause of truth by his thoughtful and frank examinations of the basis upon which our faith in Divine revelation is built. The credentials of Christianity are set forth with fearlessness and a firm conviction of their invulnerable character, and the Bible shown to be from every point of view worthy of the position it holds as the veritable Word of God. Difficulties and honest doubts are recognised, frankly considered, and satisfactorily met. The book is addressed to those "who find the battle of thought come as early and inevitably as the battle of life;" such cannot do better than read it with the care and consideration it merits.

THE LIFE OF CHRIST. By Dr. BERNARD WEISS. T. & T. Clark, Edinburgh. 3 vols. 10s. 6d. each. We are glad to draw attention to the third and concluding volume of this able work. This new Life of our Divine Lord forms a contribution of the highest value to Biblical science. No thorough student of the Great Biography should willingly be without it. While saying this we are compelled, in justice to ourselves, to acknowledge that, after a German manner, there is an occasional freedom in dealing with the inspired sources of the history which we do not think advancing criticism will sustain. Already opposition has been taken to some of the conclusions in the long and learned treatise in the first volume upon the origin of the four Gospels. But the value of the work remains, notwithstanding these drawbacks. Its defence of the authority of the New Testament Scriptures, on purely historical grounds, is impregnable Its refutation of a reckless rationalism and an unlearned criticism is most complete, and places the author in the very first rank of Continental expositors. The varied scenes of our Lord's earthly life are spread out with a reverence and loyalty which leave little to be desired. Although English readers are too often made aware that Dr. Weiss is writing in the presence of a hostile learning, there are never wanting marks of judicial calmness and spiritual penetration. We should assign the highest value to those chapters of the last volume which deal with the discourses of Christ, rather than with those which treat of events and miracles. The highest conception of the life of Christ has yet to come. Whenever that crowning work appears, the author will doubtless attribute his indebtedness to Dr. Weiss; and while he will reject in part, he will also recognise much in these three volumes which Christian scholars will not let die.

CREDENTIALS, CALL, AND CLAIMS OF THE CHRISTIAN MINISTRY. By Dr. DOUDNEY. 7s. 6d. W. Mack. Dr. Doudney is not only highly honoured and respected in the town in which he now labours, but has, through his writings, gained a warm place in the spiritual affections of many. This book is written in an easy, attractive style, recounting incidents of his early life, and abounding in anecdote and illustration. He has seen many temporal trials, but these have only been channels for the mercy of God to flow through. The letters which, as an editor, he wrote and received on the subject of "The Christian Ministry" are given in full, and anyone seeking such instruction cannot fail to derive blessing and profit from their perusal. The whole concludes with an interesting narration of his labour in Ireland, extending over a period of twelve years. We are sure no one can read this excellent work in vain.

WE have also received the following books:—

Dr. James H. Brookes, St. Louis.

DEAR BROTHER,—Permit me, through THE CHRISTIAN, to call attention to the visit of Dr. J. H. Brookes, of St. Louis, who hopes soon to be in Ireland and England. Our greatly honoured friend has been prostrated through overwork, and now leaves our shores with his family, to seek rest and recuperation elsewhere.

Dr. Brookes' reputation is world-wide as a preacher, teacher, and writer. His books have had an extensive circulation. As a preacher his style is eminently Scriptural, expository, exceedingly clear, and direct. His Bible knowledge is marvellous. Gifted with rare powers, highly cultured, a scholar, and, above all, a man anointed with the Spirit of God; humble as a child, yet fearless as a lion, he has been for many years a sustained witness of the Word of God. The novelties of the hour have not moved him from the faith and hope of the Gospel.

Our brother may not be permitted to preach frequently through physical weariness, but as he is to give addresses at the Dublin Meetings, and at the Mildmay Conference, we hope many will hear him. I trust, also, that all Christians will give our beloved brother a hearty greeting and a friendly welcome.—Yours ever,

GEORGE C. NEEDHAM.

WORK AMONGST YOUNG GIRLS.—Mrs. Fisher has for some time been engaged in a very blessed work amongst young girls in the city. A "praise band" from different houses of business meet twice a month for mutual encouragement and prayer; this has already resulted in much real good. House to house visitation, dinner-hour meetings, and a Flower Mission, all tend to gladden the hearts of many whose lot it is to work in the close workrooms of our crowded city.

NORMANTON CHRISTIAN ARMY.—This Mission has now been actively at work for nearly twelve months, and has been up to the present greatly owned and blessed of God in the conversion of sinners. We require a much larger building. Some of the vilest characters in this place have been converted, and are now working for Jesus. The sum required for the erection of a wooden building to seat 900 persons will cost about £600. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN do what they can to help us?—PHŒBE ALICE GADSDEN, 11, Longclose-grove, Normanton, Yorks.

Holiday Helpers.

EARLY in July the hundred students of Mr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness' Institute for Home and Foreign Missions will be dispersing for the long vacation. Some of them would be glad to supply the pulpit of ministers taking their annual holiday; others would be suited to help in village Missions or in tent work, or evangelistic efforts of any kind; while a few foreigners would like to undertake the charge of boys at home for the holidays, teaching them conversational French or German. Application for the services of any of these brethren should be made early to Harley House, Bow, E.

During the summer vacation the country branch of the institute, Hulme Cliff College, Curbar, is thrown open as a summer resort for Christian families requiring change of scene and air. It is situated in the most beautiful part of Derbyshire, between Matlock and Buxton, a mile from Chatsworth Park, in a remarkably healthful and attractive neighbourhood. Particulars on application.

Continental and Foreign Notes.

NEUCHÂTEL.—A large meeting of Swiss Temperance and Blue-ribbon Societies was lately held here, the subject being "The Struggle against Intemperance by Individual Christian Effort."

THE Committee of the Algerian and Tunisian Evangelical Society have decided to place a colporteur-evangelist at Aumale, in Algiers, and another in Tunis; they have besides voted a subsidy for an evangelist at Oran.

THE YOUNG CHRISTIANS' FETE was held in May for the second time in the Oratoire, Paris. It was altogether a most successful and pleasant meeting; remarkably suitable addresses were delivered by Messrs. Bersier, Décoppet, Monod, Récolin, and others.

CONFERENCE IN GERMANY.—At Argoire, Baden, a Conference was held in May, when the principal subject considered was "The First Resurrection." The greater number of the speakers thought this would take place before the appearance of Antichrist, but the more practical side of preparedness and holiness was most dwelt on. Temperance work was also considered.

AUXERRE.—Pastor Eynard is utilising the Salle McAll, when not in use for meetings, as a reading-room for soldiers; it was immediately frequented by them, and is much appreciated as a pleasant change from barracks or the public-house. M. Eynard has also adopted a new method of evangelisation. He goes into the suburbs of the town to any friends known to him and there conducts a sort of family worship, to which the neighbours are invited. He thus readily falls into conversation and succeeds in removing many difficulties, by answering objections and doubts. Much good has thus been done.—Société Evangélique de France.

SUICIDE AND JESUITISM. — Vincent Carafa, seventh General of the Order of Jesus, practised the most severe asceticism, though he knew that he was thereby shortening his life. He justified himself by saying that these austerities would soon put an end to this life of miseries, and would bring him all the sooner into the glorious presence of God. "I ought," he added, "in every way to mortify, and injure both body and mind, granting myself nothing that is pleasant; in short, hating myself, and shortening my life." How different is this from St. Paul's "keeping the body under, that body, soul, and spirit might be ready for the Master's use."—Le Christianisme.

PORT SAID.—Mr. G. A. Eoll writes that he and his family reached this port on April 12; he has since been occupied in Gospel work among the sailors on board ship, the patients in the hospital and the inmates of the prison. He has come to the conclusion that a floating Bethel will be the best medium for reaching the numerous seamen who visit the port; for preserving them from the abounding temptations of the place, it will be better than a Bethel on shore. If the way opens he also hopes to establish a Home for Destitute Seamen. He is distributing Gospels, a supply of which, in thirteen languages, was granted by the Crystal Palace Bible Stand.

STRATFORD CONFERENCE HALL.—The opening of this Hall, which was announced for June 30, has been altered to Monday, June 23.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

THE ANCHORAGE HOUSE, Regent's Park, N.W. THE MISSION HALL, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster.

Committee—GEORGE HANBURY, Esq.; Rev. H. E. FOX; Colonel STUART WORTLEY.

GOSPEL MISSION AND PREVENTIVE WORK.

In addition to the Sunday and Week-day Services, Sunday Schools, Mothers' Meetings, &c., in the Mission Hall, Classes are now held for the instruction of young girls of various ages in the truths of the Gospel, and for teaching them sewing, cutting out, mending, and other such things as may be useful to them in their various positions in life.

Bible Classes for domestic servants, young women in houses of business, and others, are being arranged. All classes are conducted by Ladies.

RESCUE WORK.

The Anchorage House meets a great and acknowledged want, in sheltering respectable young women who have been led astray. Many and many a poor creature, now sunk in the sinful life of our great cities, might have been saved had such an opportunity come before her in the early days of her sin.

Special Mission Services are held from time to time for women living in sin.

The whole work of the Mission is directed towards producing a clear and definite change of heart, through simple belief and trust in the Atoning Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. The work accomplished during past years shows that the blessing of GOD rests on what is done with that view only.

The expenses are necessarily heavy, and an earnest appeal for assistance is made to those who sympathise with work carried on on the lines indicated above. No debt will be incurred, and the work done can therefore only be in accordance with the funds sent in from outside sources, in aid of that found by the Members of the Committee and their friends.

Papers, containing a full account of the work of the Anchorage Mission, including suggestions as to the way found wisest by experience to overcome certain difficulties found in dealing with young women about to become mothers, and rules for admission to the Anchorage House, will be sent on application by letter (not post-cards), to Mrs. H. STUART WORTLEY, President of the Ladies' Committee, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W., to whom, to any Member of Committee, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, subscriptions, which are much wanted now, may be sent.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE (Marked thus*).

The Irish Evangelization Society has now been at work ten years, and has had very great blessing. It has pleased God to use their Evangelists in the proclamation of the Gospel to bring a very large number into the fold of Christ. The Society's work is extending, and the Committee feel it to be right that the Church of God should more widely know of, and be invited to aid more largely in, this work.

EVANGELISTS.

The Evangelists of this Society may belong, as individuals, to many denominations, but as its Evangelists they represent none. They go out for this Society, not as members of any particular body of Christians, and without in any way taking part, publicly or privately, in questions relating to denominational differences, but only as Evangelists, to preach the glorious Gospel of Christ to perishing sinners, in its fulness and freeness, and to seek, under the constraining power of the love of Christ, to win souls to Him.

The Evangelists sent out by the Society are always anxious to co-operate heartily with the godly ministers of any locality in which they are called to labour.

MEETINGS.

The Society is prepared to receive applications for Evangelistic meetings, in any locality, from clergymen or laymen.

MEANS.

The work of the Society is maintained by voluntary contributions, and Christians are invited to share the privilege of this work for Christ. Those who are disposed to help are requested to do so at once. Contributions will be received by this paper, by the Hon. Sec., or by the Treasurer.

PAST WORK.

The Report of the year 1883 can be had upon application to the Hon Sec., and will repay perusal.

TENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

PHTHISIS—CASE of MISS FLORA THYNNE

(Now Mrs. Ingram, and residing at 1, Albert-villas, Cranmer-road, FOREST GATE, Essex).

Was a patient of mine in the winter of 1882-3.

Consumption had been very fatal in her family. She had always been very delicate herself, but through the summer had been failing, and been treated with quinine and cod-liver oil with no beneficial effect.

When she visited Coombe Lodge first she had a chronic cough, with expectoration of the worst kind, and was rapidly losing flesh and strength.

On a second visit, in one month's time, she was much stronger and better, cough subdued, expectoration of a better character, and she had gained flesh. The improvement continued—so much so that in less than four months' time from her first visit she was married.

In announcing their marriage, her husband wrote me, thanking me for my successful treatment, and stating that his wife was entirely restored to health.

I have recently received a letter from Mr. INGRAM, in which he says:—"In answer to your kind inquiries I am glad to tell you that my wife keeps very well, and able to attend to her household duties. I can never be thankful enough that she was led to pay you a visit at that critical period."

In a letter recently received from Mr. INGRAM, dated April 14, he says: "My wife continues in the enjoyment of splendid health."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

OUT OF EGYPT.

A Series of Bible Readings on the Exodus of Israel: and its Spiritual Lessons.

BY REV. DR. G. F. PENTECOST, M.A.,

"I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage."—DEUT. v. 9.

ALSO BY REV. DR. PENTECOST.

Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Limp, 2s.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

IN THE VOLUME OF THE BOOK:

OR,

The Profit and Pleasure of Bible Study.

WITH INTRODUCTIONS BY

REVS. JOSEPH COOK and J. H. VINCENT, D.D.

EIGHTH EDITION.

"We cannot too highly commend this little publication; plain, concise, thorough, and spiritual, it is a hand-book differing from all others, inasmuch as it takes up the spiritual rather than the material aspect of the Word of God."—Preachers' Analyst.

"It is a capital book, and is especially appropriate and valuable to young Christians. There are sixteen chapters, some of them treating very effectively with the methods by which such difficulties as often meet the young and thoughtful reader may be overcome. The general treatment is marked by much originality, the style by much perspicuity, while the illustrations are apt and striking."—Methodist Recorder.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; and may be ordered of any Bookseller.

New Edition. Just out. Price 5s.; in Cloth Boards, 474 pages, or 6s. Bevelled Boards, Gilt Edges.

THE PHYSIOLOGICAL EFFECT OF MAGNETISM.

It should require no proof to show that the disturbance or deficiency of any natural energy or influence, such as we find in the Magnetic and Electric forces, must exert a very sensible effect on so delicate a nervous organism as that which exists in a human being. But if anything more were necessary to complete our evidence on the physiological effect and value of Magneto-Electricity, it is at once apparent in the following quotation from an authoritative work:—"It is singular that the Electric fluid, so powerful an agent in producing cohesion of inanimate substance, is also the great agent of chemical composition and decomposition, and, likewise, that this fluid is evolved by a mere change of motion in the particles of matter. It seems highly probable, therefore, from analogy, that a nervous fluid is extricated in like manner by a molecular motion or contraction of muscles, and that this fluid is the cause, not only of nervous and muscular cohesion, but is also the great agent of the vital compositions and decompositions which are incessantly going on in every part of the body." How wonderful in operation is this Magnetic force, and how desirable that its balance in the system should be preserved in health and restored in disease! The fact that the sudden contraction of a muscle will produce a sensible deflection of the needle of a compass is most significant, conclusively proving the relation of external Magnetism to nervous and vital force. We commend this evolution of nervous and Magnetic fluid to the attention of those who may still venture to presume that Magnetism has no physiological effect.

Magnetic influence, then, effects a general equalisation of the powers, functions, and forces of the system—that balance of the system which is in the highest sense worthy the name of health. Indeed, it is by no means necessary that to enjoy health a person must possess the muscular strength of the athlete or of the labourer. The lady in her boudoir may enjoy equal health, the requisite being a perfect balance of the functions—none operating in excess, and none failing for want of power. It is obviously impossible to lay down a general law, or to define the exact proportions of the Magneto-Electric forces necessary to the preservation of health and harmony in every individual. They must needs vary in varying temperaments, and even in the same person at different periods of life. We can scarcely over-estimate the equalising power of this agent. For whether the disturbance of health be in this direction or in that, whether it arises from an obstinately torpid condition of the bowels, or from a weakness which becomes apparent upon a slight change of temperature, diet, or excitement of any kind, it is the office of Odo-Magnetic influence to correct it by equalising or harmonising the functions of the body.

From Rev. Thornley Smith,
12, Sparsholt-road, Crouch Hill, N.
January 12, 1884.

"I ought, long ago, to have written to you respecting the Belt, for it has been of great service to me, and I am quite sure I could not do without it. I am a firm believer in the value of the Magnetic treatment of disease, and that it is one of the means which God often blesses, while sometimes He heals without means at all."

All those who experience loss of energy unfitting them for ordinary duties, and exposing them to debilitating, perhaps chronic disease, should make themselves thoroughly acquainted with the Odo-Magnetic mode of treatment. Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT has devoted many years of his life to the practical adaptation of the Superhuman force of Magnetism to the alleviation and cure of various forms of disease. His published essays clearly demonstrate the natural action of the remedy, and may be had on application at his Consulting Rooms, where a private list of 950 names may also be obtained.—B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

The Christian.

OVER-PRESSURE IN ELEMENTARY SCHOOLS.

By A TEACHER.

I HAVE noticed that several times of late you have drawn your readers' attention to some of the evils of the present general system of education. I have wished that more might be said on this subject, as I feel sure that much good might be done by faithful dealing with the public on this question.

The letter headed "Cramming and Killing," in THE CHRISTIAN of April 3, applies chiefly to the children of middle-class people, as well as the quotation accompanying it from your issue of February 21. In the case of these children the chief responsibility rests with the parents themselves, who certainly ought to think and decide how their children shall be trained, and not leave the whole matter in the hands of the teachers.

But I think the case of the working people of this country far more serious. Their children are all in attendance at voluntary or board schools, which are chiefly supported by the Government grants earned by attendance and the results of examinations. A book might be written showing the evils that have arisen out of this system of "payments by results." Teachers have often been blamed for all these evils on the ground that they practice "over-pressure" solely from greed of gain; but if you consider that in the eyes of managers of schools, a teacher's whole character and value depend on the amount of money he can make, you will see how helpless he is in the matter.

The Government Code of Education lays down the standard of attainment for children, and, no matter how varied their capabilities, all the children in one standard must come up to the requirements of that standard. Suppose we take a school of one hundred children, and roughly estimate their probable classification. Ten per cent. will usually be above the average for intelligence, aptness to learn, and freedom from shyness and nervousness. These will pass in every subject, without any trouble being bestowed upon them beyond the ordinary routine of school and home lessons. About 40 per cent. more will be children of good average ability, who will pass if they are well taught, and cared for at home by parents who enforce regularity of attendance and pay strict attention to home lessons.

About thirty per cent. more will not pass without being "whipped up" to it. They will be those who are little cared for at home, some under-fed, more improperly fed, allowed to stay at home on any pretext by injudicious mothers (often because the fathers drink, and school-pence are hard to get), to play in the street until late at night, and to be as rude and noisy, and disobedient as they choose. To make these children come up to the requirements, the teacher must enforce attendance by any means in his power; he must drill them in the most necessary subjects all day long, everything must be set aside for them but what will make them pass.

Hence in many schools you will find these unfortunates drafted out for a cram lesson while the others receive the early morning Bible-lesson; they will have another extra lesson at play-time, if in a school where that happy interlude is still allowed; they will be kept in for more cramming for half or three-quarters of an hour after the other scholars are gone home, both night and morning. Poor little weary bairns! How they must hate the everlasting spelling, reading, and arithmetic! They are often entrusted to young teachers, with so much work to be mastered for each week. If the required progress is not made, this young teacher gets all the blame, so he crams and drills with all his might, and probably by the examination day most of this thirty per cent. manage "to pass under the examiner's rod."

Thus, out of our school of one hundred children, eighty may be brought up to passing point; but of these several will very possibly fail through accidents. One may be detected in trying to "copy," or in some other kind of mischief, and "failed" by the irate inspector as a punishment to both teacher and scholar. One or two more may fail through nervousness or misunderstanding, and often these will be children of whose success the teacher has felt certain.

But now we have the remaining twenty scholars to consider. Of these, at least, ten are utterly hopeless, some are dull in intellect, others are subject to weakness of body, or have been absent from school through illness just long enough to make it impossible for them to pass, but long enough to compel the teachers to present them for examination. Some of these may be withheld on presentation of a certificate signed by a doctor or the managers; but the inspector will be very suspicious about them, and will probably decide that at least half of them must not be exempted. The other ten will be the children of the lowest poor, who have been neglected in every way since babyhood. They have not been sent to school at all, till perhaps at six or seven years of age, the attendance officer has hunted them out; and, after all possible excuses have failed, they have been dragged or driven to school by mothers as unwilling as themselves. Need we say that, under the existing system of examination, such children are not welcome? They can only bring trouble and discredit to the already overworked and worried teacher. Perhaps they have come too late in the year to be eligible by attendance for the next examination, and they therefore take their place in the "Dunces' class." Every nerve of teaching power is being strained to the utmost to prepare those who must be examined, and others must take their chance till they too become eligible for examination.

Then all who are so hopelessly ignorant as to be incapable of passing the lowest standard open to them, are the greatest source of unrest in the teacher's life. Especially is this the case with older "Infants," who, if they are seven, even if only seven on the last day of the school year, must be examined in Standard I. By hard and patient work he might teach them much, if they would only come regularly and remain long enough, and most of them could be got ready to pass the year after. But this year's examination has to be met first, and this time they will certainly fail.

Every failure is a disgrace. Neither inspectors nor managers will know why a child has failed; and though a "failure" often represents more work than a "pass," no one but the teacher knows that. Every failure brings down the percentage, and percentage is credit, position, and daily bread to the teacher; so he is bound to keep the names of these unlucky children off his schedule if possible. It is often easy enough to do this. He has only to sternly enforce the ordinary rules of the school in most cases, and the undisciplined children soon rebel, and tell sad tales of hard usage at school to friends at home, which speedily bring clamouring mothers to the school, vowing vengeance on the teachers. The surest punishment they can think of is to send the children to another school, where they quickly pass through the same experience, and are removed to another. Often these children alternate in attendance, between three or four schools for several years, and are never examined in one.

(To be concluded.)

A Great People with Bad Laws.

IN the Pall Mall Gazette M. Emile de Laveleye describes our nation as a great people under bad laws, and proves his point by reference to existing anomalies in our home government. He refers to the land laws, and the unequal distribution of the soil, which is really vested in the hands of a very few; the insecurity of title deeds; the complicated system which practically results in accumulating fortunes for legal men at the cost of their clients; and the immense cost involved in any legal action of a civil kind. That these things are as this eminent Frenchman asserts cannot be denied. Rogues find our laws, in not a few particulars, helpful to their success, while honest men have difficulty in obtaining justice, through the complication and cost involved in seeking it. To such abuses as these our legislators need to turn their attention, in order to avert growing discontent.

M. Laveleye, in asking how it is that with such imperfect laws we are a great nation, attributes the fact to the religious principles which largely prevail amongst us. These teach us "to aim at perfection and to do good each man to his neighbour," and so counteract in great measure our bad legislation. The Quakers are justly spoken of as a class who, as apostles of peace, of justice, and equality, have brought not only England but humanity in general under a vast debt, and their prominence in philanthropy is traced to their close following of Gospel teaching. The 600,000 Sunday-school teachers, voluntarily working in our land for the good of others, are also appealed to as a proof of the power of religious sentiment. The religious atmosphere pervading the families of England, and more notably of Scotland, is said to be so different to what is found on the Continent, that one would imagine himself on another planet.

It is instructive to find such views propounded by a foreigner, and to ponder well his words when he exhorts us to reform, as soon as possible, our bad laws, and to carefully maintain and strengthen our religious principles, seeing they are the real cause of our pre-eminence.

THE BITTER BONDAGE.

By Rev. G. F. PENTECOST, D.D.*

"And the Egyptians made the children of Israel to serve with rigour; and they made their lives bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field: all their service, wherein they made them serve, was with rigour."—Exod. i. 13, 14."

HERE we have a vivid picture of the sinner's condition in this world; or, in other words, we have a picture of the life of the unconverted. Sin is the hard taskmaster which the god of this world has set over the souls who are in his power.

It may be replied that sinners do not find it so. I am aware that there is a popular delusion, especially among the young, that the way of the Christian life is a hard and rigorous one, in which all the spontaneous and joyous instincts and impulses of nature have to be suppressed; in which pleasures of all kinds have to be denied, and life is sobered and made serious to the point of gloominess: that it is one constant battle with the flesh, which has to be denied and put down at all points. There is hardly enough truth in this statement to make it recognisable to the real Christian; nevertheless, this distorted picture is so cunningly set before the eyes of sinners, especially the young, by the devil, that many are deterred from entering upon the Christian life through fear that all joyousness and brightness will go out of life for them. In a word, the devil would persuade them to the belief that the only path of pleasure lies through this world, and in the ways of sin; that the service of God is bondage, and the service of sin is liberty.

But the truth is far otherwise. The ways of wisdom are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace. Not to speak of the joy of knowing sin forgiven, and of heaven made sure by the resurrection of Jesus from the dead, the actual service of Christ is full of blessedness. "Take my yoke upon you and learn of Me," says our Lord; "for my yoke is easy, and my burden is light."

There are some Christians no doubt who give an evil report of the Christian life, upon whose neck the yoke chafes, and to whom the burden is wearisome; but these are they who have not put the yoke well on—who have not honestly and earnestly lifted the burden fully up, or taken it on their shoulders. I remember to have heard an old farmer say that the yoke that was not fitted close down upon the shoulder would always chafe, especially if the ox would insist on throwing his head around as though he would rather go the other way; but if the yoke were well on and the ox went straight ahead there was no chafing. I am sure that is so with Christians who have only reluctantly and in a half-hearted way put on the yoke of service; but those who have fully given themselves to the Lord in service, and are not looking back to Egypt, have their hearts full of his peace, and find that the yoke is lined with love.

It is so with the burdens which come with Christian service. I remember walking through Switzerland a few years ago, carrying a knapsack on my shoulders. I noticed that in the course of walking and climbing it had a tendency to slip down on my back. This made even the comparatively light load heavy and burdensome. But when I wished to rest from this sense of burden, I had only to thrust my thumbs under the shoulder straps and raise the knapsack well up on my shoulders, and then rest came. This is quite true of the burdens which Christ gives us to carry. If we lazily let them drag down upon us they are wearisome; but if we take them heartily and carry them well up on the shoulder they are not heavy.

The way of the sinner, however, is not a pleasant one. Indeed, the Scriptures say that "the way of transgressors is hard." And I am sure that the experience of sinners bears out this Scriptural declaration. The devil's taskmasters make them serve with rigour. Take, for example, some of those who are under the whip of passion and appetite. The drunkard, for instance. Perhaps at the beginning he found some pleasure in the cup; nor did he dream that his master was at once forging a chain of appetite upon him, and preparing bitter service for him. But look at him now! See how he is urged on by the fiery whip of his thirst. He is made to serve with rigour. Many times he has tried to free himself, but, alas! his master is remorseless, and only drives him into more bitter bondage and more rigorous service. Oh, my heart has ached to see these poor slaves of strong drink driven hopelessly and miserably on. Ask any one of them if it is not a bitter bondage. Do you doubt the answer?

Or go to the man or woman who has been carried out of the path of virtue and made to tread the path of sin under the soft and silken lash of passion which has been laid across their soul rather like a breath than the scourge of a taskmaster. But now that they are fairly in this field, ask them what it is to be a slave to their passions, to live under the dominion of the lower half of their nature. Who can tell what the first hot and burning welt of pain was which followed the first stroke of passion's whip? Oh, the bitter tears, the conscious shame, the first feeling of self-loathing! It was assuaged, however, by a delusive lotion; and again the taskmaster urged his victim on with the goad of pleasure; and so it went on until at last the hard, coarse, knotted thong of unbridled passion drove his slave. The sins that first enticed ceased to give pleasure; but still the sinner is urged on further and further along this dark pathway, until now, at the very gate of hell, the hot flash of coming torment enswathes the soul.

Do you say that all unconverted persons are not under the dominion of appetite and passion? Quite true. Satan has more than one taskmaster. Here is one. He is well known as Mammon, or Covetousness. How persuasive and plausible he was at first! How seductive was his argument for wealth! Presently you got fairly into this field. At first there was charm and delight. Self was gratified. Ambition sprang into place, and mounted the throne, and seized the reins of your life, and began laying on the lash. Does any one think that the pursuit of wealth and the battle for gold is an easy service. Go and ask that tired and weary merchant, who leaves his home early and comes back late, who sees little of his family, who is almost a stranger to his children; go and see him in his office, often harried and distracted with care and anxiety; and he will tell you that the compensations of wealth are hardly come by. He meant to retire when he had secured a moderate competency; but now the passion for acquisition and gain has got the mastery, and daily he is driven forward under the spur of a mammon greed. It is not needful to follow this slave further. He is often envied by the people of God; but they know not what bitter bondage there is in connection with "the prosperity of the wicked."

The same may be said of those who are caught and carried away with the desire for the empty and ambitious honours of this world. And as for the poor slaves of mere worldly pleasure, scarcely a word needs to be said. The passion for passing pleasure is a shallow though tyrannical one. Men and women are caught in this snare, and driven headlong in its course. But there is no peace in it. The desire for pleasure grows by what it feeds on, and becomes more insatiable every day, and with every momentary gratification. It leaves no fragments behind to satisfy after the feast has been eaten. All pleasures perish with the momentary enjoyment, so that the poor soul that is serving in this fair field is driven forth with every new day or night to seek after fresh pleasures. Old ones pall, and new ones are rare.

If you could look at the weary languidness of the devotees of mere pleasure in those moments when the excitement and stimulus of the lash is off them, you would not envy them their life. Tired and weary in body, restless and discontented in mind, hungering after peace and real pleasure which the world at its best estate cannot give, with every new day they must still go forth under the master to whom they have yielded themselves to obey, ever stretching forth their arms after happiness, only to bring them back again unfilled.

Surely there is no phase of this Egyptian life that is other than bondage and weariness. The hardest labour, and the sorest trials, which may come to the child of God who knows the presence of the Lord, are bliss in comparison with the most delightful pleasures the world can give, if we take into account the bitter dregs that lie in the bottom of pleasure's cup. It is not without reason that the prophet cries out in God's name to the bondslaves of this world: "Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters: and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Wherefore do ye spend money for that which is not bread? and your labour for that which satisfieth not? Hearken diligently unto Me, and eat ye that which is good; and let your soul delight itself in fatness. Incline your ear, and come unto Me: hear, and your soul shall live; and I will make an everlasting covenant with you, even the sure mercies of David" (Is. lv. 1—3).

Thus we see in this picture of Israel in Egypt the life of the unconverted in this present evil world. The land may be fair and fruitful of "melons and leeks, onions and garlick," and with all strong-tasting food for the flesh; but Egypt life is bitter bondage at best; and daily it must become worse, until it is dealt out to you with rigour, and you be urged on with the unpitying whip of sin.

WORKING GIRLS IN KINGSLAND.—We have taken a house for this work near Dalston Junction, and come into possession of it on 28th inst. The premises appear most suitable, and contain good club-rooms and class-rooms, as well as accommodation for the resident workers. A lady will devote her time to work amongst the rough women and girls with which this neighbourhood abounds, and two others will work as district nurses. We believe the value of the Mission work will be greatly increased by the establishment of such a permanent centre, but the coming year will be a heavy one, as we shall have to spend a considerable sum immediately on the necessary furniture. We hope to announce the opening of the Institute in the course of next month, but if another £100 could be raised by that time it would greatly cheer the hearts of those on whom rests the burden of the work. The Treasurer is Mrs. Hutchinson, 15, Cavendish-square, London, W.

TADPOLES: A PARABLE.

IT was in a vale: a lovely spot, where a merry brooklet ran through a small copse, and then tumbled in confusion, broken and shattered, over rugged stones. A little above, where the waters were quiet, a family of almost full-grown tadpoles lay upon the muddy margin meditating.

As I sat upon a stile overlooking this peaceful scene, I seemed to understand the thoughts revolving in their large heads, for somehow a notion had seized them that they were not destined to abide for ever in this low and grovelling world: there was a higher sphere, a future and nobler life, and some of them declared they were preparing for it. Some, however, seemed possessed with a desire to see the extent to which they could go in their present state of being, and so ventured out into the middle of the stream, where the new sensation at first greatly pleased them.

But there was danger near, for the course ran deeper and stronger. Yet, what cared they? They were not going to mope eternally in such shallow water: they must dance in the swift current and sport in the midst of jeopardy. I watched one of the adventurers as he ventured further and further from the shore. At length I saw him swim into midstream, where he was turned and twisted in all directions. Too late he realised his position. Too late he began to struggle against the downward rush. On, on, on he went! Faster and faster, until he was hurried over the fatal brink and I saw him no more.

How like, I mused, to many of our young people, who, tired of quiet home-life, risk soul and body upon the stream of sin and fashion, to be hurried downward to destruction.

Again I watched: this time I noticed some who for a time were more fortunate. By great energy and many efforts they managed to venture into the stream, and yet reach a place of temporary safety against a stone or a piece of weed. Some I saw escape a final and fatal fall almost at the verge of death. But they had no peace, no rest: it was a life of constant risk and struggle. As for their security, it was but for a moment: sooner or later I saw one after another hurried down the stream, wriggling and writhing in vain.

Young people, you may get into danger and yet for a time escape; but it will not be a happy life, for your security may end at any moment. You will venture farther and farther, each venture bearing you nearer the fall; your moments of apparent safety only cause you to run into danger with greater needlessness.

At length I thought of a plan by which I might illustrate God's great salvation. Another foolish tad was coming down the stream, rolling and turning in hapless, hopeless, helpless haste. Nearer and nearer he hurried toward the waterfall, but, stepping down upon a stone that stood in mid-stream, I put my hand into the water and rescued the little fellow. I know not what he thought of his position. Perhaps he imagined himself in greater danger than ever from such a monster, but he soon learned that all my strength was put forth on his behalf, for, carrying him where the water was still and calm, I placed him once more in his native element, and had the pleasure of seeing him shake his tail with evident delight.

Is not this the way in which Jesus stretches forth his hand to save? He stoops—oh, such a step!—from the shores of glory to the waters of death. I only wetted my hand. He had to say, "All thy waves and thy billows are gone over me" (Ps. xlii. 7). And this, that He might snatch a worthless creature from an everlasting destruction, and place it in the "still waters" of his love.

If I had not saved my little friend at the moment he was passing it would have been too late. Now or never is the word. Do not endeavour to escape the saving hand. Do not think to save yourself. Wayward ones, the time is short.

"Jesus ready stands to save you,
Full of pity, joined with power:
He is able,
He is willing—doubt no more."

WILLIAM LUFF.

"SHE WOULD TELL HIM A BEAUTIFUL STORY."

Two little ragged children,
Comrades for more than a year;
One sold flowers on a doorstep,
One swept a crossing near.

He was a sturdy, strong laddie,
Brimful of mischief and fun;
She was a staid little lassie,
With hair tinged gold by the sun.

When the toil of the day was o'er,
And the street was dim and lone;
She would tell him a beautiful story,
She heard of a kingdom called Home.

Roses that cost not a penny,
Grew in that garden fair;
Lilies that never will fade
Blossom in winter—there.

Over the golden threshold,
Children were always at play;
Nobody sang there for money,
Nobody drove them away.

And when she had finished her story,
They wished that a stranger would come,
And show them the way on the journey,
That led to that kingdom called Home.

One night when the snow was falling,
He came for the oft-told tale;
But her voice began to falter,
And her cheek was wan and pale.

One kiss on the gold-crowned forehead,
And he knew that the Stranger had come
To take her away on her journey,
That ends in the kingdom called Home.

JESUS AS A MECHANIC.

Like all Jewish boys, Jesus became an apprentice to a trade at an early age. It is said that every Jewish father was bound to do four things for his son, namely: to circumcise him, to redeem him, to teach him the law, and to teach him a trade. This was in keeping with that Jewish proverb which says: "He who teaches not his son to do some work, is as if he taught him robbery." Joseph was a carpenter, and he doubtless taught Jesus such a trade. This enabled him to earn his own living; for it cannot be supposed that he would have consented, had he not been obliged to learn a trade, to be a needless burden to his parents. His high sense of honour, even at an early age, prevented him from yielding to any temptation to shirk the responsibilities growing out of his filial relations to his parents. He owed it to them, as well as to himself, to not only learn a trade, but to make it a means of self-support. And if he obtained anything beyond the necessary expenses of living, either for himself or his parents, it is not likely that he hoarded it up, but, rather, dispensed it for the good of others. Such an idea is in keeping with his general public ministry.

But let us look at the young mechanic from another point of view. In the first place, he soon learned the trade. His keen intellect was quick to comprehend every requirement of the vocation. He soon perceived the different relations which the several parts sustained to each other; and then he vigorously applied himself to execute the duties belonging to the business. Whatever he did was done thoroughly. There was no slighting of the work. He did not cover up what ought to be revealed. He did not put poor material into some place where he thought it might not be easily detected, and then seek to convey the impression that it was "a good job," and charge as much for it as though it were the best. If it happened that some of the material was not first class, he candidly told his customer the truth about it, without being asked. At no time did he ask anything more for his labour than it was worth. If he worked by the day, he gave full time. He did not keep his eye on his employer, and when he was out of sight loiter away his time.

He was honest in all that he did and said. He was as faithful in the little things as he was in the large things, of his avocation. He was, indeed, a model mechanic, not only in respect to the work he did, but as an example for every mechanic to follow. And who shall say that his experience as a mechanic did not qualify him the better for the greater work which followed?—Christian Secretary.

WORKERS AND INVALIDS.—The aim of the Christian Workers' and Invalids' Mutual Help Association is to bring each confirmed invalid lady in the United Kingdom into direct communication by means of correspondence with a Christian worker. It is found there are many invalid ladies whose ill-health prevents their actively engaging in work amongst the poor, or in other spheres, who derive great pleasure and profit from corresponding with a Christian sister busily engaged in the Lord's vineyard. In very many cases strong personal friendships have grown up between the correspondents. We would advise any of our lady readers whose hearts are led to join in this quiet but useful and most blessed work, to write for a little book giving full details of the working of the society. A copy will be sent free to anyone forwarding an addressed halfpenny wrapper to Mrs. Daniel Tomkins, Sutherland House, Great Yarmouth.

DR. BARNARDO'S ANNIVERSARY.

IN reporting the great annual gatherings at Exeter Hall, in connection with these well-known institutions, it is not easy to import the element of freshness. Year by year we have what appears to be the same small army of smiling youth filling up the benches of the spacious orchestra, charming us by their sprightly looks, and their sweet songs; the same influential platform, with Earl Cairns and Dr. Barnardo for the central figures; the same cogent arguments and irresistible appeals on behalf of the work, and the same responsive throng of listeners filling every corner of the immense auditorium. The only variation that we invariably find on these occasions is the announcement of some fresh development in this good, and great, and growing work. Whereunto it will grow, we are not able to foresee. To appearance there will be ample room and verge enough for many more developments and extensions before the raison d'être of the institutions passes away and ceases to be; unless, indeed, the millennium arrives, and the misery, vice, and sorrow, so rife about us now, are swallowed up in a golden age of plenty, purity, and universal peace.

The very successful meeting of Thursday last was marked by all the characteristics to which we have referred. Greatest of all the attractions, of course, was the presence of the children from the Homes, numbering about 700. These constituted a choir which any conductor might envy. Thanks to the well-nigh perfect training and leadership of Mr. J. Proudman, their rendering of the long and varied musical programme, with its frequent surprises and prettily conceived auxiliary "effects" would be alone sufficient to draw and hold an audience. The arrangement of the children was most pleasing to the eye. The girls, in their neat and tasteful attire, were grouped in the centre, looking like a huge parterre of pure white lilies, while an effective background was formed by the dark suits, tinged with scarlet, of the boys and youths. These points may appear small, but they indicate the thorough-going way in which the institutions are conducted.

But it is time to refer to the speeches. First of all, and chief of all as usual, was the address by the noble Chairman,

EARL CAIRNS.

The Homes, said his Lordship, live from day to day, from hour to hour, on the kind support of the public. We are always anxious, therefore, to keep our friends informed as to the progress of the Institutions. This meeting takes place at a critical point in the history of the Metropolis. Much interest has been awakened with respect to the condition of "Outcast London." It was time that such a fierce light should be thrown on this subject, but to those who know the work of these institutions, the subject is no new one. Why, it is out of this very condition of things that Dr. Barnardo's work has sprung. During its existence it has rescued, at least, six thousand boys and girls from the filth, and squalor, and vice of London; has not only fed, clothed, and educated them, but given them a good start in life. In order to bring about these results, the children had to be sought out and taken away from their evil surroundings, and placed under the gentle influences of tenderness and care, and the softening power of the Gospel.

His Lordship proceeded once again to retell the oft-told tale of "the special features and characteristics of the Barnardo Homes"—no voting, no really destitute case refused, physical infirmity no barrier to admission, no early limitation of age, a watchful care and oversight displayed for an adequate period after the children have gone out into active life; instead of a "barrack life" for the girls, the domestic system as adopted in the Village Homes at Ilford. Last of all and best of all, the children are trained up in the knowledge of God, and it is earnestly sought to bring them under the saving power of the grace of God. It is a gratifying fact that this end has in a large number of cases been attained.

The Emigration Department is receiving increased attention. The best results has been attained with respect to those already sent out. Mr. Phipps, of Northampton, has given 1000 acres of land for the purpose of training boys in agricultural pursuits. Last year 255 boys and girls were emigrated, mostly to Canada, but some to Africa and Australia. Forty other boys are now ready to go if the needful funds are provided. Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. Cox, a house at Peterboro', Ontario, with accommodation for 100 children, and six acres of land, has been made over, rent free, to the trustees of the Homes. The children are kept there till proper provision is made for their settlement. Dr. Barnardo hopes to take a trip across the Atlantic during the coming autumn, to inspect this part of the work, but he cannot well go till the finances of the Mission are on a better footing.

As to the number of children benefitted during the past year, the noble Chairman gave the following figures: Boys and girls received into all the branches of the institution, 1812; emigrated or otherwise started in life, 589; 11 died: leaving at the close of the financial year over 1200 inside the Homes. In addition to these, a large number have attended the ragged schools. Altogether the number of those dealt with is 400 in excess of any previous year. The question of the "babies" has been an element of difficulty in past years, and it has hitherto been met by placing one baby in each of the Ilford cottages. A good friend of the Homes has given a suitable house at Hawkhurst, Kent, where there is accommodation for twenty-six babies; twenty-two are there at the present time. Another development is an "All-night Refuge," which has been opened in Stepney, for destitute children. It is desired to increase the number of cottages at Ilford, and for this purpose land has been secured. There is here an opportunity for any friend or friends of the children, to donate the sums requisite for the erection of these new cottages. Reference was made to the rebuilding and repairing of the Mission Hall at the "Edinboro' Castle," at a cost of £6500. Night after night the hall is resorted to by multitudes, who listen to the preaching of a pure Gospel.

Coming to the question of finance, Earl Cairns reported that the income for the year had been £55,740—apparently an increase of £10 000 as compared with last year; but against that there were special payments for the "Edinboro' Castle," the ground at Ilford, emigration expenses, &c., amounting to £13,000, so that the increase of income is not what it seems. At the close of the financial year, on March 31, there was an overdraft on the banking account of over £2000, and now that amount has largely increased, so that the deficit stands at £8000. The conductors of the Homes must look to the kind generosity of the kind Christian public to rid them of the incubus of this debt, so that the work may go on with success, and the blessing of God upon it.

DR. BARNARDO.

In rising "to say a few words," Dr. Barnardo, the Director, was greeted with thunderous applause. He was not going to read the report: he would take it as read, and hoped they would all read it for themselves when it is published and circulated. He would rather tell of one case that had come under his personal observation to shew what becomes of the children when they have been rescued. He thought they were doing an equally important work when they helped some struggling widow in making provision for some of her children, as when they rescued the young victims of evil surroundings. He mentioned that, to show that their work did not touch one class exclusively. Coming to details, Dr. Barnardo told the story of an Irish boy, "one of the most picturesque young ragamuffins" he had ever seen. His mother and some young sisters were all leading an evil life. The boy applied for admission, was taken in, and was well clothed. By and by he disappeared, and, after considerable trouble and personal risk, was discovered and rescued, with all his clothes gone and pawned for drink. He was taken back, educated, became a master in the school, became a Christian, was married, last year got a prize for having kept his situation for five years, and now, having a house of his own, has received a little girl rescued from misery, and has adopted her that he may lavish on her some of the love and kindness bestowed on himself. The Doctor said he thought this was work worth doing; he made it the text for a most earnest appeal for the removal of the debt and for continued support in the glorious work of saving the little ones. It was true he turned none away, and some might say he was to blame for that; but how could he help it? There was plenty of money when a man wanted to buy a race-horse, or a piece of costly furniture, or a rare book; was it to be said that the needed means were not forthcoming when the saving of the little ones from a terrible fate was in question? Dr. Barnardo concluded an impassioned appeal by announcing gifts amounting to £1500, including £500 from Mr. Samuel Morley and £400 from Mr. R. Cory, Cardiff. The total amount collected during the evening was £2340, and subsequent gifts up to the end of the week have, we believe, increased the sum to £3100. It will thus be seen that £4900 is still needed to meet the deficiency.

MR. SAMUEL SMITH, M.P.,

was the next speaker. He had lately gone over the Homes with the director, and he had been delightfully surprised at the extent and character of the work, though he had long taken a deep interest in it. He regarded this work as one of the social phenomena of the day, which all Christian philanthropists and statesmen should take account of. If it were not for noble Christian effort of this kind the state of our social system would be very hopeless and deplorable. This work began at the right end, by taking hold of the children, before they had become too far gone for recovery. What misery had been prevented, and happiness imparted, if only in the case of the 6000 children who had been rescued and cared for in the past! He wished the Education Department, by compelling all the children of the land to pass through some course of useful industrial training, would take a leaf out of Dr. Barnardo's book. After some further commendations of the work, Mr. Smith referred with high approval to the Emigration branch of the work, which he maintained was the most fruitful kind of charitable effort they could engage in when dealing with these destitute classes. There is far more scope in the British Colonies than in this overcrowded country. His experience had been that ninety-five per cent. of those sent out had turned out well. The Emigration movement was also doing good service to the Colonies which want and welcome these young lives into their borders. Thousands and tens of thousands of children could still be sent to them. Our Colonial Empire is seventy-eight times as large in area as Great Britain, yet we have three times the population of all these territories combined. It is monstrous that we should have so much pauperism at home while these virgin soils are waiting to be peopled and cultivated. But the work must be done with wisdom and under Christian auspices. If it is made to run in pure channels, it is sure to prosper, and there is virtually no limit to it. How much better and nobler it would be for those who waste such large sums on a racehorse, or a piece of useless furniture, if they would devote the money to such grand objects as those sought after by institutions of this kind.

REV. DR. McEWAN,

who followed, pointed to the serried ranks of neatly-dressed and healthy-looking young people that occupied the platform; they were in themselves the best and most powerful plea that could be urged on behalf of the work. To see their happy faces, to hear the sound of their ringing voices, was argument enough. They tell their own tale, they plead their own cause, and h did not envy the man whose heart was not softened, whose soul was not stirred, and whose practical sympathy was not aroused and increased by the spectacle before him.

AN INTERESTING INTERLUDE

was the presentation of various prizes, provided by the generosity of members of the Committee, to a number of young men and women for length of service in their situations. The young women who gained these tangible tokens of good conduct and faithful service were clad in neat working attire and mob caps—the insignia of the honourable profession of domestic servants Several of the young men received watches as a reward of continued good conduct for a lengthened period.

Neat little speeches from Rev. Evan Hopkins, Mr. James Mathieson, and the noble Chairman, in reply to the customary "vote of thanks," brought a very successful and interesting anniversary to a close.

A Letter from Armenia.

DEAR SIR,—For a number of years I have had the pleasure of reading THE CHRISTIAN; I wish to repeat my former expression of gratitude for this favour. I always delight in reading it, and find an inspiration in witnessing the untiring industry of those whose labours you record. At times I have made use of its information to instruct our Sabbath congregation Especially have I taken pleasure in the effort, by the aid of the portable buildings, to reach the masses of London. The Lord continue to bless such an undertaking.

The Armenian nation, among whom we live, are longing for the promised "reforms," so that they may pass from under the almost intolerable burdens which oppress them. We have no expectation that they will realise their wishes until they have been converted to Christ, and faithfully obey that Gospel which they pretend to accept. The Lord has here and there called one from nature's darkness into his marvelous light, and in them is being laid the only foundation by which any nation can become great. We realise more than ever the truth that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is a reproach to any people"

Here in this city there is a Sabbath congregation of about 400 souls, a church of 160 members, a high school in which young men and boys are being trained to become teachers among our out-lying districts, besides common schools and a boarding-school for girls. The latter contains between thirty-five and forty scholars, and is conducted by the Misses Ely with marked success.

Among the villages in distances varying from three to seventy miles from this city, we have some twenty schools and preaching places. Just a year ago to-day, while Rev G. C. Reynolds and myself were returning from one of these, we were attacked by a Kurdish chief and two of his hirelings. Mr. Reynolds was severely wounded in many places by a sword, and I was beaten with a heavy oaken stick. Both of us were stripped, robbed, and left blindfolded, fettered, and helpless by the road-side. Mr. Reynolds weltering in his blood. Although five months after this sad event we identified the chief, yet until now he has been permitted to go at large by our Turkish officials. For four years past there has been an unprecedented amount of waylaying of caravans, plundering, and murdering, which has rendered it unsafe to tour among our people. Our late Governor-General, the abettor of all this, has been replaced recently by another man, and we hope for a better state of affairs.—Respectfully yours,

GEO. C. KNAPP.

CHILDREN CONVALESCENTS.—Mrs. Hillyar, Beulah Cottage, Plympton, Devon, writes to say that a cottage has been opened for the reception of children discharged from hospitals, who require country air and good food. Gifts of toys and clothing, as well as help towards the furnishing, will be welcomed. Further particulars as to terms on application.

THE MILLENNIAL KINGDOM.*

THE peculiarity of this book is that, like other writings of Mr. Govett, it draws a very sharp line of distinction between the Millennial kingdom and the Eternal kingdom, teaching that the latter is the gift of God to all believers, and consequently "This Eternal kingdom is ours in principle and in title, as we have by faith accepted God's gift."

But of the Millennial kingdom Mr. Govett teaches that very few Christians have much ground for hoping that they will attain that prize. He thinks the Apostle Paul "did not feel sure of the Millennial glory." The reason of this is that, according to his view, access to the Millennial kingdom is on a wholly different principle to that of salvation. Salvation is of grace—entrance to the Millennial kingdom is of works. No wonder, if this be true, that so few, we should think that any, enter therein.

Mr. Govett's whole theory is built up upon the unwarrantable assumption that the words "kingdom of God," or "kingdom of Heaven," when they occur in the Gospels—indeed, in the New Testament, generally refer, not to Gospel salvation, but to the Millennial kingdom solely. Finding frequent allusion to the kingdom in the Sermon on the Mount, he imagines that our Lord is there laying down the conditions of admission to the thousand years' reign, and that even before he has unfolded the way of salvation, or even—what most Christians believe to be the subject of that portion of Scripture—the needed preliminary teaching concerning the spirituality of God's law and its consequent far-reaching claims upon those under its sway

But not only of the Sermon on the Mount does Mr. Govett teach thus; he says, "It was of this 'kingdom,' rarely of 'eternal life,' that Jesus spoke." It has lately been pointed out in these columns that this distinction between the kingdom of God, viewed as solely the Millennial reign, and viewed as Gospel salvation, will not hold good when examined in the light of Scripture. David reigned seven years at Hebron, and subsequently thirty-three years at Jerusalem. Who would venture to say that the reign of David must mean the first portion of his reign only?

An ordinary reader would hardly imagine that anything could be found in the Epistle to the Hebrews about the Millennial kingdom, but Mr. Govett sees it in the words which occur early in the second chapter, "How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" This, according to him, "is not a word to the ungodly; 'salvation' in this Epistle is spoken of the full deliverance in the first resurrection."

To state such a view as this is surely sufficient to condemn it in the eyes of all who can view truth proportionately. To suppose that the "so great salvation which at the first was spoken by the Lord and was confirmed . . . by them that heard Him, God also bearing witness with signs and wonders, and with diver miracles, and gifts of the Holy Ghost," means only the admittance of believers into the Millennial kingdom is too great a perversion of the plain words of Scripture to deceive any but those who, at all hazards, will follow a theory wherever it may lead. As to the rigidity of the principle of exclusion which Mr. Govett thinks will be carried out, we may judge from one sentence: "Without immersion there is no entrance into the Millennial kingdom!"

There is much in this Commentary that is interesting and instructive, but we deplore greatly that a writer who might be so useful is himself misled, and so seeks to mislead others by this utterly groundless fancy of any real Christians being excluded from the Millennial kingdom. The first resurrection consists, we are distinctly taught (1 Cor. xv.), of "those that are Christ's at his coming," and we are taught also (1 Thess iii. 13) to expect the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ with all his saints."

*CHRIST SUPERIOR TO ANGELS, MOSES, AND AARON. A Comment on the Epistle to the Hebrews. By R. GOVETT. Nisbet & Co.

NATIONAL BIBLE SOCIETY OF SCOTLAND.—The Rev. Dr. Laws, of Livingstonia, was present by invitation at a meeting of directors held in Glasgow on Monday week, and made an interesting statement in regard to his translation of the New Testament into Chinyanja. It was very cordially agreed to undertake the publication of this new version, which will be available for at least a quarter of a million people in the vicinity of Lake Nyassa. At the same meeting the beginning of active colportage in Corea was reported. Two Japanese Christians have been placed at Fusan as colporteurs.

HE LEADETH.

A THOUGHT FOR THE SORROWING.

THE loving Saviour, on our homeward journey
Is leading us by ever-changing ways:
Oh, may we have the faith to trust his guidance,
And in the shadow still to give Him praise!

For oft He leads us into darkened dwellings,
And bids us stay within a silent room,
That we may know how sweet it is to suffer,
If only He is with us in the gloom.

Restored, He leadeth on to mountain summits,
Through pathways beautified by his own hand;
Whence we can drink the very breath of heaven,
And gaze in rapture o'er an unknown land.

He leads us, too, within his "hallowed acre,"
Beside the resting-place of one we love;
That He may tell us of the ransomed spirit,
And glad re-unions in his home above.

He leads us often amid countless crosses,
Yet not that we should be depressed, or sad;
But just that we may cast on Him our sorrow,
And in his sympathy be always glad.

He leadeth; but He leadeth ever onward,
And should He beckon us across the sea,
Thence He will bear us in his arms of mercy,
Within the haven of eternity.

Charity Organisation.

THE following indictment of the methods of the Charity Organisation Society is by Dr. Barnardo, in the current issue of Night and Day:

"One of the latest activities of the C.O.S. has been an attempt to organise the affairs of that admirable Christian enterprise entitled the Theatrical Mission. One of their inquiry officers called upon Mr. Courthope Todd, the excellent and devoted secretary of the Mission, and coolly installing himself in the office began to look into this and into that; he eventually withdrew, saying he would call next day to examine the books!

"Hearing of the affair, I strongly advised Mr. Todd, if the officer called again, to politely but firmly show him the door and desire him to mind his own business. It really surpasses belief that a Society which, although it raises five-sixths of its funds by appealing in the daily papers for money to relieve distress, and yet actually spends sixteen shillings out of every pound received on what are called 'Organisation expenses,' should have the hardihood and audacity to constitute itself a tribunal capable of determining the bona-fides or judiciousness of other charities!

"Its heartless treatment of numbers of the deserving poor is brought under my notice continually; for although a few case are helped by it, I have been forced to the conclusion that nearly all these instances have been taken up or recommended by local clergymen, Nonconformist ministers, or persons of standing, whose good opinion of the C.O.S. is actually purchased by the relief in question.

"It is wonderful, too, with what clever sagacity the Society endeavours to get hold of really earnest and good men, working in independent spheres, and tries to draw them into affiliation with it, publishing their names if they only venture inside one meeting, even though it is known such visitors are utterly opposed to the Society's schemes and principles. Some little time ago I pointed out in these columns how the Society had induced about twenty well-known Mission-workers from various parts of London to attend a special meeting, and forthwith published their names as though they were co-operating with the Society, when I was privately informed that to a man and woman they were indignantly opposed to the Society's measures. But surely such unworthy shifts show to open men's eyes to the true character of this great Bubble 'Organisation.'

"Let any one, who cares to know more fully of the doings of the Charity Organisation Society, write to the Rev. Brewin Grant, M.A., Vicar of St. Paul's, Bethnal Green, and he will send pamphlets and published cases which really constitute a powerful indictment of its treatment of the suffering poor."

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

Where are you Going?—2.

By LADY HOPE.

"NOW, here we are, close by the place," Harry continues. "Once and for all, will you come in?"

"Once and for all, I certainly will not," replies the other man, more decidedly than politely, perhaps.

"I am very sorry," says Ardent. "I wish you would come in."

"I tell you, I don't like that sort of . . . . Did you ever in your life see such a crowd? Well, we are living in strange days! Are all those people infatuated, too? Look at them bustling along, and pushing and struggling to get in. You would think it was a betting ground, or a chance for some commercial ventures. Anything like the way people are fooled in this country I never beheld! It is a joke! it is indeed—the best joke I have seen for a long time! Look at that old woman! Good gracious! you would think that her all depended upon her getting in. And there's a regular swell—how ridiculous he looks holding out that card in his hand. Do they have admission by ticket? Upon my word, if that isn't Tomkins pushing his way. He is trying to get in, I do believe. Tomkins! I say, Tomkins!"

But the man is deaf to all appeals. He vanishes with the crowd inside the gates.

"Well! this beats everything. It is as good as a play to watch those people. And now I suppose you want to push in too. So I shall take myself off, and wish you good luck when you get in there. A jolly good lark I shall have to-night, telling Fenton, and Hartley, and Brown, and all the other fellows about it. Good-bye! I hope you may enjoy yourself!"

And Burnett walks away.

He is pursued, however, by Ardent, who says—

"Don't let us part like this, John! Give me your address, and I'll come and call for you some day. On Saturday we might go somewhere together. If you want to be on the river, I'll come with you; I shall not have much time, but I can come for an hour or two. Let us go by ourselves, not a whole party."

"Thank you! I would rather be excused," says Burnett. "I have no desire to be preached to. I know what it would be now, if you and I were alone together in a boat for an hour or two. No thank you, old fellow! Much obliged all the same."

"Won't you give me your address even?" Ardent asks.

"Same old quarters," says Burnett, turning away.

Ardent enters alone through the crowd, and pushes his way up to the little side door, where the choir enters. He is a member of the choir. As he takes his seat amidst all the bright, earnest faces, two or three of the men accost him with the words—

"You are rather late to-night!"

He covers his face with his hands, and remains in this attitude for some minutes. His lips are moving, but only One listening ear has heard his thoughts.

The fact is that Burnett's words have been rather hard on this man. He has felt them more than he cares to show. Hartley, who is to be one of the recipients of the ludicrous side of this matter, has been in former days his greatest friend. Their homes adjoin in the country. They were schoolfellows once; and they have had many mutual interests, and not a few mutual friendships.

To think of a repetition of his conversation, under these circumstances, and in the light of sarcasm, not to say ridicule, galls him not a little. His thoughts are interrupted, however, by a burst of harmony. The choir has risen, and is singing the grand old promise set to music—

"When the storms of life are raging,
Tempests wild on sea and land,
I will seek a place of refuge
In the shadow of God's hand.
He will hide me . . . He will hide me,
Where no harm . . . can e'er betide me,
He will hide me . . . safely hide me,
In the shadow . . . of his hand."

Ardent is a member of the choir, and must rise, too. His tenor part sounds out grandly, and the very singing of those words strengthens him. He has a fine voice and accurate ear. Until this last winter his great talent had been in use only for what is called "pleasure." He has amused himself and his friends with a variety of songs, that have made him especially popular at every convivial party, and has enlarged, to an unusual degree, his circle of friends and acquaintances.

Little does he know that while he is saying secretly, from his innermost heart—

"Lord! Thou knowest that 'I am exceedingly filled with contempt.' The 'rebukes of Thy hand are upon me.' Oh! have mercy upon my tremblings! and keep me firm—keep me close to Thyself!"—little does he know that after his back was turned, his scoffing friend, having nothing to do, and having found his curiosity strangely excited by the scenes he has beheld and the words he has heard, has quietly entered the building with the crowd, and found himself seated amidst rows and rows—interminable rows! he thinks—of other people, none of them particularly strange-looking, none of them looking so very good, as he expected. He turns himself round, and looks about.

"They seem to be very ordinary mortals," he says. "They surely cannot have come to hear these fellows preach!"

But that they have come for some purpose of the kind is evident enough, for they are generally quiet and grave, and look as if they were bent on some definite purpose. As for noise, or laughter, or irreverence, there is not a sign of such a thing. He cannot make it out at all. There is not the air of restraint about the people that he has been accustomed to see in a church or chapel congregation; but an indescribable appearance of keen interest in every face, which puzzles him not a little. They all seem as if they were "looking out for something," he thinks; and this "appearance" must be contagious, for gradually his own face wears the same expression, and the man looks for a moment or two keenly alive to what is coming.

Unfortunately, however, it is just at this crisis that he discovers in the far distance, amidst the choir, his friend, Harry Ardent! There he stands, singing with his whole heart—

"He will hide me . . . He will hide me,
In the shadow . . . of his hand."

Burnett gazes in absolute amazement, till he has satisfied himself of the fact that he is not mistaken; and then the contrast between past and present strikes him as so utterly ridiculous, that in spite of all his efforts to the contrary, and in spite of the furious glances of his neighbours, he bursts into an uncontrollable fit of laughter. He is now requested by several people near him to "leave the hall, if he cannot behave better;" he is nudged, and whispered to, on every side. But he is immovable. A little opposition does him good; and the fervent desire to get rid of him that these people have manifested only serves to nail him to his seat.

"I am not going, to please you," at last he says, angrily. "I shall stay where I am."

"Then behave properly," says an old man who sits close by. "If you don't, we shall complain to the stewards, and they will put you out."

"Hush!" says the steward; and there is silence.

At the close of the hymn, a man leans forward from the end of one of the seats, and says—

"Let me come beside him! Just make room, will you? I am coming over there;" and he struggles his way down till he reaches the row of chairs where Burnett is sitting, and takes his place next to him.

Burnett is beginning to think he has made himself conspicuous, and is seriously considering what he shall do. Shall he beat a retreat? But this is no easy matter now! For the doorways, passages, every nook and corner of the vast building, are filling fast. It is impossible. He must wait patiently. He hopes the "affair won't last long."

While he is looking round, his new neighbour hands him a hymn-book, and points to a hymn.

"The people sing heartily!" He cannot deny this, and then he enters silently into a rough calculation as to the numbers that are present. This baffles him.

Mr. Moody on the Embankment.

The interest of these meetings seems to deepen as the end draws near. Last week, both afternoon and evening, great crowds, representative of all classes of the people, flocked to the Temple Gardens Hall. On Thursday afternoon Bishop Ryle was one of the many enthralled auditors, and led the meeting in prayer. The closing moments of this meeting were of a specially impressive character. Towards the end of the half-hour's prayer-meeting, Mr. Moody asked all whose hearts were burdened for the salvation of their children to rise. To this request a good many parents responded. Then in succession he desired all who wished prayer for the conversion of husband, wife, brother, sister, or other friend also to rise; many more stood. When, finally, he invited those who were themselves anxious about salvation to signify it by rising (the others having remained on their feet), it appeared as if the whole audience stood with bowed heads and uplifted hearts before the Lord. The tender solemnity and import of such scenes cannot be transferred to paper; they must be sympathetically witnessed to be understood and appreciated.

HOSPITAL SUNDAY AT THE HALL.

Last Sunday was the day appointed for making collections in all the London churches on behalf of the hospitals in the metropolis. In announcing, on Friday evening, that collections would be taken up for this object at all the four services of Sunday, Mr. Moody remarked that a good many people had expressed regret that there had been no collections at any of the meetings of the Mission held throughout the winter. Such persons would now have an excellent opportunity of showing their liberality. At one of the Sunday meetings, when announcing the collection, he naïvely suggested that every one present should contribute a sovereign as a thankoffering to God for having been blessed with good health during the past year; if they had not sufficient money with them, let them write a cheque and put it in the box. If this happy thought of the evangelist's could have been carried into practical execution during the day, at least £20,000 would have been added to the coffers of the London hospitals. As it was, the collection for the entire day amounted to £273 odd, which was by no means a discreditable show, all things considered.

Sunday was altogether a memorable day; for one thing, it was signalised by the presence at the Hall of not a few of those in the upper ranks of the social scale. We are not in the habit of laying much stress upon this, because we believe that all souls are alike precious in the sight of God. Still we could not but rejoice that such influential personages as Lord Wolseley, the Duke of Abercorn, Earl Jersey, Lord and Lady Aberdeen, Lady Gainsborough, several members of the Rothschild family, besides a good sprinkling of M.P.'s, were there during the day to sit at the feet of the renowned evangelist, and catch some of the holy fire that seems to course through his veins, and finds an outlet in such burning, rousing speech.

The early morning sermon was on "Sympathy," as exemplified in the case of the Good Samaritan. At the afternoon meeting, to a splendid congregation of women, Mr. Moody discoursed on "The death of Christ," tracing the various successive steps in the great tragedy of the Trial, Crucifixion, Burial, Resurrection, and Ascension of our Lord. The silent awe that brooded over the assembly, chaining their closest attention, despite the sultriness of the atmosphere in a crowded hall, as Mr. Moody told out the supreme Story of atoning love, was almost painful in its intensity. Rev. Newman Hall's prayer that followed was one of surpassing pathos and melting power, and we were not surprised to find the inquiry-room crowded at the close.

At the evening service Mr. Moody gave his famous sermon on "Excuses," touching the keys of the human heart with a master hand, and bringing to the light many of the popular and time-worn reasons that men offer for not accepting God's offer of salvation. The evangelist showed his wonderful gift of utilising any passing event as an illustration of his theme. Speaking of the danger of delay, by reason of the uncertainty of time, and pointing to the large choir behind him, he said: "There was a man in that choir last Sabbath; he is in his grave to-night." When dealing with the free-and-easy way in which many condemn the Bible without knowing its contents, he made reference to Professor Drummond's book, "Natural Law in the Spiritual World," "which is making quite a stir. People are asking each other what their opinion is? They will say they have only read it once, or they have only read portions of it, and they would not like to judge till they had read it more carefully. Yet people do not scruple to condemn the Bible without having read it at all."

THIS WEEK'S MEETINGS.

The closing week of the London Mission bids fair to be the most memorable of all. Not content with having special services for men in Temple Gardens Hall each evening, Mr. Moody has consented to give Gospel addresses on three afternoons. Besides this, meetings for conference and prayer are arranged for Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. Particulars as to subjects will be found in our list of Forthcoming Meetings. Mr. Moody will, of course, preside, and among those who have promised to take part are Canon Wilberforce, Dr. Pentecost, Rev. H. Webb-Peploe, &c. On Friday afternoon, at the close of an address by Mr. Moody on "The Holy Spirit for Service," there will be a United Communion—a most fitting event in connection with a Mission where sects and parties have been unknown. The farewell meeting will be held on Monday evening next, when space will be reserved for those who have professed conversion, in the various districts where the meetings have been held. Tickets for this meeting may be had on personal application, or by letter, with stamped addressed envelope, to Mr. Lindsay Brown, Temple Gardens Hall, Thames Embankment, E.C.

Messrs. Pentecost and Stebbins.

Many a heart was full and many an eye was dim during the closing scenes of Dr. Pentecost's last meeting, on Sunday evening, at Ecclestonstreet Hall. The prayer had gone up that the final meeting of the Mission might be marked by a crowning blessing, and assuredly that prayer was answered. Last week's meetings, afternoon and evening, deserve more than a passing mention, for each day seemed to have special characteristics. And yet, to pass on and speak only of Sunday evening, is entirely in accord with the feelings of those who were privileged to be present at the series; for while each gathering was blessed, and fruitful of results, Naphtali's portion marked the last—"satisfied with favour, and full with the blessing of the Lord."

The preacher's subject was Isa. lv. 11, "My word shall not return unto me void;" and a striking feature of the address was the frequency of the appeal to Scripture, not to point a sentence or grace a period, but in a spirit of truest faith and reverent worship. The preacher spoke of what that word had been to the people of God in ages past, and how promise after promise had been realised in the very teeth of seeming impossibilities; then he led on to the two great declarations in which an oath confirmed the word; the one, confirming in their hope the "heirs of promise;" the other, shutting the unbeliever out for ever from the rest of God. And the sermon closed with an earnest personal appeal to receive the word and decide for Christ.

Most touching was it to see what numbers rose in the crowded pews and aisles to claim a special interest in the closing prayer. And when the congregation was dismissed, the places of the hundreds who withdrew seemed to be quickly occupied again by the crowds who had filled the ante-rooms. In the after meeting very many openly confessed their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour. And when an opportunity was given for any present who had received definite spiritual blessing in the Mission to acknowledge it, the response from all parts of the crowded house was most affecting.

These brief sentences are not intended as a notice of a meeting or a sermon, nor yet as the account of an American preacher's success. They are the record of what God has wrought; to his great name be all the glory.

Cruelty to Children.

THE Liverpool Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children is doing admirable work. How I wish such an association existed in London! But no one can read the report of the Liverpool Society without being satisfied that it would not be possible to deal in London with cases in the manner it seems so easy to do in Liverpool. I have lately taken two little girls from the Liverpool Society's agents—children who had been starved, beaten, and kicked by the inhuman wretch whom they called father, their only bed the floor of a back cellar, their appearance such as would impress the least observant with the suffering they must have undergone—one blind of an eye, the other dwarfed in stature, and both bearing marks of long-continued ill-usage.

Were I less occupied I would myself have responded ere this to the appeal made in some of our daily papers that a Society for the Prevention and Punishment of Cruelty to Children should be started in London—a society which could stretch out its strong yet tender hands to every case of helpless childhood whose cry of distress is heard. Indeed, I proceeded so far in the matter, that I had asked several friends to co-operate in forming a committee of management, and I had hopes of securing the services of a young barrister-at-law, interested in such work, as the secretary; but the scheme, to be worked thoroughly, was almost too large to be attempted by one whose hands were already so full as mine. I felt, however, and still feel, the urgent need of such an Association, and I would gladly co-operate with others willing to undertake the real burden of organisation, and capable of carrying the matter to a successful issue.

Of the value of such an agency in London there can be no doubt, the daily papers affording abundant proof of the revolting cruelty to which defenceless children are often subjected by wretches scarcely worthy of the name of men and women.—Dr. Barnardo in "Night and Day."

THE SALVATION ARMY.—On Monday week, at Regent Hall, Oxford-street, Messrs. Oliphant, Sampson, and Pigott, the three "curates" who have lately joined the Army, gave addresses explaining their reasons for the change. On Saturday afternoon Mr. T. A. Denny laid the foundation-stone of a new building in Lisson-street, Edgware-road, adjoining the Metropolitan Railway station; the building to be erected will accommodate in the upper and lower rooms an aggregate of 3800 persons. At a luncheon given previous to the ceremony General Booth stated that the total cost would be about £3500, of which a large amount had been promised, whilst several handsome donations were handed in during the proceedings.

Continental and Foreign Notes.

A REVISED BIBLE IN GERMANY.—The Baden evangelical clergy ar making a new revision of the German Bible. Single books of the Old and New Testaments are undertaken with lively interest by different learned men.

MR. T. J. SAWYER, a negro merchant at Freetown, Sierra Leone, has placed £1000 in the hands of the Church Missionary Society, to be invested for the benefit of the Native Church in Sierra Leone and its missionary work.

SABBATH KEEPING.—The Swiss section of the International Society for the observance of the Sabbath states that in many places in Switzerland wages are now paid on Friday evenings, which greatly helps the housewife in her preparation for Sunday. In Solothurn many places of business are closed on Saturday afternoon.

HAVRE, FRANCE.—Mr. G. Whelpton, who is at work among seamen in this port, states in a recent letter that he has had much encouragement in connection with the conversion both of English and French, especially the latter. He would be glad of a visit from any Christian friends sojourning in Havre during the summer season. His address is 2, Rue Joinville, Havre.

IT is reported in Calcutta that many native ladies are contracting a taste for novel-reading. It would be sad indeed if the efforts so kindly made to give them a knowledge of English were to bear this kind of fruit. There is reason to believe that the educated natives of India, both men and women, are taking largely to the reading of trashy novels that stimulate the passions and the imagination without giving any compensatory good. They take hold of European culture at the wrong end.—Bombay Guardian.

THE steamer Corisco, which lately arrived in the Mersey from the West Coast of Africa, conveys the report that health on the coast was very bad, and that several deaths had taken place from fever. On the Congo the Baptist Missionary Society is reported to have suffered severely in their missionary staff on the river. Three missionaries who went out a few months ago were said to have succumbed to the disease. At Manyanya three deaths occurred in two days, and in consequence the Mission-house has to be removed to a site higher up the river. Ill-health has also compelled one of the two other missionaries to return to Europe.

CAPE COLONY.—A friend writes from George Town:—"As our faithful pastor had to attend a synod in Cape Town, he entrusted his congregation to Mr. Gamble, from Mr. Guinness's College. His work was soon richly crowned with revival, which commenced amongst the children. One very interesting case is that of a young girl who "went for the sake of going, but not for worship." Her conversion was instantaneous, and the next day she burnt all her secular songs, determined that in future her voice should only sing the praises of her King. She is now an active worker, and thirsts to gain souls, and to tell what Jesus has done for her. The children brought their parents, and the blessing spread. Mr. Gamble has been an honoured instrument in leading many out of darkness into light."

CAIRO.—A soldier stationed here writes asking for prayer that a spiritual revival may take place amongst the troops of the British army in Egypt. He says: "The missionaries of the American Mission are very kind to our men. They have received them cordially, and opened their house for the men. The ladies of the Mission work a deal amongst the men, together with the Rev. J. MacTaggart, Presbyterian, and Rev. W. Baxter, Wesleyan. A lady and gentleman living in Cairo have also opened their house to the men, where they can go and spend an hour for Bible study or prayer on almost any evening."

THE TURIN EXHIBITION.—I have just returned from visiting the great Exhibition at Turin and have made arrangements for the circulation of Gospels and tracts in the Italian language. 6000 Gospels have been given by the Trinitarian Bible Society, 5000 Scripture cards and prayers, &c., by a lady, and 12,000 tracts by the Monthly Tract Society, besides which this Society has sent out several electro types for printing 200,000 Gospel tracts, illustrated. The reception of truth in this way is most encouraging. The one thing now most needed is the erection of a kiosk—where preaching, Bible-reading, prayer, and the circulation of tracts, &c., may be carried out, for which the prayers and help of Christian friends is required. JOHN STABB.

Notes and Comments.

A CORRESPONDENT, in writing with reference to a meeting lately held at Highgate, in connection with Theatre-services for the people, makes an excellent suggestion. He says:—

"One cannot help being reminded of the many opportunities of doing good those have who are the possessors of grounds large enough for public meetings. Most of our principal suburban thoroughfares are thronged with people on Sunday evenings during the summer months. How many spacious lawns there are where a Sunday evening service could be held. Let those Christians who are anxious to further the cause of Christ, consecrate their lawns to this noble purpose; there are plenty of workers who would be ready to assist."

In Work and Leisure, a magazine published by Hatchards, and devoted to the interests of women, there appears this month an article entitled "Suburban Hospitality." It appeals to dwellers in suburban districts, who have means at their disposal, to lay themselves out for usefulness by inviting Christian workers in the metropolis to bring parties of their poor protégés down to their residences for a day's country air and enjoyment. This would not only be true hospitality, but would prove a means of doing good of incalculable worth to both givers and receivers. Each effort of this sort is one little handful thrown into the great gulf which separates one class from another, and bears its part in filling it up. Many a Sunday-school teacher, Bible-class leader, or district visitor working in crowded city districts, would be thankful indeed for an invitation to come with twelve or twenty of the poor for whom they labour to some country spot within twenty miles of town.

The combination of active work with prayer and close study of the Word is a condition of spiritual life that we do well diligently to cultivate. Action without prayer is like firing a gun without a charge, or running without an errand, while for a Christian worker to neglect the careful study of the Bible is to have zeal without knowledge, and to embark on a voyage without compass or chart. Only so far as religious activity is the outcome of spiritual life is it pleasing to God, or really profitable to men. We are in danger of forgetting this. In the multiplication of public meetings, and in the ceaseless round of busy engagements we are liable to lessen the fervour and constancy of private devotion. It should be borne in mind that the sanctuary can never take the place of the closet, nor outward service be a substitute for secret communion with God.

Adulteration of food is properly regarded as a criminal offence and is punishable by law. A similar evil exists in reference to the spiritual nutriment provided for the souls of men, although it is regarded by many with far less apprehension and censure. An important discussion was held at the meetings of the Church Association Conference at Willis's Rooms the other day on "Dangers connected with Mixed Missions." The importance of withstanding efforts to mix truth and error, as also of refusing to coalesce with those who depart from the Word of God, was insisted on, and the evil of neutrality in reference to the defence of the Gospel pointed out. Assuredly there is a stand which believers in the infallibility and authority of the sacred Scriptures, and in the great doctrines of the Gospel are called upon to take, else the confessors and protestors of bygone days, who form "the noble army of martyrs," were needlessly firm and foolishly rash.

A great mistake is made by many modern Christians as to the nature of charity. On the ground of being charitable to the opinion of others, numbers of orthodox believers deem it right to pass by fundamental errors without a word of protest, and will even unite with those who propagate them, in works of usefulness. To give countenance to what is contrary to revelation and subversive of truth is to be responsible for its influence over the minds of others, even though we do not ourselves endorse it. A faithful maintenance of God's Word and stern refusal to yield to any departures from it, is one of the chief points that Christ singles out for commendation and enforcement in his messages to the Seven Churches in Asia: "He that hath an ear let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the Churches."

The well-known itinerant evangelist, Rev. W. Taylor, has been appointed missionary bishop for Africa by the Methodist Episcopal General Conference at Philadelphia. Commenting on the appointment, an American contemporary says:—

"With all due respect to synods and conferences of sincere, holy, and wise pastors and office-bearers of churches, they sometimes do things that we can in no way account for. One of these unaccountable things is making William Taylor, the street-preacher of San Francisco, and subsequently the apostle of India and South America, a bishop. We would as soon think of making Mr. Moody a bishop, or for that matter the Apostle of the Gentiles. A bishop Paul was in a certain sense, for he was not only an overseer for Asia, but for Europe also; but to regulate the churches was only part of his aim. The great object was to convert sinners, whether of the heathen or the circumcision—to bring them to Christ, and form them into living churches. This also, we take it, has been William Taylor's high and very successful work."

Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., in speaking at the annual meeting of the Charity Organisation Society, wisely cautioned against the tendency to do charitable work by deputy, and permitting organisations to stand in the place of personal contact with the poor. The advantage gained by the wealthier classes mingling with their poorer neighbours is great every way; and from the Christian standpoint at least no greater mistake can be made than to think charity ends with money aid, or can be truly shown by deputing another to do what each one should in Christlike compassion do as far as possible himself. Mr. Smith rightly says no greater evil could happen to English society than a cessation in the intercourse between the rich and the poor. But if so, where is the sphere of the C. O. S.?

In view of Dr. Verner White's assertion that Romanism produces disloyalty, pauperism, and crime, the proofs furnished in this month's Voice of Warning, of its rapid increase in our midst, are indeed alarming. The estimates made by Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, F.G.S., shows a Roman Catholic population in the United Kingdom (exclusive of Ireland) of 1,193,000. Whereas in 1841 we had 600,000 Roman Catholics, in 1881 we had 1,500,000, an increase of 900 000, or 250 per cent. When to this is added the enormous influence of Ritualism in paving the way to Rome, we may see how Protestants ought to be on the alert, prayerfully dependent on God, faithful in testimony to Gospel truth, more united among themselves, and increasingly active in seeking to frustrate Romish designs.

The New York Witness, in advocating more continuous special Gospel effort, speaks of a minister in New York "who has special services daily, and who is sending out from his single congregation more missionaries to the heathen than some considerable missionary societies."

Our American cousins have not been behind ourselves in doing honour to Luther, as the great instrument used of God for effecting the Reformation. A statue, said to be one of the best specimens of European sculpture to be found in the States, has just been unveiled to his memory in Washington. It is a reproduction of the splendid figure with upturned face, so familiar as the central point of the historical group at Worms. Some 10,000 people assembled to witness the ceremony of unveiling, among them being many of America's foremost representative men. The world-wide respect which has been paid to the memory of the noble reformer is a tribute to the principles for which he contended, and goes far to strengthen confidence and hope in reference to the hold they have upon the minds and hearts of men.

A pious negro, sadly wearied by the tedious prayer of one who preceded him, prayed, "O Lord, bress de dear brudder who we has listened to so patiently." It may sound harsh to say so, but it is hard to believe that those who take up fifteen or twenty minutes in a meeting only lasting an hour, are led by the Spirit in their exercises. We earnestly counsel those in danger of this evil habit to guard against it, and to remember they will not be heard any the more for their "much speaking."

The Irish Presbyterian Assembly reports decreasing numbers, and an unusually long list of losses by death. No fewer than twenty ministers have passed away during the year, including some of great prominence and usefulness, such as Drs. Knox, Graham, Macnaughton, and others. A warm debate on the use of instrumental music in public worship resulted in confirming the practice, greatly to the discomfiture of a very large minority who voted against it. The Assembly was occupied with many subjects of ecclesiastical importance, the reports of the past year's work being on the whole cheering and hopeful. The venerable Dr. Horatius Bonar formed one of a deputation from the Scotch Free Church to their Irish Brethren, and addressed the Assembly.

The Evangelical Alliance Council are to be congratulated on the success which has crowned the efforts of their secretary, Mr. A. J. Arnold, to effect an arrangement for the Conference to be held at Copenhagen in September next, also upon the completeness of the programme of meetings they are able to announce. The Conference promises to be one of the most practical and effective that has yet been convened. Among the most prominent speakers will be the venerable Dr. Kalkar, of Copenhagen; Professor Godet, of Neuchatel; Pasteur Theo. Monod, of Paris; Professor Schaff, of New York, with Drs. Angus, Sinclair Paterson, Eustace Conder, and others from our own land. The Lord Mayor of London is also upon the list. Everything possible is being done to facilitate the cheapness and ease of the journey, and to provide for the accommodation of visitors in Copenhagen. Looking at the beneficial results to be expected from such a gathering, we can but bid hearty God-speed to the movement, and trust the £700 or so required for expenses will soon be forthcoming.

Among the themes chosen for consideration at this Congress none strikes us as more important and practical than that assigned to Professor Myrberg, of Upsala, i.e., Returning to true Christian Simplicity, a condition necessary to the Revival of True Religion in our Times. The boasted progress of the nineteenth century, so far from casting Primitive truth and Apostolic methods into the shade, only serves to reveal the deep necessity of a return to old types of thought and original plans of action. Could the Apostles come back to us, they would find much connected with modern Christianity as cumbrous and ill-suited to their warfare as Saul's armour was to David. The Athenian rage for novelties still continues, and the disposition to gratify it largely prevails in the churches, but the only path to Pentecostal blessing is the obtainment of Pentecostal power, and the best means of securing this is a return to the simple faith and prayerful fervour which then marked the disciples of Christ.

A serious difficulty has, it appears, been brought to a peaceful conclusion on the Congo by the intervention of Mr. Craven, described in the despatches as an "English Methodist," really, we believe, one of the Livingstone Inland Mission workers. The persistent refusal of Dutch traders to pay a small toll agreed on between them and the native chieftains led to the latter forbidding the caravans to pass through their country. On this the Dutch organised a small force, and at Noki attacked the natives, who resisted, and gained a decided advantage. Through Mr. Craven's influence the quarrel has been settled, the Europeans, who were decidedly in the wrong, having come to a fresh arrangement to pay the duty promised.

By an arrangement just made between the Baptist Missionary Society and the International Association of the Congo, the seven years' lease of land held by the former at Stanley Pool has been changed into perpetual tenure, and fresh grants at a nominal rental made for new stations in the interior. These arrangements must tend to increased facilities for work on the part of the Mission, in which all who thirst for the progress of the Gospel will rejoice. It is said to be one of the principal objects of the Association to bring about the formation of a Free State, embracing the whole region of the Congo, in which free trade and full religious liberty shall be secured to all, independent of race or sect. Such a State, recognised by all the European powers, would be a happy solution of what as yet promises to be a difficult problem.

The eighty-third Conference of the Methodist New Connexion has just been held at Nottingham, under the presidency of Rev. T. D. Crothers, of Stalybridge. His inaugural address was full of evangelical fervour and force, claiming for the Gospel complete supremacy over all other methods employed for the amelioration of human woe. He denounced the modern practice of resorting to frivolous and worldly expedients for the support of religious objects. The office of the Church was not to provide amusements, but to regulate them, and to attempt to win souls to godliness by merriment is unreasonable and vain. The statistics of the Connexion show increase of numbers and of power, while the meetings of the session seem to have been replete with encouragement and fresh impulse.

The Daily Telegraph aptly describes the streets of London, which form for hundreds of thousands of children their only playground, the Devil's Kindergarten. Object-lessons of a sadly practical kind are certainly given there to the lifelong injury of multitudes of the hapless juveniles who are perforce brought under their influence. The provision of playgrounds in the very heart of London seems an idea altogether Utopian and futile, save in rarest exceptions. But wealthy philanthropists might do far worse than expend their money in the purchase of the wretchedest and meanest house property in the poorest parts of central London, clear the sites, and provide that they be retained for ever as gardens and recreation grounds for the poor.

An important question affecting the employment of Nonconformist chaplains in workhouses was decided in the Court of Queen's Bench, before Justices Stephen and Williams, last week. The authorities of the Liverpool Workhouse, having appointed and salaried two Roman Catholic priests as assistant chaplains, the Poor Law auditor disallowed the costs; an appeal was thereupon made, and the question raised whether any one not a clergyman of the Church of England could be appointed to such duties. The Judges decided that the order of the Poor Law Commissioners, upon which the question turned, permitted the guardians to appoint any officers they deemed requisite, and that upon any terms which seemed suitable to themselves; so that after all, the offices of dissenting ministers may be legally secured, and the monopoly of the Established Church in this respect is broken. The action of the auditor was quashed, and the costs allowed.

The International Health Exhibition not only furnishes a most interesting and instructive collection of objects for the eye to gaze upon, but is being made the centre of practical conferences and free inquiry on various subjects of national importance. The discussions on the state of the London poor which have just been held are to be followed by an educational session, in which almost every possible aspect of the subject is to be dealt with. Lord Reay is the chairman of the Managing Committee, and many leading friends of education are associated with the project.

The Christian Church for this month has a trenchant article on the address on Prophecy given by Mr. Glover, of Bristol, as President of the Baptist Union. The principle laid down that the inspiration possessed by the writers of Scripture differs only in degree from that which is possessed by all Christians, is shown to be essentially erroneous and mischievous in its results. It diminishes the reverence which is due to the gift of inspiration, bringing down the things of heaven to the level of the things of earth. The great purpose for which the writers of Scripture were inspired marks them out as a class separate from and immeasurably superior to all others. The view which supposes that inspiration is a gift common to all Christian men, and in some degree even to all men, as the address asserted, undermines the authority of Scripture. The writer of the article wisely says: "While we count as friends all workers for the good of the Church, and reckon presidents of Unions worthy of double honour, a thousand times more do we hold in estimation the least truth of the Gospel of Christ."

The Marquis of Lorne has contributed to the June number of The Girl's Own Paper an article on Miss Rye's Girls' Homes, in which, speaking from knowledge of the facts on the other side of the Atlantic as well as this, he warmly eulogises the movement for Canadian emigration. The article is full of information as to the surroundings of the girls in their new Western home, and we cordially agree with the wish that "instead of two or three such institutions, there should be a thousand of them."

Mr. Moody will be busy enough in the closing days of his stay in our midst. We give elsewhere the full programme of work for the present week. The London Mission ends with a fourth and final meeting of converts at the Temple Gardens Hall on Monday evening next. That afternoon, as we have already notified, the memorial stones of the new Conference Hall at Stratford will be laid. In this pleasant task the evangelist will be assisted by the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, and other friends of the good work. The Stratford brethren are making strenuous efforts to raise the £3000 still needed for the erection of this permanent and tangible outcome of the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey.

On the following day, Tuesday, June 24, Mr. Moody will lay the memorial stone of the Down Mission Hall, Wandsworth, at 4 p.m. This hall will be built at the sole expense of Dr. Watney, who has also provided the site. It is expected that the hall, which will seat nearly 800, will be completed by the close of the present year. The Down Hall Mission is purely an outcome of the meetings conducted by Messrs. Moody and Sankey at Wandsworth in November last. The services of the Mission, which meanwhile are conducted in the Assembly Rooms, Wandsworth, are of a very encouraging character. Early next week Mr. Moody will open a Y.M.C.A. building in Bristol.

Our next issue will contain copious reports of the Conferences held this week in Temple Gardens Hall; in order to furnish adequate space for these, we shall probably give an eight-page supplement without extra charge.

Major Whittle having returned to America, his singing companions, Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, are now assisting Mr. Moody at the Embankment Mission. At the close of the meetings they will spend a season of rest on the Continent before recrossing the Atlantic.

The Indian Witness of May 17, commenting on the opium traffic, indignantly repudiates the question so often asked by timid politicians, "What could India do if the opium revenue were lost?" If a wicked war were thrust upon us, and ruinous expense involved, no one would despair; but a proposal to do right by the sacrifice of a portion of revenue, gained by injustice, is regarded with dread. For nations as for individuals, the question should be, not what is most likely to pay, but what is right? We have no business to count the cost, or fear the sacrifice involved in doing what the law of God requires. It is ours to do right, regardless of results; we cannot afford to do wrong.

THE PURSUIT OF SCIENTIFIC THEOLOGY, where there is not first of all a living religion, is commonly a wandering in dry places, seeking rest and finding none.—Dr. Walter Smith.

BELIEVERS' MEETINGS, DUBLIN.

THESE annual gatherings were held in the Merrion Hall, Dublin, during the past week, from Tuesday to Thursday inclusive. The proceedings were of the usual order, including early prayer-meetings from 8 to 9.30. teaching meetings from 12 to 2.30, and a similar meeting in the evenings.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10.

The mid-day meeting was presided over by Mr. George F. Trench, who read Psalm xxvii., directing special attention to the need of waiting on God for guidance and strength. Mr. C. R. Hurditch read selected passages of scripture on prayer, and fervently prayed for that preparedness of heart necessary for receiving aright God's messages.

Mr. Henry Dyer delivered an address of much unction and power. Basing his remarks chiefly on Paul's utterance in 1 Tim. i. 15, he said: Two things will ever characterise the true child of God: an ever-increasing sense of his own vileness, and a growing consciousness of his own weakness and littleness. With this experience there will be a growing apprehension of the all-sufficiency and omnipotence of Christ. When we view the atoning work of Christ as being needed in all its completeness for our salvation, we get some idea of the heinousness of our own guilt, and the infinite value of that atonement. You will preach a cold Gospel to harlots and blasphemers if you think yourself better than they. Throw open wide the Gospel door, saying: It let me in, and therefore it is wide enough for you.

Mr. H. Grattan Guinness continued the subject. God has through long and succeeding ages been laying bare man's vileness and impotency, and perfecting his power in him. The darkest crime ever perpetrated by man was the Crucifixion, and in the Cross we see the grandest display of God's love. Under succeeding dispensations God has permitted man to discover his utter impotency and worthlessness, so that the sins of the heathen were as nothing compared with the sins of Christendom in veiling the truth. Alongside with this there has been the gradual revelation of the all-might of God. This is seen in the wonders of the heavens, 40,000 worlds up yonder appearing to us simply like a little spot. We see it also in his providence, preserving the Jews, dispersed and downtrodden as they are. Most of all we see it in the kingdom of his grace, overcoming Satan. Let us not wonder, therefore, if He weakens us, so as to make room for his power and strength.

Dr. McKilliam, of Blackheath, said the same power that raised Christ from the grave should operate mightily in our souls. Mr. Bland showed in a few closing words that our Saviour humbled Himself so low that He could go no lower, and God raised Him up so high that He could go no higher.

DR. BROOKES ON THE ENDUEMENT OF POWER.

The evening meeting was mainly occupied with an address by Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, who took up this subject. While self is always seeking to lift itself up, the grand secret of power lies in keeping self ever in the place of death, so that Christ may be magnified in us. The Holy Spirit is revealed in Scripture as the Originator of the New Birth through the preaching of the Gospel. We are thus dependent on Him for the very commencement of the new life. Afterwards, He is revealed in us as a well of living water, and an indwelling Spirit. This truth received and clearly apprehended, how different men become; everything is dignified and lifted up to a higher and nobler plane. This indwelling Spirit is furthermore revealed as flowing out of the believer wherever he goes. Now that Christ is on the throne, and we are united to Him, the same spirit that is in Him flows into every member of his body. Had the Church been careful never to grieve the Spirit, no need of a revival would ever have been known, since the need of a revival implies a declension in the soul through the temporary suspension of the Spirit's work. As the Testifier of Christ the Holy Spirit is also given.

Who were the men who received power on the day of Pentecost? The plainness and simplicity of the sermon preached by them immediately after, shows them not to have been men of poetry or of rhetoric, and yet as the result 3000 were awakened, convicted, and saved. Stephen was a man full of the Holy Ghost and of faith. Afterward, we are told, he was full of power and wisdom. In order to this we must be emptied of self; and when we have heartily understood and accepted our Saviour's declaration, "Without Me ye can do nothing," the Holy Ghost power will come. A minister, whom I well knew, once had to preach before a large assembly, but up to the very hour of going into the pulpit could get no text; neither did he get one until he was actually standing before the people. When at last, in answer to his fervent cries to God, it came, such was the power which accompanied the sermon that 150 persons were smitten down in agony, and completely overwhelmed under the Spirit's conviction of their lost condition. Let us always remember that the secret of power in preaching is that of entire dependence on the power of the indwelling Spirit. Let us carefully abstain from grieving Him by guarding against every sin, and by instant confession if we do sin.

Fervent prayer for the baptism of the Spirit followed this address, after which Mr. Henry, of Belfast, read from 2 Cor. vi., observing that in the long list of qualifications there enumerated for ministerial work and character, patience was made to head the list. Moreover, Apostolic power must be joined with Apostolic practice; hence the need for practical manifestation of all the fruits and graces of the Spirit.

WEDNESDAY.

At the breakfast table this morning "The work of God among the Papists" was suggested for converse, and prayer was offered by Mr. Newberry. It was observed by Mr. Guinness that perhaps no small degree of obligation rested on those who were locally attached, in the providence of God, to the great strongholds of Catholicism, to make known the Gospel among them in spite of all opposition. At the present time, there is a striking display of God's work among them on the Continent. In Paris alone, there are thirty-five centres where the Gospel is regularly preached. In Austria, Spain, and Germany the work is going on. Many forsake their Romanism on reaching America, where the progress of the good work is obvious. Too many Christian workers, said Mr. Guinness, return from these Conferences and make no further effort.

Mr. Dyer said that Palestine was as bad as Ireland, and the thought of Jesus going into the synagogues to face opposition and scorn, ought to put us to utter shame. If the people will not come to our services then we must go to them. The Apostles went straight to the temple to proclaim Jesus, facing death in the attempt. Too often we sing "Stand up for Jesus," and then hide ourselves away.

Dr. Brookes remarked that in America several priests recently left the Romish Church, and were now endeavouring to persuade others. He had, however, more confidence in simple preaching and Gospel singing than in controversial discussion.

Mr. Dixon urged that everything offensive to Roman Catholics should be avoided. He was glad to be able to affirm from personal visitation that many in our hospitals are confessing Christ on their dying beds in the language of one who exclaimed, "Jesus, I have trusted alone in Thee." Mr. Trench asked that importunate prayer should be made for them.

At the mid-day meeting the first speaker was Mr. Geddes, who read and briefly commented on Eph. ii. 2, 3, and Eph. i. 19.

Mr. Bland said: The entrance into "the Holiest" is now the privilege of the entire priesthood of saints; it means our being as much in the presence of our God as it is possible for mortal man to be. As saints, the Epistle of James directs us what to do. If we ask wisdom of God, let us be prepared to follow his leading at any cost. There are marvellous contrasts in this epistle, and no more striking utterances than those referring to the tongue. The man who bridles his tongue is said to be a perfect man; but observe what is said on the other side. Many would utter a sharp and cutting expression about another, who would be horrified at the idea of vivisection. No man can tame the tongue that is set on fire of hell. As the wisdom of earth is devilish, so the strife maker is doing devilish work. If we are pure, and peaceable, and gentle, we shall not be dictatorial.

Rev. John Wilkinson gave the last address of the morning. After reading Isaiah vi., he said: The Cherubim represents divine nearness, and the Seraphim the glow of communion in this nearness. While two wings were for work, there were four for worship. Man says, "All hands to the work." While being driven to the Hall I observed that not once was there a need for the use of the whip; and I remarked to the driver, "you put the whip inside, in the shape of corn." So let the worker wait and worship much, and the working fitness will be a result.

At the evening meeting Mr. Trench gave an address. Referring to Creation, Conscience, Law, and Gospel, as representing a fourfold revelation of God, he said the eternal throne was fixed on the four pillars of justice, judgment, truth, and mercy; but men were trying to wipe out the first three, leaving mercy only. Even ministers were to be found who seek to undermine the foundations of God's throne by preaching his love and mercy to the exclusion of his justice and righteousness.

Mr. Guinness said there never can be any lack of complete harmony between nature and revelation, since both are from one hand and unfold one plan. The study of astronomy is painful because it makes one feel almost annihilated by its immensity. Geology presents to us a progress which has extended over ages, and equally reveals a divine purpose and plan. All the great movements of the early world bore upon redemption, and had more or less to do in paving the way for the first advent. We are standing now in the Saturday night of the world's history, awaiting the second advent, which we believe to be nigh at hand.

Mr. Lane read part of Psa. lxxxix., and reminded believers, in view of the consummation of God's great purposes, of the duty and privilege of making known "the joyful sound" to others. The picture of the blessed Saviour being moved with compassion at the sight of the multitude was graphically portrayed, and urged as a pattern for his people.

THURSDAY.

The meetings of Thursday were devoted mainly to hearing reports from Christian workers at home and abroad. Mr. Trench presided.

Several of the evangelists related the good results of their travels with the Bible-carriage. Mr. Hind said that during five years there had been sold from his carriage no less than 150,000 copies of the Bible and Testament. Mr. Weaver is engaged in similar work in Burton and elsewhere. Mr. Wadding said they were able to go to fairs and plant their Bible-carriage in the midst of caravans and shows. He had sold 34,000 Bibles and books in one month. At Barrow-in-Furness 140 persons professed to be saved through Gospel preaching. The carriage was now on the sands at New Brighton.

Mr. Bowden, the worthy son of a missionary, gave a deeply interesting account of the work being done in India, to which he and Mrs. Bowden are shortly returning, leaving their family in England. He is continuing the work begun by his father forty years ago, and superintends a Mission which numbers 300 native converts now in fellowship, though widely scattered among the villages. In answer to several questions, Mr. Bowden stated that infidel literature is being scattered broadcast in India; recently a young man asked him about Mr. Bradlaugh's writings who was living in quite an out-of-the-way part of the country. The women could not come to the open-air preaching, but would stand behind their doors to listen. Once a woman so far forgot herself as to join the crowd, so that she got close to him, but he could not speak to her personally without damage to herself. This brother was fervently commended to God in prayer by one who had known his father.

Mr. Hurditch asked prayer for the Maharajah Dhulup Singh, who, he said, had abandoned Christianity, and avows his faith once more in the religion of his country. He also desired praise for the conversion of his two sons at Mr. Moody's meetings.

Dr. Brookes said that thousands were weekly flocking into America, mostly unbelievers. To meet this need, much is being done; still there is a vast mass of people untouched. He spoke highly of Mr. Needham, the late H. Moorhouse, and others, as witnesses raised up by God to do a much needed work. The coloured population of the South is increasing, and evangelists from England are better received there than men from the North. This is partly through antagonistic feelings created during the war. There is a grand opening there for men whose hearts are filled with a desire for the salvation of the blacks. A freed slave, recently converted, sent money to his late mistress whom he heard was in need. This was a fruit of the Gospel.

After Mr. Dunn and another friend had given encouraging reports from Scotland, Miss SANDES appealed for sympathy and help in her work among soldiers at Cork. She told of the conversion of an officer who has lately received the Victoria Cross for bravery in the Soudan. She believed that as many of our soldiers were slain at home by strong drink, &c., as on the battle-field. Miss GURNEY asked prayer for the policemen, 800 of whom now belong to the Christian Association. Much blessing had followed the efforts made on their behalf. They were much shut out from general society through the official position they hold. When converted, they become valuable agents for reaching prisoners under their care.

Mr. Robert Stewart and Mr. Edwards having briefly spoken, Mr. Hurditch said they had never seen so much blessing as during the past two years. Ten tents were out this year.

Mr. GUINNESS said they were sending out from the East London Institute, on an average, one missionary every week. In no country, save Japan, had there been any lack of blessing. After preaching in Belfast recently, seventy young men came forward to offer themselves for Mission work. Many of the men are earning their own living and sustaining a Mission as well.

One of the most interesting and touching statements was made by Miss CARE, who has laboured in China. Being wrecked while voyaging up the country, and landed in a most unfriendly district, her prayer to God was that if she was to be killed it might be done quickly, so that she might escape torture. Meeting, however, with a case of sickness, her medicines were available for healing, and the people flocked around her, to whom she dispensed healing for soul and body. They never had heard before of a God who loved them. "If your religion is true, why did you not come and tell us about it sooner?"

At the evening meeting much time was spent in praise. Dr. MCKILLIAM addressed the workers and said: These are days of the Holy Ghost. Let us all resolve to do more and expect greater things than ever before. The ignorance of people in many parts of our own land is awful. There is wanted a band of men who can realise the fact that Satan is holding men in his own power, and that only God's power can release them from his grasp. I believe a time of trouble is coming for the Church, and it will do good. Be prepared to go where God wills, but be sure it is his will.

Mr. Hind having given some exhortations, Rev. John Wilkinson narrated a number of remarkable personal experiences of God's faithfulness in providing for the needs of his Mission among the Jews. The Conference thereafter closed with singing and prayer.

Scriptural Texts Association.

THIS Association was formed in June, 1883, for the purpose of placing texts of Scripture in tram-cars and omnibuses, &c. The number of the London Tramways alone exceed 400, and it is estimated that the passenger traffic, which is steadily increasing, is 75,000,000 annually. Texts have been placed in fifty tram-cars. The cost for the display of one text is ten shillings annually.

We feel sure that if this Association were better known, it would have the hearty sympathy and co-operation of our readers. The workers are encouraged by hearing of some of the blessing received by this effort. An old woman travelling in one of these cars was much struck by the text. She read there "Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that He might bring us to God." On her return home she searched the Bible to find it. In this case the chapter and verse had been accidentally omitted, but this was the means of sending her straight to the Word of God. The Hon. Sec. is Mrs. Wood, 191, South Lambeth-road, S.W., and the Hon. Treasurer Mrs. Dorin, 344, Clapham-road, S.W.

A RESTING-PLACE.—A correspondent who has lately sojourned at the House of Rest for Christian Workers, "Königsheim," Weston-super-Mare, writes to us, desiring to commend it to the attention of our readers. She describes it as "a happy home, with thorough religious influence, in beautiful air."

CONFERENCE AT GLOUCESTER.

"ONE of the happiest weeks of my life." "I was never at a Conference where so much love and fellowship seemed to prevail." "I learnt to commit everything to the Lord." "I found out that I had been habitually worrying about the Lord's work, and began to trust and rest as never before." These are a sample of the many testimonies which have been received, all proving that our Heavenly Father delights to pour out his blessing upon his children at such gatherings.

The meetings were marked throughout by an earnest, joyous tone, combined with much freshness, simplicity, and liberty of spirit. The Rev. J. J. Luce, who presided, impressed upon us the thought that we did not meet merely for what we could get from the Lord, but for what we could give to Him of praise, love, and devotion, and this thought was steadily kept in view during the whole course of the Conference.

The following short extracts from some of our beloved brethren's addresses will be read with interest and profit:—

Rev. J. B. FIGGIS (2 Cor. i. 20, R.V.).—What is the "Yea?" The veracity of God. The promises are like bank-notes, promissory-notes, and in Christ there is that which can meet them all, "how many soever they be." What is the "Amen?" Our response to God. The Yea is God's, the Amen is our's. Our Amen is not presumption, but it glorifies God by trusting Him and his Word.

Rev. C. CAMPBELL (1 Pet. ii. 7).—Christ is precious because Faith (1) knows Him (2), appropriates Him (3), enjoys Him. Is there anything that you are not willing to give to Jesus? If so, that thing is more precious to you than Jesus. And yet, even then, ye are precious to Him.

Rev. J. A. JACOB (Matt. xiv. 28, 29).—Christians need courage, the courage of Faith. Let your faith rest upon (1) the Word of God (2), his supernatural keeping power (3), the person of Christ. Let it be practical faith.

Rev. J. MORE, Cheltenham (Matt. ix. 19).—The order of discipleship adjusted. First it was anxious Jairus leading on, and Jesus following; afterwards, the order was, Jesus going before, and restful Jairus following.

Rev. E. N. THWAITES (2 Sam. ii. 1).—Hebron is the place of (1) Prayer, (2) Sorrow, (3) Service, (4) Refuge, (5) Fellowship, (6) Kingship, (7) Victory.

Rev. H. G. THWAITES (1 Cor. i. 29).—God has given to us all He has to give, in giving us Christ. Possess your possessions.

A special service for the Gloucester Police Force was held on the second day of the Conference at St. Nicholas Church, when as many of the men as could be spared from duty were assembled. The sermon was preached by the Rev. E. N. Thwaites from the words, "Agree with thine adversary quickly, whiles thou art in the way with him." A deep impression was made upon all present. The Rev. J. J. Luce made a touching reference during the service to the fact that the oldest member of the Force lay dying at that moment, and had sent a message to his fellow-constables. It was to this effect: "Pray for me, I am trusting my Saviour. Love Christ and serve Him now."

The afternoons were occupied, first with a Bible-reading conducted by the Rev. C. Campbell, followed by an account of Christian work.

On the first day the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor gave the story of the needs of China and of the origin of the China Inland Mission. The next day we had a very clear and forcible description of the principles and work of the Evangelisation Society from Mr. Oscar Owers and the Rev. J. More. On the last day Mrs. Greaves gave a very interesting account of the C.M.S. Zenana work in India.

Perhaps the most impressive part of the Conference was a side-meeting, held each night after the general gathering in St. Nicholas school-room, when our beloved brother, the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, in reponse to the request of the President, gave a detailed account of God's dealings with him, and of his experiences in the work of the China Inland Mission. The godly sincerity, the sweet simplicity, the intense reality of the speaker were very powerful and very fragrant. The records of God's faithfulness to him in supplying all his needs and delivering him and his from so many perils, were most thrilling, The crowded room was hushed into a sweetly solemn stillness; it is no marvel that several are now, as a result, offering themselves to the Lord for China, and saying, "Here am I, send me."

TEMPERANCE JOTTINGS.

Mr. Francis Murphy has secured more than 4000 signatures to his Temperance pledge in Chicago.

A National Temperance Fete at the Health Exhibition, South Kensington, has been arranged by the C.E.T.S. for Saturday, July 19.

Siam.—The American minister at Siam, Gen. Haldeman, has persistently refused to license a single American liquor dealer in that country. A noble exception to the action of the representatives of other nations.

At Winnipeg the advocates of high license have achieved a victory. They have succeeded in fixing the rates for licenses at 500 dollars for a saloon or tavern, 300 dollars for a hotel, and 250 dollars for a shop or a wholesale license.

Australia.—Large and successful Blue Ribbon meetings have been held at Sandhurst in favour of Local Option. Mr. Glover is working away with amazing energy. As the result of the first week's work in Hobart, Mr. Matthew Burnett and his fellow-workers have secured 1000 pledges.

Mrs. Bradley, of Ealing, spent a busy Whit-week in addressing double meetings each night in the villages of Ashley, North Thoresby, Holton, Grainsley, and Tetney, Lincolnshire. Much interest was aroused by the forcible illustrations laid before the audiences through the "Drink Diagram."

Cherokee.—A noteworthy incident of the annual May party celebrating the thirty-third anniversary of the Cherokee Seminaries at Tahlequah, Ind. Ter., was the entire absence of liquor. Everything was in contrast to some of the parties of former years, before the Gospel Temperance movement became so prominent. The interest in Mrs. Molloy's work there grows, and is reaching out to the regions beyond.

Rev. J. E. Robinson, of Rangoon, has created a little stir by visiting the liquor-shops on Sunday evenings, and inducing the seamen to leave those haunts and go to church. On a recent occasion he, with a few friends, succeeded in drawing off thirty men in a body, and taking them to the house of God. The "publicans" and their friends resent this intrusion, but the influence of such zealous efforts is not lost.

Wine-drinking at Ecclesiastical Dinners.—"A rumour has reached us," says the Freeman, "which we hope is correct. Wine and beer are no longer provided at the Baptist Union dinner on the last day of the spring session by the London Baptist Association. A few friends, who are not teetotalers, provide these beverages. We are unfeignedly thankful to hear that the amount consumed is only about half what it was a few years ago."

Paynesville, a small fishing village in Australia, with a population of about 100, has the unenviable distinction of having four licensed drink shops and no church. A writer in The Southern Cross says: "For a long time the fishermen's wives fought hard against any licensed public-house being planted in their midst; yet, against the wish of the people, four licenses have been granted—one for every twenty-five of the population. But the publicans are getting uneasy. The bit of blue is rapidly reducing the number of their customers. One of the fishermen, who had the blue ribbon on his coat, said, 'We shall shut up three of the houses out of the four.'"

SPECIAL AFTERNOON SERVICES.—As there are districts in the Metropolis where, except on rare occasions, the people will not come out to evening services, it has been laid on my heart to hold afternoon services at three or four o'clock. I shall be glad to hear from ministers and others who may be willing to grant the use of their lecture halls or places of worship for this purpose. Children's meetings may also be held.

AMERICAN GLEANINGS.

THE SUNDAY IN CHICAGO.

THE Chicago Journal exclaims: "Is Chicago relapsing into Paganism? The Directors of the Driving-park have resolved to have Sunday races hereafter. Sunday base-ball matches and Sunday theatrical performances are bad enough in all Christian conscience, but Sunday horse-racing is a good deal worse. Are our Christian churches losing their restraining influence in this community?"

BEN HOGAN IN COLORADO.

Writing to the New York Witness, this evangelist says: "I am working at present in Pueblo. This is a hard field—harder than I expected to meet; most people seem to be unsettled. Most come here for money and for health, but not for the Gospel of Christ or for temperance. Still God has blessed me in my efforts. Hundreds have come who have not heard the Gospel for ten or fifteen years."

AMONG THE SOUTHERN FREEDMEN.

Writing from Atlanta, Georgia, a correspondent of The National Baptist gives the following interesting sketch:—

"I had the pleasure, a few weeks ago, of spending a few days (while attending an Association about sixty miles west of New Orleans) at Thibadeaux, Terre Bonne Parish, with Miss J. P. Moore, who makes her headquarters there. Miss Moore is devoting her entire time to work in the churches and homes in the country and villages. Her field is a needy one. The people are generally poor and ignorant, and are surrounded by the worst kind of influences, as they are in all sections, where there are large plantations in charge of agents and overseers, as the sugar plantations usually are. Drunkenness, gambling, Sabbath-breaking, profanity, and other gross vices, prevail to an alarming extent. Men, women, and children use tobacco. The girls are growing up like their mothers, and will continue to do so until they have better homes and better surroundings. Many of the Sunday-schools are only schools in name; and the same, I fear, is true of some of the churches.

"The influence of Romanism is seen in some places, in "wakes" for the dead, a night of revelry, flavoured with religion; the custom of 'blessing babies,' and in other things. Many mothers fear that if their babies die before they have been 'blest' by a preacher, they will be lost.

"Miss Moore began her work in the country about four months ago, and though most missionaries, white and coloured men, and many pastors, suspended their wanderings during the winter, because the weather was so bad, she scarcely lost a day. During the five weeks preceding the Association, she had visited seventeen churches and organised her work: a meeting for women, a sewing-school for children, Sunday-school work, and a Temperance society, in fifteen churches. Besides visiting the houses, she had held three meetings daily, one for the women, one for children, and a general meeting in the church at night. I was deeply interested in the reports which the sisters whom she had left as leaders in the work in the churches made at a meeting they held during the Association. They had collected in that short time from the women and children sixty dollars for African Home Missions. She has also sold and distributed about 200 dols. worth of books.

"But few women, and no man, could or would do the work she is doing. It is unique, irregular, 'unwomanly,' some would say, but to me it seemed most beautiful, most Christly. It showed more nearly not only the spirit, but the manner also, of Him who went about doing good than any work I have seen. One can but feel that Jesus is, through her, truly seeking for the lost, opening the eyes of the blind, proclaiming liberty to the captives, and binding up the broken-hearted.

"There must be a great awakening of interest, North and South, in regard to our work among the coloured people. There are six or seven thousand churches yet to be supplied with pastors and teachers, many of which are helpless for lack of them, and some actually going backwards. I have been surprised even myself, after eleven years in the South, during the past year, as I have worked in four different States, to see evidence that there are such vast regions yet almost untouched. I have found greater destitution, especially on the Mississippi river, than I have seen in ten years. There are churches in all those regions, and many of the pastors are good, earnest men, who only need to be instructed and encouraged to be enabled to do great good."

NEW YORK MEDICAL MISSION.

The third annual meeting of this important Mission was held in the chapel of the Broadway Tabernacle, New York, on Thursday evening, May 15. The president, Professor Alfred C. Post, M.D., LL.D., occupied the chair. The secretary, Mr. Edward A. Jones, read his report, from which we quote the following:—

"The Society has its head-quarters at 81, Roosevelt-street, and during the past year has had two branch dispensaries, at 130, Stanton-street, and at 42, Baxter-street. The first one is situate in the midst of the Irish population; the second in the German district, while the third is surrounded by Jews, Italians, Chinese, and coloured people. Many poor drunkards and those addicted to other evils have been led to confess and forsake their sins and obtain mercy, so that in many homes where before nothing but blasphemy and cursing used to be heard, there now ascends from parents and children hymns of praise to God for his goodness to them."

Dr. Dowkontt, the medical superintendent, presented his report. The figures showed that a vast amount of medical aid has been given, and this, in the majority of cases, to the most degraded as well as the poorest in the city. The Mission receives all comers, without respect to creed, colour, nationality, or disease, the only recommendation needed being that of sickness and poverty. The doctor narrated many striking incidents in connection with the Mission. He referred to the intense power of strong drink, and told how a woman came to him with her two-year-old child, asking him to extract four teeth (which of course he did not do), and saying that she had made the child drunk on brandy three times because she could not sleep for its cries. What wonder is there in the fact that these poor creatures have such a struggle to free themselves from the monster alcohol when such has been their tender mothers' care? The wonder is, that any are able to get free.

The meeting was further addressed by several friends, among them being Rev. Charles Parker, the aged blind preacher of Brooklyn.

AN AMERICAN ASSEMBLY.

It has been my good fortune to be present during the recent long session of the Presbyterian General Assembly in this famous sanitary resort. The Convention has been memorable. Over 600 ministers and elders of the Presbyterian Church in the United States are a formidable body, representing as they do some millions of Christian people. The assembly included many men of extraordinary capacity, both ministerial and administrative, yet humbly and earnestly consecrated to the evangelisation of all lands and the islands of the sea. Its transactions, conducted with refreshing liveliness and Pauline spirit, yet in all love and unvarying decorum, were very numerous, and in many instances of vast importance, not only to the Presbyterian Church, but to the cause of religion throughout the world.

Another fruitless advance was made by this Assembly to conciliate the Presbyterian Church South, and open the way to organic union. Rev. Dr. Stratton, a venerable servant of God in the Southern states, was present and expressed himself in the most tender and fraternal manner, but confessed he did not voice the sentiment of his section. THE MORMON PROBLEM.

In a recent sermon in Chicago on this topic, Rev. Joseph Cook said:—

"A distant view of polygamy is very different from a near one. When I first went there three years ago I went with my wife, and am glad I did. She learned many things from the Mormon women that a man never could have learned. We came away with our blood boiling, and it has been boiling ever since. The American people ought to rise and demand the abolition of Mormonism in Utah. We ought to arouse Congress. The churches ought to send detailed information, by special agents if necessary, to the leaders of the great churches in Europe, advertising polygamy for what it is. In Denmark, Sweden, &c., there is need of information. I would have our Government turn Mormon emigrants back as prospective violators of law."

RELIGIOUS INTEREST IN ST. LOUIS.

In a communication to the Chicago Advance, a St. Louis correspondent says:—

"The centre of religious attraction during the winter was at Centenary M. E. Church South, under the labours of Rev. Thomas Harrison. There, for many weeks, crowds gathered at every service; the daily papers gave an account each morning of all that was said and done, and the first question of a friend on meeting you always was, 'Have you been to hear Harrison?' Mathematics were given full play during all the meetings, and each day we knew the exact number of converts to date. The whole number claimed was somewhere from 1200 to 1500. A great jubilee was held when 1000 was reached. The question will appear at once: was it wise? Why not leave the results to appear exactly as they are later on? It seems now that the church where the meetings were held has received, or will soon receive, 300 new members as the direct result of this special effort; and a grand result it is. No one can doubt that Mr. Harrison's work here was a success, but it was marred by the straining after effects that are not manifest to-day.

"We have greatly missed the evangelistic work of Dr. James W. Brookes, who always labours for conversions. His tremendous powers of endurance are undermined at last, and he has crept away, first to the south, and now to Europe, to rest the brain that threatened to give way altogether."

London Missionary Society.

REV. C. B. SYMES presided on Tuesday week at his chapel in Kensington over a meeting to bid farewell to the following missionaries, who have sailed for Central Africa, for work in connection with the above-named society:—Mrs. Hore, the Rev. John Harris (of Rotherham College), the Rev. Bowen Rees (Bala College), and Dr. Frank Laird (of Edinburgh).

Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson introduced the missionaries, with a few prefatory remarks as to the needs of the heathen as evidenced to him during his recent twenty months' visit to the various Mission stations of the society. Mr. Thompson said that the Central African Mission was commenced in 1876, and was the youngest of the society's Missions. Already of the twenty-one missionaries who had been connected with the Mission from its commencement, seven had died and six others had retired from the field. There were at present remaining six missionaries, so that the Mission, with such a history, would excite their deepest sympathy. The directors of the society looked upon them as the pioneers of a great work in the future, and as they believed that much of the trouble of the Mission had resulted from the fatiguing journey from the coast, another route would be traversed by those about to sail, which would shorten the journey overland by more than 500 miles, whereby they hoped the dangers incident to travel would be considerably diminished.

Rev. Dr. Bevan, of Highbury, delivered the parting address to the missionaries. The valedictory prayer was offered by Rev. Dr. Clemance, of Camberwell.—Daily News.

MR. AND MRS. CHEYNE BRADY'S address is Hotel Krone, Pontresina, Switzerland. Christian friends are invited to call.

"Members of His Body."

"That they all may be one; as Thou, Father, art in me, and I in Thee, that they also may be one in us."—JOHN xvii. 21.

"We are members of his body, of his flesh, and of his bones."—EPH. v. 30.

"Members one of another."—ROM. xii. 5.

WE had not dared to frame them—
The words, dear Lord, are Thine!
Nor human thought had fathomed
The mystery divine;
Nor saint on earth had asked to be
So intimately near to Thee.

In hope's ecstatic moments,
When joy is on the wing,
We feel thy love's embraces,
And to thy bosom cling;
And own it "Heaven begun" to rest,
Close-folded to thy sacred breast.

Even then, to sense, it seemeth
As if the soul had soared,
For a brief glad communing
With her beloved Lord.
Faith only learns thy lavish grace,
And knows thy heart her dwelling-place.

'Tis ever thus! Thy giving Transcends our conscious need—
"Abundantly exceeding!"
We find it so indeed.
So far beyond our utmost thought
The sacred nearness Thou hast wrought.

The "members of his Body"!
Oh, what a word is this!
Lord, teach our hearts to grasp it—
This miracle of bliss;
And touch our eyes that we may see
How truly we are one with Thee.

Yea, life with life united,
No longer we are twain;
To full and happy union
Thy Spirit doth constrain.
To Thee eternally allied!
With Thee, O Christ, identified!

The brightness of the glory
Dark shadows may obscure;
The bond can ne'er be broken,
Immutable and sure.
And all who love thy precious Name
In one great brotherhood we claim.

The members of thy Body!
What "schism" can there be?
The Church of Christ retaineth
A vital unity.
When Thou shalt come, O risen Head,
The Body shall be perfected.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—June 22. Acts xii. 13—25; June 23, Hab. ii. 1—14; June 24, Hab. iii. 1—10; June 25. Hab. iii. 11—19; June 26, Hag. i. 1—15; June 27. Hag. ii. 1—9; June 28, Hag. 28, ii. 10—23.

OBITUARY.—With very much regret we have received the following:—On the 10th of June, at her residence, Grove-villa, Teigumouth, South Devon, Elizabeth Ford fell asleep in Jesus (Eph. i. 7). Our dear friend, Miss Ford, was a truly faithful and devoted servant of Christ, and a centre of usefulness in her own neighbourhood.

MEDICAL PRAYER UNION.—The tenth annual Conference of the Medical Prayer Union was held at Exeter Hall, on Monday, June 9. The chair was taken by Dr. George Saunders, and there were present about sixty medical gentlemen and students. Papers were read by Mr. Biggs on "Social Purity in its Medical Aspects," and by Mr. Curless on "Heart Purity." This important subject of purity was dealt with in a very practical and straightforward way by the former gentleman, and the spiritual side of the question was brought out with great force by the latter. In the discussion that followed the question was taken up with great spirit by several gentlemen, an earnest address from Rev. W. R. Mowll being particularly valuable. Afterwards an interesting paper was read on "Mission Work" by Mr. Charles Gayford. The meeting closed with a short address from Mr. Hudson Taylor.

Friendless and Fallen.

THE Lord Mayor, whose term of office has already been signalised by so many efforts in aid of philanthropic objects, kindly granted the use of the Egyptian Hall, Mansion House, on Friday last, for a meeting to further the benevolent interests of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution, in their efforts to rescue the penitent fallen of the Metropolis, as well as to protect young friendless girls from the snares that surround them.

Mr. Sheriff SMITH, who occupied the chair (the Lord Mayor being unexpectedly summoned to the House of Commons), said he was sure they were all sufficiently acquainted with the work of the institution to feel deeply interested in it, and deeply grateful to those who took upon themselves the burden of the work. Leaving out of question the religious aspect of the matter, upon which he assumed they were all agreed, the political and civic aspect of the question was one in which all citizens must take a deep interest, and if they were good citizens they would do their best to further its success.

A statement giving full particulars of the working of the Institution was then read by the Secretary, Mr. EDWARD W. THOMAS, from which it appeared that no less than 600 applicants had presented themselves for admission to the Homes this year.

Rev. Canon BOYD CARPENTER, Bishop-Designate of Ripon, said that this Institution had the advantage of having been tested, and during its existence had increased sevenfold; but everyone knew that this increase was not enough for a metropolis like London. The operations of this society were not carried on in a spirit of sternness and quasi-Phariseeism; its object was to build up a breakwater against temptation and a refuge for those who had fallen. They knew there was an absolute need for preventive as well as rescue work. When the London season ended a number of poor girls were turned adrift. The society endeavoured to remove as far as possible every hindrance and weight from the tempted, and to assist the fallen in recovering their position.

Rev. A. STYLEMAN HEERING alluded to the vast number of young girl-outcasts to be found in the north of London, and to the terrible increase of immorality in certain localities. Mr. Salt, Rev. R. C. Billing, Mr. Drysdale, Mr. Nichols, and Rev. G. Playford, Chaplain of Holloway Prison, also addressed the meeting. While pointing out the necessity for such societies, they spoke of the effective aid rendered in the furtherance of mercy and morality by this Institution.

The City of London may well be congratulated on devoting the residence of its chief magistrate for a time to what may be termed a Mission meeting in aid of that unhappy class who are indeed a sad reproach to a Christian city. The Benediction followed, and a good collection was voluntarily made at the close of the meeting in aid of the funds of the Institution.

TAWHIAO, the King of the Maories, attended morning service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle last Sunday, Mr. Spurgeon being the preacher. As it was Hospital Sunday, there was a very large congregation, and several thousand persons assembled outside the building to catch a glimpse of the King and his party.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.—Just one month since our party of girls sailed off to happy homes of plenty in Canada, and here are already in our possession another hundred, to feed, clothe, train, and try to make loveable for our dear Saviour's sake. Let us have your kindly remembrances when we leave your English shores with these rescued children, and endeavour as best we can to visit and look up our large and ever-increasing family on the farms of our fair Dominion. Friends interested in the Homes have decided, for the purpose of extension of premises, to hold a sale of plain and fancy needlework in the autumn. Would all desirous of helping communicate with us about it? LOUISA BIRT.

Richard Weaver In Belfast.

THE visit of Mr. Weaver to Belfast has now terminated, and by many it will be long remembered as a season of reviving and life-giving power. Sunday, June 8, was the closing day of the Mission; it brought together an extraordinary multitude of people who eagerly sought to hear the evangelist's voice for the last time. Hermon Hall was densely packed on each occasion, while many were unable to obtain admission. In the inquiry-meetings many were dealt with about spiritual things, and numbers we are persuaded opened the door of their hearts to let the Saviour in.

On the following Monday evening the preacher left by the steamer for Liverpool. Long before the hour of sailing large crowds of those who had attended the meetings gathered along the quay to wish Mr. Weaver "good-bye." When the vessel left her moorings there must have been over 1000 people assembled, and as they sang, "I love to think of the heavenly land," with its appropriate chorus, "There will be no parting there," many of the passengers and onlookers seemed filled with wonder at a sight so rare. As the vessel steamed slowly down the river there was many a wet eye, and many an earnest prayer for the blessing of the Lord to rest on the worker and his work.

Y.M.C.A. NOTES.

Rev. F. Von Schluembach is reported as being recently at St. Louis, Mo., aiding the work of the German branch of the Association there.

Christ Church, N.Z.—This Association has got a new building; the top stone was laid on March 4 by Sir William Fox.

Sydney, N.S.W.—An interesting gathering was lately held in the rooms of the Association of those who received blessing through Sunday evening services at the Opera House.

Camden and Kentish Town.—A new house for the use of the members of this branch Association will be opened under the presidency of Lord Shaftesbury to-morrow (Friday) afternoon.

The Tenth World's Conference of Associations will be held in Berlin, August 20—24. The American Associations have arranged an excursion at reduced rates. The Glasgow Associations, which are said to have the largest collective membership in the world, will send four delegates.

Bombay.—The members of this Y.M.C.A. are particularly successful in their evangelistic work at the docks of that city. They are now established on the vessels of those companies which run steamers regularly to the port, such as the Clan, City, and other lines, and thus they have often the opportunity of addressing and influencing the same men after an interval of a voyage.

Young Men's Meetings.—An earnest young man in a certain town, says The Chicago Watchman, started a young men's meeting. He commenced with three. It now numbers twenty-three. They meet weekly. They have pledged themselves to individual work among their fellow young men, and also try to secure their attendance at the meetings. The town has not quite 5000 inhabitants. The same thing can be done in many similar towns all over the country. What is needed is one young man ready and determined to have such a meeting.

PERE HYACINTH is expected in London at the end of this week on his way from New York. It is stated that the Bishop of London has given consent to his preaching in the French Anglican Church, Bloomsbury.

GOSPEL VAN WORK.—Mr. J. C. Robson writes from the Rectory, West Torrington, Wragby, Lincolnshire, that he is about to commence itinerant evangelisation with a Gospel van. "We have already ordered the van," he says, "and have made arrangements for starting as soon as it is ready for use. There are many districts requiring help such as we purpose giving, and of which your readers could most likely inform us. We would also be glad of personal help; there are surely numbers of gentlemen who would gladly give one or two weeks' help at a time. Others may be glad to help us to provide sound, healthy reading for those we visit."

Letters to the Editor.

THE LONDON FIRE BRIGADE.

Sir,—In your issue of the 29th ult. you note on page 12 as follows:—"A correspondent writes to say that no adequate and organised effort has yet been made to promote the spiritual well-being of the members of the London Fire Brigade." Kindly permit me to state that one of the most experienced of the 460 missionaries of the London City Mission is daily engaged in visiting the fifty-nine stations in the metropolis at which firemen are located. I am glad to add that he meets with much encouragement in his work. As only about six hundred men are employed in the Fire Brigade, one missionary is sufficient for the work.—Yours faithfully, T. S. Hutchinson, Clerical Secretary to the London City Mission.

THE CLERGY AND VIVISECTION.

We have received a letter from Mr. Mark Thornhill, the author of the book, "The Clergy and Vivisection," stating that the words quoted by him, from Dr. Burdon Sanderson's evidence before the Royal Commission on Vivisection, are to be found on p. 381 of the Report of that Commission. Mrs. Burdon Sanderson, in her letter to us of May 22, omitted to state what would doubtless have been satisfactory to Mr. Thornhill, that Dr. Burdon Sanderson was confronted in February last, in the Convocation at Oxford, with this very quotation, and he proved, to the satisfaction of the Convocation, that parts of the evidence which he had given had been transposed, and that he was not responsible for the application to a live dog, of words which he had used in relation to an experiment on a dead frog. He distinctly disclaimed the references to the live dog, of which complaint had been made.

Mrs. Burdon Sanderson may fairly have expected that a disclaimer, made under circumstances so public, would have been known to, and accepted by, leading Anti-Vivisectionists.

Interested though we are in the cause of humanity, we cannot open our columns to controversial details.

POLITICAL ECONOMY AND THE GOSPEL.

Sir,—The world is Christ's. "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not anything made that was made." The laws of nature, moral and material, are equally laws of Christ. The laws of political economy—that is, the laws of social human nature—are also laws of Christ; and the Gospel of Christ, and the spiritual life and its laws, in every sense of the word, are all of Christ. How, then, can Christian men set these things or any of them in opposition to one another, as I see writers in your most valuable periodical again and again do? What is the cause of this? It would be well were this subject investigated and the evil cured, for, undoubtedly, it must seriously hinder that amelioration of society which it is the duty of all Christian men to seek.

Of course, knowledge is not enough. There must be motive power begotten of the Spirit of God to bring that knowledge into practical, effectual operation. Right motives and right means are equally indispensable conditions of right ends. Is there, however, any antagonism between either of these things? Is a spiritual man absolved from the laws of common sense? May he reasonably expect to gather grapes of thorns or figs of thistles; or is the constitution of this universe so flexible a thing under his hands that he may, in fact, effect any ends by any means he pleases? We must sit at the feet of Christ and learn all that He teaches us, as well as the Gospel, if we are to meddle successfully with the universe which He has made. And, in truth, every Christian man does so, more or less. But there is no disparagement of the Gospel in this. It is still the wisdom of God and the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth, and the only means of it. Because there is science falsely so called, why should Christian men manifest antagonism to what is not so? W. M.

Dear Sir,—There are laws and laws. There is the law of God—holy, and just, and good; and there is the law of sin and death. The Psalmist indignantly asks, "Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with Thee, which frameth mischief by a law?" The law of God is summed up in this, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and thy neighbour as thyself." The Holy Spirit by the Apostle declares that "love is the fulfilling of the law." There is a law of Political Economy which may be thus expressed, "Every man for himself, and let the weak go to the wall." But God's law is, "We that are strong ought to bear the infirmities of the weak, and not to please ourselves."

The law of Moses contained numerous provisions for the express purpose of neutralising the laws of human selfishness, which are the laws of so-called Political Economy. The enactments with regard to the Jubilee year, e.g., were in the very teeth of Political Economy. So are those of the Sermon on the Mount. What kind of political economy is it, if a man sue thee at the law, and take away thy coat, to let him have thy cloke also? or not to lay up for yourselves treasures on earth, but in heaven?

True Political Economy, indeed, keeps all the commandments of God, Who is love; but the science, falsely so called, which men designate Political Economy, is treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath, for those who grind the faces of the poor, and who add house to house and field to field, that they may dwell alone in the midst of the land.

God's political economy is based upon the law of Love. "Seek not every man his own, but every one another's welfare," for "love seeketh not her own." But the Political Economy inculcated by the god of this world is based upon the fact of fallen human nature, that "All seek their own: not the things which are Jesus Christ's."

If the views here expressed are erroneous, I shall be very thankful to be corrected.

A Christian.

Sir,—I have read with interest the reply to my remarks by Rev. S. Borton Brown. With the spirit that underlies his article I entirely sympathise. I have no desire to water down the principles of self-sacrifice contained in the Gospel, and which are obligatory on all Christians. "He that loveth not his brother, whom he hath seen, how can he love God, whom he hath not seen?" is the foundation-truth that must guide our relations to our fellow-men. No efforts to raise our suffering and degraded fellow-creatures can be otherwise than acceptable in the sight of our heavenly Father. Political economy has nothing to do with the motives that govern a Christian, and most of the hard, self-denying philanthropy that lightens up the dark places of our towns is altogether ignorant of social science.

But the point I wish to bring out is this: All departments of nature are governed by laws appropriate to them, which have been discovered and methodised by man. A Christian is not dispensed, by his religion, from understanding them, any more than a worldly man. He cannot be an astronomer without understanding the laws of astronomy, nor a chemist without knowing something of chemistry. He cannot build bridges or make railways without the requisite knowledge. No degree of piety will save his bridges from falling, or his railways from wrecking the trains, if he has not had the training of an engineer. Neither will a man of business succeed if he ignore the laws of trade—if, for instance, he pays more for the articles he deals in than he can get for them, or if he fail to keep accurate accounts and ascertain whether he is making profits or losses.

How many good men fail in business, sometimes with disastrous effects to others, because they neglect those essential principles. It is in this respect that I call the laws of Political Economy inexorable. I mean to say that the God of Nature has subjected this world to fixed laws instead of chance, and those laws must be attended to, else disaster will follow. A man who falls from a ladder hurts himself because the law of gravitation throws him on the ground. No amount of faith and prayer can alter that law. A miner who neglects to cover his safety lamp in a dangerous working, causes an explosion; his piety does not rescue him from the consequences. So does the neglect of the laws of trade bring commercial failure, or of social laws, poverty and suffering.

Surely in the face of the terrible destitution in our great cities it is incumbent to examine the deep-laid causes of it, and not merely to scratch the surface to allege that the low wages of many of the poor are the result of commercial laws that are perfectly well understood. This is not the place to discuss these laws, but those who groan over the present state of things may be pardoned for wishing to spread some knowledge of the true causes of it among the poor sufferers themselves, and so prepare the way for a better state of things hereafter. Just as fever and cholera used to be ignorantly spread by polluted water, long before sanitary science was understood, whereas now, by improved drainage, better water supply, &c., disease has been greatly reduced, so it will be found that pauperism, and the moral degradation it produces, will be greatly lessened when people generally know the causes that produce it.

In the middle ages the chief duty taught by the Church was that of almsgiving. Europe was covered by mendicant friars who took vows of perpetual poverty. The result was that a great part of the populations were converted into beggars. Even now, in some parts of Europe, begging is almost universal, and it will take ages to eradicate the vicious consequences of this doctrine. The vast amount of charity dispensed in London—said to be four or five millions a year—is believed to have caused much of the chronic poverty. Were the rich people who live in the West-end, by a supreme stroke of charity, to devote their incomes to raise those of the poor to a minimum of say thirty shillings per week for each family, it would be found that the metropolis would draw to itself all the pauperism of Europe. In place of tens of thousands we should have millions of destitute people to provide for, and at last the nation would sink under the social corruption that would be engendered.

When the matter is put in this plain fashion, anyone can see it; but the same principle stated more insiduously is taken by many to be the teaching of the Gospel. The highest form of Christian charity is that which seeks permanently to elevate our fellow-men, not merely to eke out miserable wages by charitable doles, but to place them in circumstances where they can develop an honourable independence. This process is a laborious one, demanding infinite labour, patience, and faith; the fruit is slow in ripening; the workers must be willing to leave the full fruition to posterity; but surely it can claim the approval of Him with whom "one day is as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day."

I would not in the least discourage temporary and provisional forms of aiding the poor; these are often the only ones possible. They are often the outcome of infinite devotion and self-denial. Without them Christianity itself would decay. But alongside of this there is equal, nay greater, need for measures that deal with the roots of the disease and seek to effect a permanent cure. It is for these I plead in the interests of Christian charity itself, viewed in its largest and most enlightened form.—Yours truly, Clapham Common, S.W. Samuel Smith.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mrs. Hampson, whose evangelistic services at the antipodes have been crowned with such marvellous success, is expected back in Australia, after conducting a Mission in Tasmania.

A Soldiers' Missionary.—The good results which have accompanied the appointment of a missionary among the Militia of the county of Lanark last year, have encouraged Christians in Glasgow to repeat the experiment this year also.

Feering, Essex.—Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a very successful series of Mission services in this place. Several personal testimonies have been given to blessing received. A similar Mission has been organised in the adjoining parish of Messing. J. M.

Oby and Thurne, Norfolk.—During the past few months a good work has been carried on in this parish, with still increasing results. Mr. Page, a resident farmer, having obtained the use of a Primitive Methodist Chapel, has engaged the services of Mr. W. Endersley, a travelling "vauman," who hawks his wares by day and preaches the Gospel at night. A noticeable change has come over many lives; those who formerly rejoiced in Sabbath breaking, drunkenness, and swearing, have learnt the new song of praise unto God. Temperance work is also in operation.

GOVERNESSES AND THE HOLIDAYS.—Dear Sir,—May we again ask you to inform your readers that we are ready to receive applications from families requiring foreign governesses for the holidays?—Yours truly, C. F. Ryffel.

16, Powis-terrace, W.

ORPHAN WORKING SCHOOL.—Should any of our readers have votes, unallotted, for the July election to the Alexandra Orphanage branch of the Orphan Working School, Haverstock-hill, we would draw their attention to a case which is highly recommended by Rev. Dr. Dykes, Rev. Andrew Mearns, Professor Leone Levi, and others. Votes will be gratefully received by Mr. Henry Markham, 124, Chancery-lane, W.C.

Notices of Books, &c.

Boys' Own Paper. Religious Tract Society. A special summer number of this periodical (6d.) will be on sale on the 24th inst. It is attractively got up, contains much excellent reading of the lighter sort, is profusely illustrated, and altogether well calculated to please the eye and improve the mind.

Joyful Lays. By Rev. R. Lowry and W. H. Doane. 2s. Sampson Low & Co. This is a collection of two hundred hymns, with music; it contains some very choice pieces which have met with much acceptance in America. We doubt not that it will be well received here also, as it deserves.

A Holiday Tour in America. By Gawin Kirkham. 3d. Open-air Mission, 14, Duke-street, Adelphi. This little book presents a most interesting record of personal travel. It carries the reader through several leading cities of the States, and by means of graphic description and pleasing illustrations proves a very attractive narrative.

Safeguards against Immorality. By A. S. Dyer. 1d. Dyer Bros., Amen-corner, E.C. The impression made on us by hearing this lecture is deepened by its perusal. We cannot but think that its judicious distribution among young men would accomplish much good of a preventive kind. The restraining power of God's grace finds its due and prominent place among the "Safeguards" enumerated by the earnest author.

Motto Notes for Everyday Letters. By Wm. Luff. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling. 6d. per packet. Here are verse-leaflets for every day—very sweet and beautiful, by one of our own contributors, who himself knows the blessedness of that "daily communion" into which he would fain allure others. Many a weary saint would be refreshed by receiving these letter-enclosures. An easy and delightful mode of "exhorting one another daily."

The Light of Life. By Rev. F. J. Scott. 2s. 6d. Hatchards. A book containing twenty-seven sermons naturally suggests a good deal of patience and deep thought in its composition, and perhaps not less in its perusal. But Mr. Scott has chosen interesting subjects, several of which are not often dealt with, and has revealed many thoughts which are not mere surface gleanings, but are well filled with the precious grain. They are clear, concise, and well calculated to reach the hearts of his hearers.

Recent Discoveries on Temple Hill. By Rev. James King, M.A. 2s. 6d. Religious Tract Society. The author has succeeded admirably in describing some results of the labours of the "Palestine Exploration Fund." To all interested in the important excavations which have been carried on at Jerusalem we commend a perusal of this book. Sunday and day school teachers will find it helpful in their teaching. The Psalmist's words, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem," will possess new meaning as readers are reminded, by these unearthed witnesses, of the glory from which the children of Abraham have fallen.

Day Dawn in Dark Places. By Rev. John Mackenzie. Cassell & Co. We have greatly enjoyed the reading of this book. We have found it full of instructive particulars affecting Mission work in general and Missions to South Africa in particular. As our readers know, the able and experienced author has lately been appointed British High Commissioner in Becuanaland, and has thus far met with considerable success in his Mission. This narrative gives a vivid glimpse of the triumphs of the Gospel in these dark places of the earth. We trust the present and future labours of the writer may help materially in introducing to those places the full light of the glorious Gospel, which alone can chase away the gloom of superstition and wrong.

The Churches of Christendom. 5s. Macniven & Wallace. Here we have a series of Lectures delivered in St. Giles's Cathedral, Edinburgh, by various Scotch divines, who, by making a special study of the subjects with which they deal, have succeeded in presenting a concise and yet exhaustive description of the rise and progress of the most important branches of the Christian Church. While we enjoy the blessings which have been won for us by the labours, and often the trials, of servants of God in past ages, it is well that all should familiarise themselves with the circumstances and times in which these faithful witnesses lived. This object will, in a great measure, be attained by the perusal of this book, which combines pleasure with profit. Its price brings it within the reach of all students.

Dugald Buchanan's Spiritual Songs. Translated into English verse by Mr. L. Macbean. Maclachlan & Stewart, Edinburgh. Not being conversant with the original Gaelic, we are not qualified to adjudicate on the faithfulnes or felicity of these translations. But, arguing from the imaginative vigour and power of forceful expression that mark the poems in their English dress, we conclude that the translator has admirably fulfilled his task. He informs us in a preface that the author was "the greatest sacred poet" of the Scottish Celts; we gladly commend his productions to a wider constituency.

These Fifty Years. By John Matthias Weylland. 3s. 6d. Partridge & Co. The issue of a jubilee volume, by the London City Mission, forms a very marked incident in the history of that honoured institution, the interests of which cannot but be greatly promoted by Mr. Weylland's narrative. The book forms one of the most suggestive and interesting records of Christian work we have seen. The story of the past is told in a simple yet graphic style, and abounds with proofs that truth is often stranger than fiction. Faith feeds upon such narratives as these, and is nourished by them, while a healthy stimulus is given to increased effort for the salvation, spiritually and temporally, of the fallen and depraved. Lord Shaftesbury contributes an introduction to the book, which is also copiously illustrated with engravings, descriptive of Mission work. Altogether the volume is well worthy of the good cause with which it is identified.

The Evangelical Succession. Third series. 5s. Macniven & Wallace. Beginning in the first series with the great Apostle to the Gentiles, these lectures have traced the working of "the evangelical principle" through the intervening centuries, till the present, and third, series winds up with a double monograph of the famous Apostle of the Scottish Disruption, Thomas Chalmers. Here we find the true "apostolic succession" of men who have faithfully represented and exemplified the teachings of the Great Master, and who have exercised a vast and abiding influence for good on their generation. No better service could have been rendered to the cause of pure and undefiled religion than to group together in this popular form such well-executed photographs of those in whom the revealed truths of the Christian faith have been a living, working, witnessing force. The third series of these valuable lectures, now before us, embraces such men as Owen, Bunyan, Wesley, Carey, Chalmers. The choice of lecturers seems in every case to have been most happy; and not least happy the choice of Dr. Walter Smith to take the place of the departed Sir Henry Moncrieff in describing the life-work of Chalmers. To our thinking it is one of the most readable and most suggestive of the series. But where all are so good, it is almost invidious to particularise.

 Mr. Hopkins' book, The Law of Liberty in the Spiritual Life, reviewed in our last week's issue, is published by Marshall Brothers, 3, Amen-corner, E.C., not Marshall & Co., as stated.

We have also received the following books:—

Whittingham & Co., 91, Gracechurch-street:
John Wyclif, by Henry Varley, jun., 6d.

Hatchards:
The Light of Life, Sermons by Rev. F. J. Scott, 2s. 6d.
A Lamp and a Light, by Rev. F. Bourdillon, 2s.
Touchstones, by Bishop Oxenden, 2s. 6d.

Oliphant, Anderson, and Ferrier, Edinburgh:
Dorothea Kirke, by Annie S. Swan.

Hodder & Stoughton:
The Expositor, Vol. VII., 7s. 6d.

Passmore & Alabaster:
The Spurgeon Jubilee Album.

Pamphlets received:—No Vested Interests in Licences, by W. C. Amery ("Forward" Office, 49½, Dudley-street, Wolverhampton)—Report of the Annual Conference of the Lord's Day Observance Society, 2s. (20, Bedford-street, Strand).

Star Villa Orphan Home, Chatham.—In a very poor neighbourhood, this agency provides for the needs of orphan and destitute little girls. The numbers admitted during the past year have left the exchequer with a deficiency of more than £50. It is hard to turn the little waifs away, but this must be done unless help is forthcoming. Hon. Superintendent: Mrs. H. W. Wills.

On opening the book, the title of which is given below, thinking that its name implied that it was a commentary on the books of Chronicles, it was a surprise to find that it was about the old controversy as to the subjects and mode of baptism. Why, then, it may be asked, should it be called "Paraleipomena," which is the name the Septuagint gives to the books of Chronicles? The answer is that the name suited the writer to express his subject, which is the exposure of what he considers "things left out" in a book called "Theodosia Ernest," which, from his description of it, seems to be a species of religious tale, written from a Baptist point of view to inculcate Baptist views.

Of course the writer, being an opponent of such views, sets himself the task of ruthlessly exposing the weak points in his adversary's armour and weapons, and judging from his own account of the matter, "Theodosia Ernest" has certainly its weak points. Many would take exception to its form, which is the rather objectionable one of the religious tale—or, as a poor woman once called it, "pious love story." Theodosia is represented as a sincere inquirer after truth on the subject of baptism, and ends by marrying a Baptist minister. Cardinal Newman has used this sort of religious tale in "Callista" to further his own views, and by way of introducing us to religious life in the third century describes the worship of the Virgin Mary as then existing, which Neander cannot trace before the fifth century. One may object to such statements in a book of serious controversy, but how can one deal with religious fiction?

The chief point, however, in which "Theodosia Ernest" seems open to criticism is its unfortunate use of a mistake committed by a Mr. Robinson, who about a hundred years ago wrote a history of Baptism, and drawing upon his imagination more than upon facts, invented a story about a woman called Quintilla, who, he said, had first suggested infant baptism in a letter she wrote to Tertullian. But no such letter was ever heard of, and the mistake Robinson fell into was in confusing the fact that Tertullian's well-known treatise, "De Baptismo," in which the first clear mention of infant baptism occurs in Church history, was written against the views of a woman called Quintilla, who, however, rejected the rite of baptism altogether. In this treatise he speaks of infant baptism disparagingly, and advises its postponement till its nature and responsibility can be understood, and this, so far, is valuable evidence for the Baptists, who may rightly claim Tertullian as a witness for them. But Robinson's blunder about Quintilla, now nearly a hundred years old, should not have been reproduced in these days.

But, while quick to detect and expose the mistakes of others, our author is by no means infallible himself. In his attempt to question the meaning that Greeks, whether ancient or modern, have always given to their own Greek word "baptism," he quotes Cyril of Alexandria as using the phrase, "baptized with the ashes of a heifer;" but when giving the exact quotation in Cyril's own words, he is obliged to give it thus: "We are not baptized with mere water, nor with the ashes of an heifer," where the little word "nor" separates the connection of the two words which our author would fain join together, thereby considerably modifying the meaning.

Another quotation, which he makes with great triumph, from Josephus (Antiquities, Book iv., chap. 5, 6), he translates thus:—

"Putting a little of the ashes into spring water and hyssop, and then baptizing with these same ashes put into the spring water, they sprinkled those who had received pollution from a corpse."

This, of course, if Josephus had written such a sentence, would show that he regarded baptizing and sprinkling as synonymous. But on looking at the Greek in Bekker's Edition we find a very different story. The Greek runs thus (we give the punctuation as it is in Bekker):—

"Putting a little of the ashes into spring water and dipping hyssop, they sprinkled, &c. &c." Here clearly we have the word for baptizing used of the dipping of the piece of hyssop in the water, and not applied to the sprinkling which follows.

These are, however, small points of controversy hardly worth noticing, but that our author attaches such great importance to them. As to the main features of the book, it is written in too combative a spirit to be very edifying. It may be said that no controversial book can well be otherwise, but this is not always the case. Luther's works are fiercely controversial, yet he never fails to set forth bright and glorious views of Gospel truth, and baptism is surely no less suggestive of Gospel truth than Romish controversy.

Our author, too, is rather behind the time. He treats us to the controversy as it was handled nearly a century ago, ignoring, or perhaps not knowing, the light which of late has been thrown upon the subject; of which we would mention, as specimens, the recently-discovered book, "The Teaching of the Apostles," supposed to be as old as the early part of the second century, where directions are given as to preparation for baptism, but such as to show that infant baptism is not contemplated, nor even alluded to as an exceptional case. Then as to the mode; an admission of the greatest Church historian that Rome probably ever had in her communion—Dollinger—made about ten years ago at the old Catholic Conference at Bonn (1874) is worthy of note. We give it in the words of the published report, premising that Rhossis is a Greek Theological Professor from Athens, and Janyschew the Rector of the Clerical Academy at St. Petersburgh: both of course representing the Greek Church.

Rhossis: "Members of our Church are scandalised by baptism by sprinkling. Baptism was originally administered throughout the whole Church by trine-immersion, and it is a most suggestive emblem of the death and resurrection of Christ. Perhaps in consideration of this, and to avoid offence, the Western Church could restore the use of the primitive rite."

Dollinger: "In any case the matter need not be regarded as a subject for contention. As a matter of fact Westerns do not baptize by sprinkling, but by effusion."

Janyschew: "You admit, however, that the Eastern is the most ancient and primitive form?"

Dollinger: "Undoubtedly; and also that it corresponds more with the Scriptural word 'to baptize.'"

It should, however, in fairness be added that the so-called "Teaching of the Apostles" recognises pouring on the head as permissible, but only when there is no water available to baptise in. Probably had this distinctly exceptional character of "effusion" been practically observed—as is admitted in words in the Church of England Baptismal Service—we might have been spared, on this point at least, much of the Baptismal Controversy. H. E. B.

COMMERCIAL TRAVELLERS' CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION.—The Executive Committee of this Association intend to inaugurate a Commercial Travellers' Provident Association at their forthcoming half-yearly meeting at the Crystal Palace, on Saturday, July 12. Four hundred pounds have already been promised towards a guarantee fund of £1000. The guarantors are Mr. George Williams (President C.T.C.A.), Mr. P. J. Whittaker (Treasurer), Mr. Henry Lea (Reading), and Mr. J. Sinclair The new Association will probably include a sick and death fund, deferred annuities, and accident insurance. Further particulars will, doubtless, be supplied by Mr. J. W. Thatcher, Sec., C.T.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, London, E.C.

Good Work at Southall—Miss Baxter thankfully acknowledges 10s. 6d. from "Kew."

EVANGELICAL MISSION TO ISRAEL.—A very interesting meeting was held at the Evangelical Mission to Israel, celebrating the tenth anniversary of the Mission and the twenty-fifth year of Mr. Joseph's work. Hebrew Christians representing the different denominations attended the meeting, having come to show their sympathy with the work. The afternoon was spent in prayer and praise, in which both Hebrew and Gentile believers took part. In the evening Mr. Joseph gave a statement of the work, after which several friends addressed the meeting, among whom were Revs. Wm. Tyler, R. B. Lander, I. Berenstein, and Messrs. Miller, Beckwith, Brownstain, and Chowen. All earnestly commended the Mission to the sympathy of the Christian public.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

THE ANCHORAGE HOUSE, Regent's Park, N.W. THE MISSION HALL, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster.

Committee—GEORGE HANBURY, Esq.; Rev. H. E. FOX; Colonel STUART WORTLEY.

GOSPEL MISSION AND PREVENTIVE WORK.

In addition to the Sunday and Week-day Services, Sunday Schools, Mothers' Meetings, &c., in the Mission Hall, Classes are now held for the instruction of young girls of various ages in the truths of the Gospel, and for teaching them sewing, cutting out, mending, and other such things as may be useful to them in their various positions in life.

Bible Classes for domestic servants, young women in houses of business, and others, are being arranged. All classes are conducted by Ladies.

RESCUE WORK.

The Anchorage House meets a great and acknowledged want, in sheltering respectable young women who have been led astray. Many and many a poor creature, now sunk in the sinful life of our great cities, might have been saved had such an opportunity come before her in the early days of her sin.

Special Mission Services are held from time to time for women living in sin.

The whole work of the Mission is directed towards producing a clear and definite change of heart, through simple belief and trust in the Atoning Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. The work accomplished during past years shows that the blessing of GOD rests on what is done with that view only.

The expenses are necessarily heavy, and an earnest appeal for assistance is made to those who sympathise with work carried on on the lines indicated above. No debt will be incurred, and the work done can therefore only be in accordance with the funds sent in from outside sources, in aid of that found by the Members of the Committee and their friends.

Papers, containing a full account of the work of the Anchorage Mission, including suggestions as to the way found wisest by experience to overcome certain difficulties found in dealing with young women about to become mothers, and rules for admission to the Anchorage House, will be sent on application by letter (not post-cards), to MRS. H. STUART WORTLEY, President of the Ladies' Committee, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W., to whom, to any Member of Committee, or Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, subscriptions, which are much wanted now, may be sent.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CONSUMPTION AFTER PLEURISY—CASE of MR. T. W. BATES, of WEST KIRBY, Cheshire.

It has often been my pleasure to record very rapid cases of recovery which have taken place under my treatment, with God's blessing; but there is no rule in such matters, and sometimes long perseverance is required. The following is an illustration. For eighteen months this patient steadily continued to correspond with me.

The following was received by me on February 9:—

"Dear Sir,—It is now six months since I wrote informing you of my complete recovery, and you expressed a wish to hear from me further on, and I have great pleasure in stating that I have had no relapse.

"When I first applied to you I had had a severe attack of pleurisy, from which I recovered only to fall into consumption. My symptoms (as you know) were hacking cough, profuse night sweats, pains in my chest, side, and back, high fever, expectoration with blood, great loss of flesh, and swelling of my feet and ankles. The doctors and my friends had little hope of my recovery. I am a living wonder to all who knew or saw me. I continued under your treatment for eighteen months; I had such faith in you, through a friend being cured by your means many years ago, and who is now living. I thank God that I persevered, and was so restored. I am giving your books away at every opportunity. Make any use of this letter you please."—4, ACACIA GROVE, WEST KIRBY.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

NUTS TO CRACK.

For Infidels and Freethinkers.

By AN OLD DEIST.

Extracts.

3. I cannot gainsay the fact that human nature is bad, and as bad as the old book makes it. Of course it is not the duty of deists and freethinkers to admit this; because, having no remedy for it, why should they tell that the old fortress is rotten at the foundation? But let us admit it; it is too hard to be cracked.—Page 5.

* * * * *

10. We are also asked to explain, on the ground of Evolution, whether the bird laying eggs came first without eggs, or the eggs without fowls. If we say eggs first, where did the egg come from? Or if we say the fowl first, then did the fowl not come from an egg? It would puzzle the natural philosopher to say how it could possibly come without an egg.

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D. L. Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D. L. Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."
The Methodist.

Addresses to Young Men.

By Rev. DANIEL BAKER. With Preface by D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"These discourses were designed to be of an awakening character. They were preached (in substance) in numerous revivals, and were blessed to the hopeful conversion of many precious souls, of whom some fifty or more have become ministers of the Gospel. May He who was pleased to bless these discourses when they came from the pulpit, bless them also now." AUTHOR'S PREFACE.

RATCLIFF HIGHWAY REFUGE FOR WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

PROPOSED ENLARGEMENT OF PREMISES.

The Ratcliff Highway Refuge was opened four years ago as a DOOR OF ESCAPE for the young women and girls leading lives of sin and misery in and near the Ratcliff Highway. During this period upwards of 700 have passed through the Refuge; a large proportion of whom have been permanently benefited, and are now leading honest and respectable lives.

The Refuge is open Night and Day, and none are refused as long as there is room to receive them. The work has hitherto been carried on under peculiarly trying conditions, owing to the lack of space and the difficulty in finding another house. An opportunity, however, now occurs to obtain the lease of an Old Public House, immediately in the rear of the present Refuge. The former Dancing Saloon to be converted into a much needed Mission Room for Women and Children in the neighbourhood.

£1,100 will be required to repair and equip the premises for use. Half of which, we are thankful to state, has been subscribed.

The urgent need for the work is patent to all who have any acquaintance with Ratcliff Highway, and an appeal is earnestly made for the funds to carry out the proposed plan. The temptations to young girls are unusually great. The payment given for women's work is so extremely low that bare subsistence is scarcely possible, while the wages of iniquity are so high that many are attracted to the neighbourhood from other districts of London, and from all parts of England.

Besides the special need arising from the enlargement, the Preventive Branch has lately much increased; during last year a Training Home was opened in connection with the Mission, accommodating twenty young girls; all who have been received there have been taken from most perilous surroundings.

From this Home several young girls have been already emigrated to the Colonies, and as the facilities increase for placing them in good situations, under judicious supervision, we hope to send out very many more.

Sewing Classes are held for young girls, and Services for Children; also a Mothers' Meeting is carried on; besides which, several Ladies visit, not only among the extreme poor, but in the bad houses which are around us, endeavouring to persuade the inmates to a better life. By means of these visits, many young children have been rescued who were growing up to vice.

The Workers in the Mission are drawn from all sections of the Church of Christ, united in love to Him, who "came to seek and to save that which was lost."

The Superintendent and Council are most anxious to incur no debt, and trust that the general funds may not suffer on account of this special outlay.

Although the Mission is not very widely known, hitherto the daily wants have been daily supplied, and God has owned and blessed the work. The cry comes on behalf of the most outcast in Outcast London, and we earnestly believe the sympathy and help so much needed will be forthcoming.

BIBLE AND COLPORTAGE SOCIETY OF IRELAND.

AN undenominational Society, with Agents in all parts of Ireland. Carefully selected and trained Colporteurs are spreading the knowledge of Jesus by the living voice and the printed page. They have access to the people everywhere, and are not interfered with in their work. A contribution of £40 will secure a Colporteur for a year in any part of Ireland. Several additional Colporteurs have been recently appointed. Funds greatly needed.—Rev. H. M. WILLIAMSON, Belfast, and Rev. JOHN ELLIOTT, Armagh, Secretaries, by whom contributions will be gratefully received; or they may be paid at the Office of this Paper.

MAGNETIC PROTECTION AGAINST EPIDEMICS.

MANY instances are on record in which the employés of Electric and Telegraph works have been, by the nature of their employment, protected against the ravages of epidemic diseases. Occupants of the same houses have sickened and died, while those in daily contact with this energising influence have been exempt. It is well known that a man is especially liable to succumb to disease when in a low and languid state, and that he is open to these attacks from external influences when the Magnetic and Electric forces are not in their normal condition. We can now counteract these external influences by means as simple as carrying an umbrella. Every man, woman, and child may be in this safe, Magnetic condition. So marked is the different experience of the protected and the unprotected, that many of those who had never crossed the Channel without being sick, have, as a consequence of the healthy equilibrium established by the Odo-Magnetic influence, found themselves to be the only persons on board not sick during severe storms. It is as clearly within the ground of certainty that our whole organism is beneficially energised by Odo-Magnetic influence, as that the breathing of a pure and genial atmosphere is a natural means of energising the invalid, although the influence upon the system is unperceived.

Modern scientific facts prove the immunity of whole classes of individuals from epidemic fevers, small-pox and cholera, owing to their daily contact with Electric and Magnetic forces in their employment. This is but one fact among many showing the value of Magnetic influences exerted almost imperceptibly.

We believe it is the motive power by which the will directs the voluntary forces of the system. Magnetic influence can be shown to have an effect as immediate, while at the same more penetrating and permeating than Electricity, and its constant operation and its latent odic influences are far more exhilarating, and may be used with less possibility of producing any ill effects than any other vitalising means, however carefully applied.

From Mrs. Astridge, Frant Rectory, Tunbridge Wells.

IT is with much pleasure that I write to thank you for the Odo-Magnetic Appliances, and to bear my testimony to their value. In my case they truly did wonders. Before I had worn them three days my friends said the change in me was quite a miracle. I shall always say that, under God's blessing, they saved my life. All that saw me thought I could not live long: I was so prostrated, and the nerves so weak, I could scarcely walk alone or feed myself; yet when I had worn them only three weeks, I undertook a journey of twenty miles from home, and had four miles to walk to the nearest station. In six weeks from the time of adopting them I resumed my full duties, and after three months' wear, I was well enough to leave them off. I found no ill effects from doing so, neither did I take cold. I took no medicine after commencing to wear them, although I had been unable to do anything, and under doctor's care for three months before. I am still gaining strength.

MR. B. CORSON GARRATT has devoted many years of his life to the practical adaptation of Magnetism to the alleviation and cure of various forms of disease. His published essays clearly demonstrate the natural action of the remedy, and may be had on application at his Consulting Rooms, where a private list of 950 names may also be obtained.—B. NEW WORK by MAJOR WHITTLE.

LIFE, WARFARE, & VICTORY.

In Tinted Cover, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"Major Whittle, the author, has been associated with Mr. Moody in several of his Mission services in this country, and seeks in this little work to give instruction in Bible readings to young Converts, for their more careful study and permanent use, and such will find that the contents of the book fully bear out its title."—Literary World.

"All who have heard Major Whittle will be glad to possess this excellent little volume. It is just the book to put into the hands of young Converts. The title aptly expresses the contents; they are both spiritual and instructive. We wish it a wide circulation."—Railway Signal.

"It is a thoroughly characteristic little book by a man who is evidently on fire with a holy enthusiasm, and it may be helpful to many whom a more cultured style of teaching would fail to reach."

BOOKS FOR ENQUIRERS AND CONVERTS.

Young Converts;

Or, Beginners in Zion's Ways. By Rev. R. BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 1s.; Cloth neat, 1s. 6d.

"I have been continually asked by young converts where they could get a book in which they might find advice that would be helpful to them. This book seemed just the thing needed at this time. I have known the author, Rev. Dr. Boyd, for many years as a dear father in Israel. I have read his work carefully, and recommend it to all young Christians for prayerful meditation." D L Moody

The Way of Life.

A Book for Enquirers. By Rev. ROBERT BOYD, D.D. Tinted Covers, 6d.; Cloth Boards, 1s.

"About fifteen years ago this little book attracted my notice. I read it with interest, and felt so much profited that I re-read it several times, and then circulated hundreds of copies among the soldiers during the American war. The number that then seemed blessed through reading the book has induced me to ask Messrs. Morgan & Scott to republish it, hoping that it may be the means of good in this country, as it has been in America." D L Moody

All About Jesus.

Thoughts and Reflections on the Person and Work of Christ. By ALEXANDER DICKSON. This book was printed at the express desire of Mr. D. L. MOODY. Tinted Covers, 1s. 6d.; Cloth, 2s. 6d.

"The volume sets forth Jesus very much in Scriptural language, for we have counted over 1340 passages of Holy Writ, chastely and lovingly interwoven in the discourses. Throughout, Jesus is the subject of delightful meditation, affection, and adoration."

NOTES ON SCRIPTURE.—3.

SATAN.

MR. BARNES, we regret to say, is not alone in the endeavour to resuscitate the monstrous Manichæan delusion of the independent existence and sovereignty of Satan. But the attempt will bring about one good result if it leads ministers and teachers, and Christians generally, to take more adequate account than for a long time past they have done, of the power for evil of that fallen spirit. Who will venture to say that modern preaching or current religious thought gives anything like the prominence to Satanic activity and agency, that is found in Scripture?

No sooner is creation fairly launched than it is wrecked by Satan, incarnate in the serpent. His influence over Cain (who was of that wicked one) fills the earth with violence until its deliverance by the Flood. He comes with the sons of God into the Divine presence, and in the case of Job, David, and Ahab, his malignity and deceit are overruled for ultimate good to the good, and judgment on the evil, under the wise government of God.

No sooner does the Son of God appear on the scene of his ministry than He is driven by the Spirit into the wilderness to endure, among the wild beasts, the lengthened but impotent temptation of the devil. Constant conflict with the Satanic legions is the foremost feature in the public work of Jesus and his disciples: for He came to destroy the works of the devil.

> "Through weakness and defeat
> He won the meed and crown;
> Trod all his foes beneath his feet
> By being trodden down."

He became partaker of flesh and blood that through death He might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil, and deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage.

In the New Testament times, no less than in the Old, Satan's malice is overruled by God for good, and even Christians are delivered over to Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus.

As he beguiled Eve, so the Apostle fears that he may deceive those who constitute the Bride of Christ. Again and again the Apostles warn the saints against him, now as an angel of light, then as the prince of the power of the air; and again, as a roaring and prowling lion. They exhort us to watch and be sober, and to put on the whole armour of God, that we may be able to withstand the wiles of the devil.

The Scripture closes with reiterated warning of the Church concerning the synagogue of Satan, Satan's seat, the place where Satan dwelleth, the depths of Satan; and under the multiform nomenclature of the angel of the bottomless pit, Abaddon, Apollyon, the dragon, the old serpent, the devil, and Satan, the last prophecy reveals his action in the world, and against the Church. The extent and intensity of that action may be gathered from the fact that during the thousand years in which Satan is confined in the bottomless pit the earth has peace, but when he is again loosed for a little season he incites man to increased malignant hostility against God and his Church, the camp of the saints and the beloved city.

Renewed attention which is so necessary to the present permitted energy and the future inevitable doom of this fallen spirit, would give backbone to our conceptions of justification and righteousness, as well as of sin and its penalties; for it has been truly said that disbelief in the existence and agency of Satan has always been accompanied by an insufficient estimate of human depravity and of the woes of perdition.

And we may add, that to trace through Scripture the black line of Satan's history, concurrently with the scarlet line of the story of Son of Man, will give much light and will correct many errors with regard to prophetic truth.

The idea of an uncreated and eternal Satan is subversive of all revealed truth. We do not hesitate to affirm that every statement in Scripture concerning him is consistent with his being a fallen creature; while the view of his being an independent being would throw all into inextricable confusion.

OVER-PRESSURE IN SCHOOLS.

By A TEACHER.

(Concluded from our last.)

THUS you will see that two great temptations are before the teacher, viz., to secure success by over pressure, or to use means to get rid of damaging scholars. The teacher who would scorn to be guilty of direct cruelty, must work children to their utmost strength, and often beyond, though he is the first to acknowledge the injuriousness of the course, because however near they may come to the standard, if just below it, they might as well know nothing at all, and for want of the over-pressure all the work reasonably done might be in vain.

A few weeks ago two children of schoolmasters died, within a few miles of each other, from the effects of over-pressure in school; and, as the doctor said, who attended one of them, if teachers cannot be safely entrusted with the health of their own children in this matter, how can it be right to place power over others in their hands which must be such a terrible temptation? Again, under this system, a teacher who would never make a false entry in his register, or a dishonest one on his schedule, must for his credit's sake take advantage of the existing facilities for getting rid of unwelcome and damaging scholars.

There are many teachers who have been trained by "cramming" and to "cram" ever since they entered the profession. Their highest ambition, as teachers, is to secure high percentages and large grants. They have for years used every means to gain these ends, and they have proved "that nothing succeeds like success." They have the good word of both inspectors and managers, who argue "If one man can produce these results, why cannot all?" And so others, goaded by poorer results, have resorted to similar means until the general character of the work has become almost unbearable to honest minds.

There are yet numbers of teachers who care too much for the moral welfare of their scholars to put high percentage and grants before everything else; and there are some intelligent managers who uphold them, but they are so borne down by the growth of this pernicious system that their influence is scarcely felt. There are many more who deplore the evil, and would rejoice to see it removed, but who are carried along with it, nevertheless. No class of workers toil harder than the teachers of our elementary schools. The strain on both mental and physical powers is so great, that every year many fall out of the ranks, invalided or discouraged, to seek a living elsewhere.

Why cannot people see that this system is ruining the moral character of both teachers and scholars? If teachers, as a body, had only and always done right, if they had been able to resist the temptation to set examination results and payments first, the system would never have become what it is. But in all the walks of life human nature repeats itself, and the power to do wrong creates a supply of people who will do it. At this time there are hundreds of young teachers, who have no idea that "cramming" is morally wrong, or that drilling children merely for examination is not education. Knowing the temptation that exists to make teachers dishonest, inspectors are always suspicious that they may be dishonest; and the effect of this is to harden many, who reason that as they are likely to be suspected, whether guilty of scheming or not, they may as well overreach the inspector as far as possible; while others, who will not stoop to any unlawful means, yet feel that they are constantly suspected of the intention to do so.

One year I made an error of ten in adding a child's attendances, crediting him with 290 instead of 300. The inspector happened to alight on this number, and exclaimed, "Ah! you have made a mistake here, this child has made 300 attendances; how strange to make a mistake against yourself!" Another year I had been just five weeks at a new school when the examination took place. The inspector found fault with the needlework, and said it was much too well done to be entirely the work of the children who worked specimens of their skill before him. I explained that it had all been done before the late mistress left, and that, as I had kept the children to knitting since I had come, probably that would account for the deterioration. He persisted in his opinion, and said that I must know very well that it was not honest work, that the children could not have done it all themselves. "But," he added, "you need not be anxious about my opinion, as the responsibility rests with your predecessor." He allowed it to pass, however.

More serious still are the effects of this system on the characters of the children. The bright, quick ones, who really need repressing, and most judicious management to prevent them becoming vain and self-conceited, are extolled and held up to constant admiration. They carry off all the prizes, and learn to regard themselves so highly that many of them are ruined in disposition for life. Others are undermined in health and nervous temperament by the continual grinding and competition with more easily successful companions, whilst all see the constant scheming and torturing to secure "passes."

The greatest sufferers are the delicate children, and the unwelcome little lost, unloved children of the depraved poor, on whom real and persistent cruelty is often practised, to drive them away, or make them pass if possible. The pupil teachers, too, suffer greatly, both morally and physically. In spite of Government rules, many of them work many hours beyond school time, and in many schools female pupil teachers scarcely ever sit down. Doctors could say much on the results of these two wrongs alone. I could give many instances of wrong-doing on every point I have touched, and I have only referred to the most apparent aspects of the evil system of "cramming" for examination returns.

"SOCIETY."

By Dr. HOWARD CROSBY.

THAT which is technically called "society" is earthly, sensual, devilish. No Christian is safe who enters its alluring, but pestiferous circle. It is a satanic contrivance to make vice respectable, so that young people can slide down to perdition smoothly and with propriety, without shock to culture and refinement. The theatre is one of the strongest pillars of this diabolical structure. It accustoms the young mind to adulteries, abandonments, intrigues, semi-nude exposures, and all that depravity reckons to be the spice of life. To suppose that a Christian may go through this and preserve his integrity is absurd. One who tries it is a fool, and one who defends it is worse than a fool.

It is a favourite device of those who are wading in this filth to sneer at those who denounce it as themselves unclean. Faithful men will cheerfully bear this reproach while they perform their God-given duty. The thief crying "Stop thief" is a very old dodge, and some are yet deceived by it. But God will be with his faithful witnesses, and use their testimony to save some, plucking them out of the fire. The Church of Christ must be separated from the world. It can have no fellowship with the works of darkness. This false fellowship is most readily consummated through "society" and social amusements. By this road thousands fall away to perdition. The Church of Christ must have its own high and holy joys, its own pure and distinctive ethics, its own heavenly aim and standard. Christians must associate with one another, and cultivate a healthy society, and not be afraid to say "No" to the world's invitations. Our young people will find more genuine happiness, in such a sweet and clean atmosphere, than in the sickly excitements of a sensual society.—Episcopal Recorder.

Specialism in Theology.

IN these days, when doctrinal discussion is so rife, there is need to sound a note of warning, as to the danger of dwelling too exclusively on one truth, to the exclusion of other truths equally important. It is well known that a specialist in medicine is seldom a good physician. He takes up one form of disease, and by devoting himself to the study of it may attain great skill and experience in treating it, when that form of disease alone presents itself for treatment; but when there is a complication of disease, or when other conditions of health have to be considered, the disadvantages of specialism soon make themselves apparent.

Now there is a "specialism" in theology, and one that has its dangers also. If one subject, however important that subject may be, is taken up in teaching almost to the exclusion of others, we are in danger of losing sight of the breadth of the Scripture treatment of our great disease. We may rejoice that so much attention has been bestowed within the last ten years to the subject of sanctification, but we must not forget that the "wisdom from God" (1 Cor. i. 30) which Christ has been "made unto us" consists not of sanctification alone but of "righteousness, sanctification, and redemption," and if some Christians in times past have dwelt upon the first of these too exclusively, there is just now considerable danger of the second being similarly treated, not to say of the third being ignored altogether.

The extreme view of sinlessness ignores "the redemption of the body," seeing that it insists on having now what Scripture teaches can only be attained when the believer has entered the glorified state. A disproportioned view of sanctification may in like manner tend to ignore "righteousness" or justification, by seeking to make texts such as 1 John i. 7 and Rom. viii. 1, which treat of that subject, speak rather of sanctification; and this, if carried further, would lead to more serious error than the other. How much to be desired is the happy attainment of "rightly dividing the word of truth."

MR. SPURGEON'S JUBILEE.

THIS notable event has passed off with all the éclat and success which could be hoped or desired. It has rarely fallen to the lot of any man to have a career of such continuous prosperity, or to exert so world-wide an influence both by voice and pen. So earnestly and fully does the Tabernacle pastor recognise in it all the grace and power of God, and without any trace of self-congratulation lay all the glory at the feet of the Lord, that with heartiest affection do we join the general spirit of thankfulness and joy with which he is regarded and spoken of. In his case, it is to the glory of the Master as well as to the honour of the servant to specially acknowledge and record what God has done by means of the special instrument He has been pleased to raise up. Long may the voice of the great preacher be heard ringing out with undiminished fervour and clearness the glorious Gospel of the blessed God.

The enthusiastic meetings held on the 18th and 19th inst. at the Tabernacle have been so fully reported in other columns, that we need do little more than say of them that they were in every way successful. They were representative not only of Tabernacle associations, but of all classes and denominations, and of various nationalities. Telegrams from all parts of the world were handed in, conveying the congratulations of far-away friends and admirers. Lord Shaftesbury, who presided on Thursday, was at his best, and spoke powerfully on the fidelity to Gospel truth which he regarded as lying at the root of Mr. Spurgeon's success. The speakers comprised leading men of different denominations, all of whom claimed that their friend and brother was not the property of any one party, but of the whole Church. In responding to the gift of £4500, which was presented to him in the name of the donors by Mr. T. W. Olney, Mr. Spurgeon generously said he always enjoyed money most when he could use it for the work of the Lord. Accordingly he proceeded to distribute the greater part of the amount among various objects: £1000 to the "Jubilee House," £200 to the almshouses, £200 to the deacons of the church for loan to the poor, £200 to the Colportage Association, £250 to his son's chapel in Auckland, £100 to Mrs. Spurgeon's Book Fund, and other donations. Among the speakers were the Revs. Canon Wilberforce, Dr. Parker, Newman Hall, and J. P. Chown; Sir William McArthur was also there to represent Wesleyan Methodist sympathies; even Mr. Moody found time among his heavy and pressing engagements to put in an appearance, and speak words of brotherly congratulation and warm esteem. It was a specially interesting fact to which Mr. Moody referred, that the stimulus afforded to him by hearing Mr. Spurgeon preach many years ago had much to do with inducing him to give himself up to the work in which he has been so graciously owned of God.

The colossal work in which Mr. Spurgeon is engaged, and which is the fruit almost entirely of his own sanctified genius and consecrated energies, is well set forth in a handsome JUBILEE ALBUM just published by Messrs. Passmore and Alabaster. Portraits of Mr. and Mrs. Spurgeon, together with photographic sketches of the Tabernacle, the Orphanages, the Pastors' College, and Haddon Mission Hall are interspersed, with descriptive articles of a racy character. Those desiring a lasting memorial of the occasion cannot do better than possess themselves of this beautiful book, the cost of which is half a guinea.

Few things could more strikingly manifest the position which Mr. Spurgeon has attained in the Universal Church, and in the whole world, than the following article, which we reprint.

From "The Times."

The Baptist Church is celebrating the Jubilee of its greatest preacher and pastor, Mr. SPURGEON. To most of our readers this will suggest the fiftieth anniversary of that gentleman's call to the ministry, or of some institution or building associated with his name, so long has he occupied a large space in public interest and regard. In fact, it is Mr. Spurgeon's fiftieth birthday, and he is honoured with almost national festivity at an age when many men are just emerging from obscurity into note, if not from activity into usefulness. We wish Mr. Spurgeon could be regarded as not only old in regard to work done, but as still young in regard to vital power and unexhausted energy. That, we fear, is far from being the case. From time to time he has had to seek absolute rest, and the medical reports seem to show that henceforth he will have to struggle with the maladies and infirmities specially incident to those who speak much, and feel much, and do much. He is evidently not a strong man in the purely physical sense of the word. For the best part of his short life he has drawn on his powers to any extent demanded of him, and he has now to pay the cost of his unsparing generosity.

A volume, entitled "The Spurgeon Jubilee Album," with very striking photographic illustrations, records the chief material and visible results of this noble career. The Metropolitan Tabernacle is probably the largest and best edifice for congregational worship in this country; our cathedrals being rather for spectacles, ceremonies, processions, and meditation. In external architecture it is one of the ornaments of the metropolis, and of a region wanting ornament. The other edifices are as worthy of their use, and not less ornamental in their way. These are the Pastors' College, the Colportage Association, the Almshouses, the two Orphanages at Stockwell, and the Mission Hall at Bermondsey. These institutions have all been founded and are still sustained by collections and subscriptions elicited chiefly by the eloquence of the great preacher. It is at the music of his voice that stone has placed itself on stone, and the stream of charity set flowing.

Meanwhile, Mr. Spurgeon has been the most voluminous author of the day. All his sermons, we believe, have been published—a severe trial, indeed, to extempore eloquence, and compelling a continual recurrence to the fountain head. Besides, he has published much in periodicals and in separate volumes. Absolute originality is seldom found together with great exuberance, for no human being can create the whole world of thought, sentiments, and ideas anew every twelvemonth. But Mr. Spurgeon is always fresh, and what he says or writes retains its freshness long. For the special character of the multitudes addressed, we are not aware of any English preacher who could be compared with him, all in all. The last great luminary of the Baptist Church in this country was Robert Hall, who died two years before the event this jubilee counts from. But he was by no means a preacher for the masses, or even for any class out of which a large audience could be expected. His style was more chastened and classical, more in rounded periods, well-chosen phrases, and gracefully fluent. But it was not so scriptural, nor so imaginative, nor so practical. It was also accompanied with some faults of delivery. The hearer was struck with it all seeming to be read from a book. It did for the period when the towns Robert Hall went the round of had not a quarter of their present populations.

The man who has done this work, and attained this position at a comparatively early age, went to no university or college. He prepared for no examination. He was a preacher at sixteen, a popular preacher at seventeen, and in a year or two more, the restorer of a metropolitan congregation that had begun to find itself tending to the desolation of a City church. He has now for thirty years been one of the chief preachers of the age. Such a fact has important bearings upon several questions, such as the usual preparation for orders, and alleged impossibility of dealing with the working classes, or even with the middle classes from a certain point of view.

We are repeatedly told of tens of thousands whom it is impossible to get at, or to draw, or to interest in the affairs and prospects of their eternal souls. But it is quite plain by the fact before us that tens of thousands can be drawn, and secured, too, in what used to be thought the most hopeless parts of the metropolis. The days of multitudinous congregations, and of conversions on a national scale, have been long gone by, we are often told. Such gatherings there might be at the restoration of the older church, at the first preaching of the Gospel, at the foundation of the Christian Church, and the successive incomings of the Gentiles. Superstition itself might collect its multitudes of ignorant worshippers or indolent gazers. But such a thing as a myriad or two people brought to a new life by the preaching of one man, and proving their sincerity both by regular observances and unbounded benevolence, was no longer to be expected. It belonged to the youth of the world. There are no arguments so efficacious with most people as those adduced to prove that nothing can be done. They are not even silenced by any amount of practical refutation.

The Church of England had sufficient warning of what could be done with a little zeal last century, but it compelled John Wesley at last to cut the moorings which, almost to the last, he wished to retain with it. At a time when the three hundred Presbyterian congregations established after the Revolution of 1688 were rapidly diminishing, passing out of favour, splitting, or disappearing altogether, the wonderful growth of "Methodism" raised universal rivalry, for every sect saw what could be done if it only tried. All these bodies have transacted their business on the principles found to answer in secular affairs They have selected the fittest men, and the fittest methods, and the fittest buildings, and the fittest services, taking leaf after leaf from the world's book. No doubt the Church of England has latterly shown more common sense, better tactics, and a little more of that open formation which experience shows to be often necessary in war; but it cannot be denied that she is still greatly encumbered and hindered in the competition.

A sad shortcoming there is, by universal admission. It is not the Press that parades the fact, or volunteers it. From every quarter of the metropolis there comes in succession the melancholy cry of despair. The working people rest in their own fashion on Sunday, and care not for the improvement of either their souls or their minds, nay, for the matter of that, of their bodies either. We are continually asked to publish this fact, and to invite the succour which may at least do something. Now, here is what one man has done. One man! Nay, rather what one boy has done. Spurgeon was but a boy when he set to work in the metropolis. He was of an age when no Oxford or Cambridge man is deemed fit for orders. The metropolis was worse thirty years ago than it is now, and the cry from the Surrey side was even louder then than now. But this mere boy, still in his teens, came into this dark and dreary region, and never for a moment had the least doubt that he would win a good harvest of souls. So he won them.

It is almost superfluous to ask by what style, or methods, or arguments this has been done; still less to criticise that which has stood the proof of trial and won the testimony of success. Mr Spurgeon laid his foundation on the Bible. His utterances abound with Scriptural text, figure, metaphor, and allusion. Whatever he says sends his hearers to the sacred record. But, starting from this basis, he has added to it a stock of other reading, such as few men can show in their talk or in their writing. He cannot be accused of not being a man of the world, or not knowing the ways of the world, for he has read that book, and the book of nature too. His style is illustrated with almost pictorial brightness. No one can read without carrying away something when the book is closed.

THE McALL MISSION IN FRANCE.

PARIS.

DEAR SIR,—As you are aware I passed through London during the first days of May, on my way to this city to take up the direction of the McAll Mission. I had the intention of spending only fifteen days in Paris, but it was not until fully the end of the month I found it possible to leave the capital, on account of the many opportunities for work I encountered, and the desirability of becoming acquainted with the Parisian friends and methods, before proceeding to my own future field of operations. I found a new meeting had been begun nightly on the great Boulevard, the Boulevard de la Bonne Nouvelle, near the Old Porte St. Dennis. The great stream of Parisian life passes the very door, and hundreds have already learned the way into the spacious but unpretending hall, provided through the generosity of American friends, and appropriately named the Salle Baltimore. There, every night in the week, M. Réveillaud, M. Saillens, and other well-known preachers, may be heard announcing the Word of Life, with great force, simplicity, and clearness.

Then the Hall in the Rue St. Honoré, not far from the Admiralty Offices, has its nightly meetings; while near the old Tour St. Jacques, in the Rue de Rivoli, a much-frequented hall is always open. The other meeting-places in Paris, to the number of upwards of thirty, are open on special nights, and nearly all on Sabbath afternoon or evening besides. The number of meetings, large though it be, might of course be much increased, if there were more labourers in the field. As it is, the Salles of the outlying districts have to be taken up alternately.

For four successive Thursday afternoons during May, I had the privilege of visiting, in company with a lady who had been in the habit of going there previously, the whole of an enclosed territory, called the Cité Jeanne D'Arc, in the Rue Nationale d'Ivry, in the extreme south of Paris. There cannot be less, I should compute, than 500 families, nearly all occupying single apartments of the most miserable description, in that vast "rookery." The time of our visiting, between 6 and 8 p.m., was, perhaps, upon the whole, the best suited to find the majority of the occupants at home and well-disposed, and in almost every case, therefore, were we politely received. Often invited to enter the poor dwellings, the promise was made, and to my amazement I found kept, in the large majority of instances, to attend the meeting in the Rue Nationale, near at hand. Most had already been present on some occasion or other, and only needed a kindly word of encouragement to bring them again. From all those dark, high-mounting stairs and passages they came, and night by night the place was full. We had even an after-meeting on the last occasion, and many rose for prayer then. Several times we had the magic lantern, and although we were all English managing it, and the foreign tongue not quite up to the mark in the way of description, the people would have sat for any length of time looking at the Gospel pictures. We had no difficulty in keeping them quiet, although all the roughest elements were present.

I am glad that those people, both men and women, "lost and all forsaken," are easily reached, Most of those in the habit of attending the meetings, when first asked if they are trusting the Saviour, answer "Yes!" but a following question or two makes it in many cases apparent that there is no personal faith in the matter. Some there are, however, who joyfully give their testimony as to what the Lord Jesus has done for them. It only requires fuller organisation, and more workers of the right kind systematically to work among them, for many souls continually to be won for the Saviour.

LYONS.

Paris is scarcely touched as yet, despite all the noble agencies in operation. But what shall I say of Lyons! There are workers in the field, and good work has been done for many a day. But I feel like one set down on the sunny edge of a gloomy forest, with orders from the master to cut it down, and cultivate the ground for many a rood. I believe He will provide labourers enough to do the work; but inch by inch the field must be won from the forest of superstition and atheism. I will tell you something of Lyons in another letter. I am already greatly encouraged in the work, and I believe will soon find many friends to help; some are already in the field.—Yours faithfully,

A. S. D. COLQUHOUN.

Open-air Mission.

DEAR SIR,—The financial position of this Mission is a source of increasing anxiety. Each year the work grows, but for three years the income has been stationary. Small missions like this are apt to be overlooked in an age of new schemes and great missionary enterprises. Death is also busy thinning the ranks of our supporters. In examining our list of subscribers the other day, I noted thirty-five had passed away during the year.

Our present position may be stated in a few words. Nearly half the year has gone, and we have not received more than a third of our usual income. We are in the midst of our "season" with an exhausted exchequer, and with liabilities amounting to £100. A friend offers £10 if this £100 is secured during the present month. But we need at least £1000 to see us through the year.

The extent of our work may be gathered from the following: Last year our members laboured in 505 towns and villages, including 312 races, fairs, and other special gatherings, and preached the Gospel to nearly three millions of people. Direct spiritual results are much more frequent than most people imagine from this open-air evangelisation. I analysed the reports of 195 of our members last year, and found that 93 of them testified to the conversion of 396 souls by open-air preaching within the year. And now our hardest work is easier than many think, e.g., six of us preached for two hours on Epsom race-course on the recent Derby-day with no opposition worth mentioning.

The readers of THE CHRISTIAN have hitherto been the warmest friends of the Mission, and I am sure they have but to learn that help is needed, and they will gladly supply it, and thus enable us, by the blessing of God, to continue and extend the work.

Our Treasurer is Lord Kinnaird, 1, Pall Mall East, S.W.—Yours sincerely, GAWIN KIRKHAM, Secretary.

Notes and Comments.

OUR next issue will be a Double Number (price 2d.), and will contain, as usual, copious reports of the Mildmay Conference meetings. Our readers will observe that this week we have given eight additional pages, without extra charge; we shall be glad if they will aid us in the circulation of the practical and useful addresses delivered at Mr. Moody's Conference in the Embankment Hall.

We have much pleasure in directing the special attention of our readers to a revised and enlarged edition, just issued, of Mr Hudson Taylor's missionary manifesto, "China's Spiritual Need and Claims." (1s., Morgan & Scott.) Originally published in pamphlet form, nearly twenty years ago, its value has been abundantly proved since then. By its perusal many hearts have been stirred to think of the perishing millions of China, and many lives have been laid on the altar for Christian service in that vast and populous country. In a brief notice it would be impossible to touch upon the very varied and attractive features of this new edition; we hope ere long to notice them somewhat in detail. Suffice it at present to say that the array of facts and figures collated by Mr. Taylor, not to speak of the striking diagrams (which bring the vastness and the spiritual destitution of China into strong relief) and the many artistic engravings illustrative of Chinese life and scenery combine to make this a perfectly unique production. We trust it may be very extensively circulated.

In a recent article on the signs of the times in New England, The Presbyterian, of Philadelphia, endorses the belief that a defection from the faith as sad as that of Unitarianism in the days of Channing is imminent. The way in which vital truths are thrown into the background, the favour with which the new Congregational Creed is being received, and the deliberate purpose there evidently is to teach in theological schools errors from which the fathers of fifty years ago would have shrunk with horror, are facts appealed to in support of the conviction. There are signs of the times in Old England no less portentous than in New England. Let us not be blind to these portentous facts, but rather be urged by them to greater vigilance and fidelity in the maintenance of the truth.

A worker amongst young women, writing to the Daily News, refers to the frequent injury to the morals of young, unprotected, and innocent girls by the efforts to mislead them made by men who pass for respectable members of the community, but who at heart are base and corrupt. Returning from a meeting at Exeter Hall, the writer saw two young women who had also been present there, accosted in an omnibus by a well-dressed man, who persisted in entering into conversation with them, and on reaching the terminus, paying their fare. Only by speaking to a policeman could he be got rid of. Scoundrels of this type, in the garb of gentlemen, abound in modern society, and the young cannot be too much guarded against them. All right-minded persons, who keep their eyes open, may find an opportunity of courageously interposing to save the unwary, as in the above instance. If everyone were a self-constituted detective, on behalf of others, they would often find the blessing return upon their own households.

It is proposed to extend the working of the Factory Acts to all towns having a population of 20,000 and upwards, so as to make them bear upon the young persons employed in shops and warehouses. Sir John Lubbock has charge of a Bill, endorsed by Lord R. Churchill, Mr. Burt, and others, to be introduced to the House of Commons with that object. The measure will doubtless command the support of many on both sides the House. It is supposed that smaller towns would easily and readily follow suit in early closing if the larger ones were thus dealt with.

Last week the City of London did honour to itself by enrolling on the list of its renowned citizens the venerable Earl of Shaftesbury, "in recognition of his life-long services on behalf of the young, the suffering, the degraded, and the oppressed." The noble Earl has now attained to an age when earthly dignities may seem of small account, but it is well that the worth of such services as he has rendered to humanity should receive due recognition from the greatest civic community in existence. The panygeric pronounced by Mr. Scott, the City Chamberlain, though strongly worded, conveyed no exaggerated estimate of the career of one who lives and will live for many a day in the heart's affections of his countrymen.

Pressure on our space does not admit of our giving any detailed notice of the proceedings of the National Congress on Temperance held at Liverpool last week. We refer those specially interested in the subject to the various Temperance periodicals, which contain lengthy reports of the weighty utterances that marked the Congress. We cannot doubt that these will give a powerful impetus to the growing agitation in our midst on behalf of reformed legislation and more earnest social endeavour in grappling with the evils of the drink traffic.

The new President of the London Temperance Hospital is Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., who has just been elected in room of the late Mr. Samuel Bowly. The Committee of Management are to be congratulated on securing so able and philanthropic a leader as Mr. Morley is sure to prove.

A striking illustration of the worth of prayer was given at the half-yearly meeting of the Lawyers' Prayer Union, held the other day in Bloomsbury. Mr. W. F. A. Archibald, who presided, stated that he had several times attended the meetings held on board the ship Harmony in connection with the Moravian Mission, when special prayer was made for the safety of the ship and passengers, as well as for the success of the Mission, and that for about 120 years a ship has annually left England, and such ship has had to encounter many dangers in Arctic seas, yet never in that long time had a single ship or passenger been lost by storm, iceberg, or wreck.

The Lord Mayor, in laying the foundation-stone of a new chapel in Stoke Newington the other day, remarked that he had sat 158 times on the City Bench, and many hundreds of prisoners had been tried by him, but he did not remember the case of a single Welshman having been brought before him. His lordship said it was not enough to be orderly, men need something more than that to fit them for heaven, but the above is a fact which the Principality cannot but regard with some degree of pardonable complacence.

The cost of our system of National Education continues to increase, and Mr. Mundella in introducing the estimates for the year, last week assured the House it was likely still to do so. The sum voted was £3,016,167, providing for 18,540 schools, with 52,706 certificated teachers, and a register of 4,273,000 scholars, or including workhouse, industrial, night, and other schools, £5,080,000. Excluding, therefore, all private, middle and higher class schools, there is one in six of our population now on the school registers. The Vice-President spoke highly of the voluntary schools, which he said were doing the best they could to make themselve efficient, many of them being amongst the best in the country. It was stated that savings banks were now connected with 1,718 schools, and were most successful in their results.

Mr. Mundella declared his belief that so far from lowering the religious and moral tone of the people as was predicted, School Boards had done more, indirectly at least, for promoting religious education than any other institution in the country. Never in the history of England had there been so much religious instruction given to the people as to-day, a fact he attributed to the impetus afforded to Sunday-schools by the working of the Education Act. Sunday-school teachers were compelled to give more attention to preparation for their work, and the capacities of the children taught were far greater for receiving the instruction given. The importance of paying still greater attention to the instruction of the young in Bible truth cannot be over-estimated.

A new association has been started, to be known as the Society for the Study and Cure of Inebriety, the President being Dr. Norman Kerr, F.L.S. Its promoters hold that drunkenness is not in all cases a vice or a crime, but frequently the result of a depraved or defective organisation, transmitted by self-indulgent and vicious progenitors. While recognising the immense value of religious and moral efforts to arrest the progress of inebriety, and desiring to help their progress, they declare that the evil baffles all efforts yet made, and point to the alarming increase of female intemperance, which undoubtedly prevails. Dr. Kerr regards as conditions favourable to inebriety, hereditary nervous shock, overwork, lack of healthy stimuli, injuries to the brain, and dyspepsia. The object of the Society is to investigate these various causes, and to educate the professional and public mind in reference to them. An annual subscription of five shillings and upwards entitles to membership.

What are the Lords about that they do not better understand the signs of the time, and yield to its just demands? The Bill for prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday in Cornwall, was sent up to them emphasised unmistakably by the voice of the people whom it chiefly concerns. The Archbishop of Canterbury and Lord Mount-Edgcumbe, who supported the Bill, surely know the true feeling of the Cornish constituencies, if anybody does; yet, in spite of their advocacy, the measure was rejected by 57 votes to 39. No wonder the question is sometimes heard: Is the House of Lords worth preserving? The action of the Lower House, we may add, in "talking out" the Irish Sunday Closing Bill on its second reading, was scarcely less discreditable. It is clear that the pressure of outside agitation must be more firmly applied if we are to obtain relief from the drink curse by better legislation.

The National Life Boat Institution has ust issued its sixtieth annual report, which hows that 274 life boats are at present under ts management. Last year 283 launches vere made, 725 lives were saved, and 30 essels rescued. Special exertions were made y other boats rewarded by the Institution, hich succeeded in rescuing 230 lives, so hat nearly a thousand human lives were reserved last year through its operations. n the sixty-nine years of its existence, 0,563 lives have been saved.

A whole column of The Standard one day ast week was occupied with an advertise-nent, in minion type, headed Eternity! Eternity! Eternity! It consisted of a solemn varning as to the danger of neglecting the nterests of the soul, together with a state-nent of the way of Salvation by Christ. It s not often that a secular paper is made the neans of such communications, so that it vould be all the more likely to awaken hought. The times are full of warning ignificance, and it needs that special means e used on all sides to rouse the people from he slumber of sin and death into which they ave fallen.

The Revised Version of the Old Testament vill probably soon be forthcoming, but in iew of the less and less likelihood of the New Testament revision obtaining general cceptance, little interest is felt in the fact. Mr. Spurgeon, in one of his sermons on Hospital Sunday, declared his belief that the nen were yet unborn who were able to give better edition of either Old or New Testa-nent than that we have; indeed he thought hey never would be born. The old trans-ators were wonderfully helped of God, and elighted more in pure Anglo-Saxon than in atinised expressions. There certainly is omething more than sentiment in the deep-ooted love of multitudes for our grand old English Bible.

The Primitive Methodist Church has just eld its annual Conference at Tunstall, Staffordshire, under the presidency of the Rev. George Lamb, who has been one of its reachers for fifty-seven years. It is grati-ying to find that this hard-working and arnest section of the religious community ive signs of increasing vigour, and is able o report much blessing on the efforts made or the spread of the Gospel at home and broad.

Verily the slaves of fashion are of all aptives the most hopelessly enthralled, for hey seem ready to obey the wildest behests f their tyrant master, no matter what is he absurdity involved. It is said that in America a number of ladies have taken to wearing the skins of rattlesnakes as girdles nd in other forms, and their rattles as ear-ings. Anything more revolting or more epulsive to good taste can scarcely be magined.

Notwithstanding all that is being done on ehalf of our sailors at foreign ports, there is reat need of further efforts for their spiritual welfare. A harbour missionary writes to us hat he has visited seven ports in Sicily and he Adriatic, where there are no regular Missions, although over 2000 ships and 2,000 English sailors frequent these and five maller ones every year. At Trieste, Venice, Naples, and Palermo, English residents are eing stirred up to provide Strangers' Rests; ut at Messina, where the need is greatest, othing is being done.

Miss Elise Sandes, the Hon. Superintendent of the Soldiers' Institute, Cork, is now in London, and will be happy to receive invitations for drawing-room meetings, at which she may explain the work of the Institute, give incidents of good done, and state the needs of the new building which is now in progress. Miss Sandes' address is Resington Lodge, Ladbroke-terrace, W.

A correspondent draws attention to the Vallon de Bedons, in the Pyrenees. Since the Reformation it has been a stronghold of Protestantism, and the people are wonderfully open to receive the Gospel Friends wishing to do a little work for the Lord during their holidays would find this a delightful field for labour, as the natural beauties of the neighbourhood surpass description. Further details can be had (in English) from Madame Cadier Osse, par Bedons, Basses Pyrénées, France.

The Monaco gaming tables are at last engaging the attention of authorities competent to deal effectively with the question of their extinction. The evil has become so marked that crowned heads are condemning it strongly, and several leading statesmen in Europe are aroused to consider the best means of getting up a diplomatic crusade against it. M. Schoelcher and other French Senators are active in the matter, and probably an appeal will be made to Italy to aid in putting down the gross iniquity occasioned by the existence of such an institution. King Humbert has expressed himself in the strongest terms against it as a cause of profound demoralisation. The removal of such a plague-spot from the earth is greatly to be desired, and we trust will not much longer be delayed.

Continental and Foreign Notes.

A Translation of the Gospel of St. Mark into the Mooltanee language has been completed by Mr. Jukes, medical missionary, Dera Ghazee Khan, assisted by the Rev. M. H. Izhak.

The Annual Conference of the German and Swiss Episcopal Methodist Church will begin June 26, at Zurich, under the presidency of Bishop Hurst.

Rome's Adherents.—The Freeman's Journal, one of the principal organs of the Romish Church in New York, speaks of the decline of Romanism in America especially among the Irish emigrants, many of whom "have forgotten the faith of their fathers," without, it is to be feared, having gained a purer faith.

Bigotry in France.—In the Haute-Vienne, the Prefect has refused to nominate a young woman as National School mistress, although she was possessed of every necessary qualification, because she is a Protestant. He argues that her nomination "would give to the school a confessional character." If the mistress be a Freethinker, a bigoted Catholic, or even a Jesuit, the school would remain "lay," but with a Protestant it becomes confessional!

The Gospel in the Transvaal.—Mr. Paul Krüger, the president of the Transvaal Republic, with the Minister of Instruction, visited the Mission House in Berlin. Herr Krüger spoke very affectionately to the students. "Young brothers, I beseech you to know and preach nothing but our Lord Jesus Christ, the Crucified One. I did not seek Him, but He sought me, and, God be praised, found me. . . . Some from your midst are now in the Transvaal making known the Saviour, and two of my children are receiving instruction in the Mission school; I assure you that my Government will support the Mission in the strongest manner, and seek to remove all obstacles out of its way."

Miss Leigh's Homes in Paris.

AT the Mansion House, on Friday afternoon, a meeting was held in support of the work among English girls in Paris, carried on by Miss Ada Leigh. A large and fashionable company attended. The LORD MAYOR presided. The various speakers eulogised and warmly commended Miss Leigh's work, defending her from the trifling and vexatious charges recently brought against her by a certain London Society. A letter received from Lord Lyons, British Ambassador in Paris, regretting his unavoidable absence, was read.

Bishop TITCOMB bore testimony to what he had seen during a recent visit to Paris, both as to the urgent need of such a Mission and to its special adaptation to meet that need. Professor YEATMAN, as a member of the Paris Council, said he had come from Paris simply to plead the cause of Miss Leigh's Mission; he was devoutly thankful for the work that was being done, and wished for it the greatest prosperity.

The Archbishop of YORK, after referring to the perils that surround the paths of English girls in Paris, moved a resolution to the following effect: "Inasmuch as great hardness is frequently inflicted upon English women who have married Frenchmen in this country, who have not complied with the stipulation of the French marriage law, whose marriages therefore are not recognised as legal in France, it is resolved that a memorial shall go forth from this meeting to Her Majesty's Government, begging them to use their powerful influence toward removing this evil." The Bishop Designate of RIPON thought Miss Leigh deserved the gratitude of all Englishwomen for having brought to light the disadvantages connected with the French marriage law. He questioned whether France could alter the law, but English clergymen and ministers could do much to prevent the perpetuation of the evil by acquainting the persons concerned with the conditions of French law relative to marriage.

Canon WILBERFORCE said he had had a good opportunity of judging of Miss Leigh and her work. He could bear most unqualified testimony to both. He earnestly pleaded for immediate help toward building another Mission room and repairing others.

The time had far advanced when Miss Leigh rose to speak, which she did briefly, calling attention chiefly to the marriage laws, and citing cases of heartless desertion, while the husband still lived on the property of his helpless victim. Some of these deserted wives had died broken-hearted. Miss Leigh eloquently pleaded that others should share the burden of the Mission with her by providing its daily support.

The meeting was further addressed by Mr. J. D. Alcroft, Sir John Kennaway, Rev. Dr. Sinclair Paterson, and Mr. F. A. Bevan.

BIBLE FLOWER MISSION.—We are informed that the total number of bouquets distributed from the City branch of this most beneficent Mission during the past twelve months was 372,725, the number which we recently gave (53,158) being for the month of April only. To every one of these is attached a Scripture text, so that no bouquet is sent out without bearing with it some word of comfort and salvation to those who are the happy recipients of the little gift. The Hon. Superintendent is Miss Anne Dove, 110, Cannon-street, E.C.

MR. PASCOE IN MEXICO.—An unfortunate difficulty has arisen in connection with the shipment of some paper, books, medicines, &c., sent out to Mr. Pascoe last autumn. Because of some trifling and accidental informality in the bills of lading, the Mexican authorities will not make delivery of the goods, without payment of certain penalties which would amount to much more than their actual value. As there seems no chance of getting a remission of these fines, the friends of the work in England have deemed it best to meet the difficulty by sending another shipment of goods. £300 will be needed altogether for this purpose. Any who are disposed to help may communicate with Mr. J. Mercer, 29, Queen's-road, Southport.

A GRAVE IN THE POTTER'S FIELD.

Died—At the New Haven Almshouse, Harry ——, aged 31 years.

HARRY —— was a generous-hearted young man, with attractive, winning manners, fair abilities, and a decided talent for music. The final cause of his death was some lung trouble. The first and real cause was rum. In many ways friends tried to help him break the chains of his enemy, but, as is often the case, neither their good offices nor his resolutions were of avail. His musical gifts made him welcome in the saloons, when, often penniless and hungry, he always found some one to put the cup to his lips.

At last, a few days since, he found himself near the close of a life of shame and misery, starving and dying in the streets. With a prayer for some place of refuge to Him whose laws he had so often offended against, he tottered into the office of the Town Agent, who admitted him to the Almshouse.

Poor Harry! How bitterly, the tears raining down his cheeks, did he repent in the last hours of his life the sins of the past, not because he thought he was about to die, but because of his sin and wasted life.

Poor Harry! Life prematurely cut off, and while lived, so wretched! A grave in the potter's field! For years yet to come there was but this one reason why he should not have enjoyed life and been a blessing to his fellow men!

Was it murder or suicide? Did the saloon keepers kill Harry? Did the professedly good people who refuse to lend effort or aid in opposition to the sin of liquor drinking have a hand in his death, or did Harry kill himself? Possibly the answer nearest the truth is, they helped him to commit suicide. —The Union Signal.

HOW HE BECAME AN ABSTAINER.

"No, I won't drink with you to-day, boys," said a drummer to several companions, as they settled down in the railroad car, and passed the bottle. "The fact is, boys, I have quit drinking—I've sworn off." He was greeted with shouts of laughter by the jolly crowd around him; they put the bottle under his nose, and indulged in many jokes at his expense, but he refused to drink, and was rather serious about it.

"What's the matter with you, old boy?" sang out one. "If you've quit drinking something's up. Tell us what it is."

"Well, boys, I will, though I know you'll laugh at me. But I'll tell you all the same. I have been a drinking man all my life, ever since I was married, as you all know I love whiskey—it's as sweet in my mouth as sugar—and God only knows how I'll quit it. For seven years not a day has passed over my head that I didn't have at least one drink. But I am done. Yesterday I was in Chicago. Down on South Clark-street a customer of mine keeps a pawn-shop in connection with his other business. I called on him, and while I was there a young man of not more than twenty-five, wearing threadbare clothes, and looking as hard as if he hadn't seen a sober day for a month, came in with a little package in his hand. Tremblingly, he unwrapped it, and gave it to the pawnbroker, saying, 'Give me ten cents.' And, boys, what do you suppose it was? A pair of baby-shoes, little things with the buttons only a trifle soiled, as if they had been worn only once or twice.

"Where did you get these?" asked the pawnbroker. "Got 'em at home," replied the man, who had an intelligent face and the manners of a gentleman, despite his sad condition. "My—my wife bought 'em for our baby. Give me ten cents for 'em—I want a drink."

"You had better take the shoes back to your wife; the baby will need them," said the pawnbroker. "No, s—she wont, because—because she's dead. She's lying at home now—died last night." As he said this the poor fellow broke down, bowed his head on the showcase, and cried like a child.

"Boys," said the drummer, "you can laugh if you please, but I—I have a baby of my own at home, and I swear I'll never drink another drop." Then he got up and went into another car. His companions glanced at each other in silence; no one laughed; the bottle disappeared; and soon each was sitting in a seat by himself.

THE HEALING OF THE BLIND MAN.

By Dr. OSWALD DYKES.

This story of the healing of the blind man at Jerusalem, and what arose out of it, receives, as you see, a very important place in St. John's Gospel, and is told with great fulness; and this indicates that considerable importance is attached to it in the history of our Lord and Saviour while on earth. You may observe, it is the only case reported in which our Lord gave sight to a person who had been born blind; and as this, thanks be to God, is no common affliction, it is all the more remarkable to find our Lord was able to give a sense which had not been bestowed before; and also because, although there have been many cases in which blind men have been cured by great skill, yet there has not been one who was born blind cured since the world began.

Again, this is a case which was inquired into by the rulers of the nation. I think there are only three cases of this class told in the Gospels—cases in which the rulers of the nation, the supreme Court of Judgment, inquired into these things. I hope many of you will be able to find out the other two cases to which I have referred. This is the one of all the three which was most carefully and minutely examined by the authorities, when they wanted to find something to say against Jesus, when they were extremely anxious to show that He was not a prophet of God, that all His miracles were merely sham miracles.

You will observe the different steps in the inquiry. First, the cure of the man excited attention among the neighbours naturally, as everybody knew the blind man. The neighbours thought it sufficiently important to bring it before the Court which sat in one of the rooms attached to the Temple. The Court examined the man himself, and he told them the whole story. The next step was to find out whether he had really been born blind. They went back to the evidence of his parents, who happened to be alive, and they examined and cross-examined them. They thought they would say something different, but they learned from the parents beyond a doubt that the man had been born blind. But still they hoped to shake the evidence of the man by cross-examination. They could not, however, alter his evidence, because the facts were very plain. Only they did not draw the inference he did—that Jesus Christ must be a real teacher, whose words must be accepted as coming from God.

Another reason for the importance of this story is this, that this poor man, this blind beggar, was the first in this world to confess Christ as the Lord of heaven, and to suffer for his confession. Some confess in private; but this man confessed in public, and before Jesus' enemies, and had to suffer for his confession in consequence, by being turned out of the Church; for they banished him from the synagogue—in short, they excommunicated him and put him out from their fellowship.

And the true reason for the importance and interest of this narrative is this, that it led directly to one of the most instructive and beautiful discourses about false shepherds by Christ, who is the true Shepherd, who came into the world to give his life for his sheep. Many people read that parable without having known what led to it. It was led up to by the poor blind man. Jesus was the Good Shepherd, and the scribes and rulers who cast him out were false shepherds, who flee from the sheep in danger. It is a beautiful example of the courage which comes to people when they really know Jesus has done them good. It is, in fact, an example for all of us if we really know Jesus has done us good, to ask Him to bless us, and to teach us to be bold, and not to be afraid of confessing Him, even though we should suffer at the hands of those who do not like Him or to hear of his good deeds.—Contemporary Pulpit.

"MY DOG IS RUINED."

The great and good missionary Moffat relates a funny adventure about Bibles. "One day," says he, "as I was passing by the hut of one of the most important but least attentive of my Sunday hearers, this exclamation: 'Oh, what a misfortune!' pronounced by a man's voice, struck my ear. Quite concerned, I pushed the door and went in. 'What is the matter, Tamra?' I said, 'what misfortune has happened to you? I hope neither your wife nor your son is ill, my poor friend.'

"No," replied he, "there is no one ill in the hut." "Well, what trouble were you speaking of in such a melancholy tone?"

The man scratched his woolly head with an embarrassed air. "Why, the boy has just come to tell me that my dog has eaten a leaf of the Bible that you gave us." "Oh well," I said, "that mischief is not irreparable; I can perhaps replace the leaf."

"Ah! but," said the man, "my dog is spoiled! He will never more fetch me the smallest bit of game, nor will he fly at the throat of my enemy when I tell him to. He will become as gentle as a lamb, like all our warriors do now who read that book! I tell you what, missionary, my dog is ruined, and it is your fault!"

Our young readers will understand the lesson of the story.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—June 29, Ps. ciii. 1—12; June 30, Ps. ciii. 13—22; July 1, 2 Sam. i. 1—12; July 2, 2 Sam. i. 13—27; July 3, 2 Sam. v. 1—12; July 4, 2 Sam. vi. 1—11; July 5, 2 Sam. vi. 12—23.

OBITUARY.—It has pleased the Lord to take to Himself another valued worker, Mr. Geo. A. Colman, of St. John's Wood, after a few hours' illness, on Wednesday week. He had for many years been widely known and greatly beloved as a Christian, whose sympathies went out toward the Lord's work and workers in many parts of the world. As a pastor, he was the leading worker in connection with the considerable church at Malden Hall, Kentish Town. The widow and the orphan were constant objects of his sympathy and care; while the Evangelistic Mission, and many another good work in the West of London, will have cause to regret his removal from among us.

HOMES FOR WORKING GIRLS IN LONDON.

THE Hon. Director of these excellent institutions convened a pleasant gathering on Thursday afternoon last, on the occasion of the opening of a new building at the rear of Morley House, Fitzroy-street, W. After a hymn and opening prayer by Rev. Canon Fleming, the chairman, Mr. Samuel Morley, called upon the director to make a statement.

Mr. SHRIMPTON said it was now over four years since Morley House was opened, and he was quite sure Mr. Morley need not feel any regret that he had allowed his name to be given to it. It had been a grand success, as its enlargement proved. Although it had not received so many occupants as some of the sister institutions, yet the girls who visited it found it really was home, and were never in any hurry to leave it until compelled by circumstances to do so. During the four years, no less than 400 had come under its shelter, and some of the original members were there still. One lesson he had learnt, that the success of institutions like these depend very largely upon the lady-superintendent. With one who combines loving interest in the girls with tact, sound housekeeping, and common sense, the Home was sure to be a success. He, therefore, looked back with thankfulness to the day when Miss Crosby accepted the important post which she has filled with great efficiency.

The cost of the Home had been estimated at £800, which had been duly provided, but in spite of rigid economy, it had cost £1100. But when he heard, as he had done that day, of a lady giving £7000 for a dish, he thought there must be a great deal of gold somewhere, if it could only be got at. The entire building now provides accommodation for seventy-one inmates, exclusive of the officers engaged in the household. But temporal comforts do not form the only object in view. The Alpha and Omega of the committee's desire is to win the girls for Christ; thus they not only obtain a home for their bodies, but a refuge and shelter for their souls.

Mr. SAMUEL MORLEY then expressed the great pleasure it had been to him to participate in what had proved an eminently successful scheme. When he thought of the 25,000 young women engaged in business houses in London, of all the snares to which they are subjected in finding lodgings suitable to their slender incomes, it made him devoutly thankful for every effort to provide for their needs. As he looked around the building he was glad to see the cheerful pictures, and everything that was pleasing to the eye, that made it more like home, though he observed that even these comforts were of an inexpensive kind. What was wanted was more partners. Some people despise commercial pursuits. He, for one, was a thoroughly commercial man, and he believed in making the strictest calculations in providing for Homes of this kind, and in making them, as far as possible, self-supporting.

The Rev. Canon FLEMING, who followed, said he hoped that fresh partners would be forthcoming, as it was unfair for so much of the burden to rest upon a few willing shoulders. He knew that many of the young women had to work very hard; as work was appointed by God to be the lot of man, he did not pity them on that account, but he would do all in his power to help them to do that work faithfully unto God. Our sympathy is often elicited on behalf of the many young men who come from the country, but the young women who do so need it much more. Therefore, how truly needful was such a work as this, in breaking the monotony of life by providing comforts well-nigh equal to home itself.

The Hon. ARTHUR KINNAIRD expressed his conviction that more interest should be taken by Christian workers in young women. He instanced the case of a clergyman who, when asked to address a young women's meeting, asked, "Whatever should I say to them? I should feel quite out of place." He probably uttered a truth which many do not express. We must make ourselves more acquainted with the needs of young women. Much is said about young men, and the need of assisting them to battle against temptations; but these temptations would be much lessened if the young women could be got hold of before evil companionships are formed. Mr. Kinnaird then appealed to those present to devote themselves more entirely to the service of the Lord, not simply coming into prominence at times of revival, but steadily, day by day, month after month, doing their utmost to reach the thousands of our poorer sisters who live in this great city of London.

MR. FEGAN'S VISIT TO MANITOBA.

DEAR FRIENDS,—Through the Lord's loving kindness I have reached home, hale and hearty, after travelling 10,000 miles by sea and land in the last two months. How thankful I was to get back in vigorous health, to find all well here, and to know there had been showers of blessing while I was away, I cannot express.

The result of my visit to Canada, is, that I look upon that vast, prosperous country as a God-provided opening in life for thousands of our homeless and friendless children. In the province of Ontario, Miss Macpherson, Miss Rye, Mr. Middlemore, and others have been settling thousands of children, with the most happy results, for several years. I, however, pushed on more than 1600 miles further, to Manitoba, to which so many young men from Ontario are now emigrating, as well as the enterprising, better-class youths of our own land. By incessant journeying, I visited Winnipeg, Brandon, Portage la Prairie, &c. Staying a few days in each, I drove out forty or fifty miles a day, through the surrounding country, and visited leading settlers, conversing with them, learning their histories, seeing their wives, families, homesteads, &c.

So heartily were my plans taken up, that I foresee a practically unlimited sphere of usefulness stretching out before me in the splendid north-west territories now being rapidly opened up by the Canadian Pacific Railway.

While I believe the older province of Ontario has some advantages to offer in the point of comfort, &c., for (1) younger boys from eight to thirteen, or (2) boys who have had only a brief preliminary training in England, I am powerfully impressed with the conviction that for lads of fourteen and upwards, who have had good training previously on this side, the prospects in the actual present (much more in the immediate future, and increasingly as years go on) are far better in Manitoba.

As soon as the boys arrive they will be engaged at good wages to begin with all the year round, say board, lodging, and from £16 to £18 a year, in the second or third year £36 a year and upwards. When a lad is eighteen he can obtain a Government grant of 160 acres of land free, and by complying for three years with easy terms, as to partial residence, cultivation, &c., he becomes, when he is twenty-one, the possessor of his own homestead, an absolute freehold.

There is no distressing labour in Manitoba, such as is inevitable in a heavily-wooded territory which has to be cleared. The soil is light, and there is such a simple system of agriculture, and so much is done by machinery, that the work is even easier than on an English farm. The climate is undoubtedly most healthy in the country districts (although from want of proper sanitary arrangements this cannot be said of some of the mushroom cities which have sprung up so suddenly), and the intense cold in the winter need not be dreaded by those properly clad to encounter it. At any rate, the hardships of life there (whatever they may be) are cheerfully borne by many settlers and their families, who have left homes of refinement and comfort in England, and therefore ought not to deter a healthy, persevering lad who wishes to push his way on to independence and prosperity. I fear, however, few sons of gentlemen will feel contented with the surroundings of what I believe to be the very best opening in the world for a hard-working, friendless boy, so that I hope nothing I have written will be construed into an encouragement for middle-class youths to go to the north-west; although I met some of that class doing well there, I found many utterly ruined.

My purpose is to fix upon Toronto as a base of operations, for it is a centre of railway communication, for drafting younger boys to their new homes in Ontario, and will be a nice break in the long journey for parties going to Manitoba by the Canadian Pacific Railway route, through the lakes from Owen Sound to Port Arthur.

My position is just this: I have more than fifty places already secured, with leading agriculturists I have visited in Manitoba, for lads to arrive out there in August in time for the harvest work. I am ready to start with a large party in July, and I find the work in the Homes here has been kept in capital order in my absence (as I was sure it would be), so that I have no anxiety no that score. But while I have been away little has come to hand, and claims amounting to £700 require immediate settlement. Then with about £10 to meet the expenses of passage, outfit, &c., for each lad, and a few hundreds to sustain the Homes here, my way will be quite clear to open up this grand new field of juvenile emigration, to prove, it may be, a blessing, in years to come, to thousands of poor children.

Will you join me in prayer that my way may be made very plain in this important movement?

Yours faithfully,

J. W. C. FEGAN.

The Rescue Society.

DEAR SIR,—The work of the Rescue Society so long under the care of the late Mr. Daniel Cooper, is so well known to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN that no word of mine is needed to explain its difficult, peculiar, and yet Christ-like work. The present need is, however, so great that I most earnestly ask you kindly to allow me briefly to lay before your readers the following facts:—

One hundred and fifty-three young women and girls are at present under our care; fresh cases are admitted daily, and our eleven Homes are in full working order.

Our receipts have, however, been far too small to meet the need, and we cannot but think that possibly the cause may, in part, be attributed to the fact that whereas the death of the late Secretary was made widely known, it is not so generally understood that the Committee who laboured so many years with him are continuing the work undiminished.

Will not those friends who held in such high and well-deserved esteem the late Mr. Daniel Cooper, and who generously supported the work under his care, again, with others, come to the help of the Lord, and strengthen our hands by supplying us with the money needed to carry on this branch of the Lord's work? We have absolutely no money in hand to purchase food for our 153 inmates, with the matrons and assistants, or to pay the salaries of the latter.—Yours to serve in the Gospel of Christ,

C. STUART THORPE,

85, Queen-street, Cheapside. Secretary.

WELLINGTON, SALOP.—The new hall, built and paid for in 1862, is still the centre of great blessing. Many souls have recently rested in the Saviour, and some very striking cases of conversion have taken place. One feature of the work lately encourages us very much—that of the many converts the larger number are from the members of the mothers' meeting, Mr. Weston's Saturday-night Bible-class, and the young people attending the children's services. However, the work has not been confined to them; great help has been given in carrying it on by the men of the Railway Mission, and many men employed on the line have been converted. We praise the Lord for all this. We are expecting Mr. George Müller, of Bristol, to speak to us shortly, and ask the Lord's children to pray for much blessing to attend his visit and the work generally. J. E. CRANAGE.

Soul Music.

THE world is full of singing,
I hear it everywhere;
The flowers their bells are ringing
Out on the scented air:
And up above, around me,
The silent anthems roll,
For the glorious Lord has found me,
And there's music in my soul.

My heart was full of sighing,
With just some breaks of song,
As Self was ever trying
To make its weakness strong;
But now in Him confiding,
His word has made me whole,
And ever in Christ abiding,
There's music in my soul.

My life was full of sadness,
Of overweighting care;
But now the oil of gladness
Has turned to praise the prayer:
And so I keep pursuing,
And pressing toward the goal,
But praying, waiting, doing,
There's music in my soul.

And so my heart keeps clinging
To the dear Master's word;
And it is always singing,
Just like a spring-time bird.
I know not what the harps may be,
When the heavenly anthems roll,
But I know that Heaven is near to me,
For there's music in my soul.

Earl Cairns on Thrift.

AT a meeting held under the auspices of the National Thrift Society, on Friday evening, Earl Cairns, who presided, said it gave him great pleasure to render any assistance to the Thrift movement. Scarcely any subject was more interesting or more important, and it was certainly one which deserved the attention of all classes of society. There were, however, many people who had the idea that thrift was necessary only for working people; but whilst it concerned them more especially, yet it was incumbent on all to exercise self-control and self-denial, and thus participate in the advantages which accrue from carrying out thrift principles. It was a mistake to suppose, because the amount that could be saved was only small, that therefore the operation should not be commenced at all.

The first step in this direction was a most important one, and often formed a memorable epoch in the life of the individual taking it. There were two special benefits which the thrifty derived. First, there was the advantage gained by the self-denial; and, secondly, there was the actual amount saved from unnecessary expenditure, available in times of need, and to provide for emergencies.

Thrift did not, however, merely imply saving, but meant also the avoidance of all waste. The advantages of thrift should be specially inculcated upon the young, who should be induced to deposit in penny banks instead of spending money on altogether useless things, often doing them more harm than good. The habit thus gained would be invaluable to them in after life.

The women could do much in this matter. They could persuade their husbands and children to be careful and prudent, and it should be borne in mind that thrift principles not only conduced to the steadying of character, but served greatly to increase the happiness of the individual as well as the prosperity of the nation. In conclusion, Lord Cairns trusted that the Portman Chapel Penny Bank, to be commenced at the Reeve Mission-room, Manchester-square, the following evening, would prove an aid to thrift, and be well attended by the working-classes of the district.

THE PARIS CITY MISSION.

A WELL-ATTENDED drawing-room meeting, on behalf of this important Mission, was held on Friday week, at the Earl of Shaftesbury's residence, 24, Grosvenor-square. The chair was taken by Mr. Donald Matheson, in the absence of the noble lord from indisposition. After prayer by Rev. W. H. Webb-Peploe,

Mr. WEYLLAND referred to the need of funds, and stated that a picture of King George III., by Sir Joshua Reynolds, had been offered for sale by the owner for the benefit of the Mission for £100, and was awaiting a purchaser. He referred to the spiritual results obtained by the Mission. The Word of God has free course, and is glorified. Having visited the homes of the poor in Paris, in company with Mr. Lockie, he could testify to the good influences brought to bear on the people, and trusted the Paris City Mission might receive a fresh impulse, and the material help necessary to extend its operations, instead of parting with two of its agents.

The CHAIRMAN called on Rev. T. BARON HART to give some details of the Society's work, he having resided for twenty years in Paris, and taken an active part in the organisation of the Mission. Mr. Hart referred to the paucity of efforts in Paris twenty years ago, when the late Lady Harriett Cowper established a Mission-room for English coachmen and grooms in the Avenue Montaigne. Then came the work of that devoted Pastor, Armand Delille, who orginated daily evangelistic services in the Rue Royale Chapel before, during, and after the late war of 1870. Mr. Hart referred to those whom the Society has been helping, such as Miss De Bröen, in the iron room at Belleville (the Whitechapel of Paris); the glorious work of Mr. McAll, to whom the Paris Mission gave two missionaries; the similar work of Rev. Mr. Gibson, who has long been waiting for a missionary. Mr. Hart concluded with a warm appeal for aid. If the five agents could be increased tenfold we might hope to realise the motto of "Paris for Christ," by preaching "Christ for Paris."

Mr. LOCKIE, the Paris Secretary, followed with some striking illustrations of the nature of the work amongst our fellow-countrymen.

Rev. Canon FLEMING said the state of London is deplorable enough; what would it have been but for the London City Mission? But it must be much more difficult to evangelise Paris; however, all cities are the same, and all hearts are the same. If Paris could be evangelised, France would be saved, if France, then the world might be saved. God never tills the soil, or puts the seed into the ground; He sends the rain, and causes the seed to grow, but human instrumentality is needed; hence the necessity of sending more labourers into God's harvest-field.

Mr. GEORGE WILLIAMS said we may consider London as Jerusalem, and having the first claim on our sympathies; but Paris is our neighbour city, almost like a suburb of London. He warmly urged the increase of subscribers.

Rev. W. H. WEBB-PEPLOE said, we must think not only of the Bitter Cry of London, but also of the Bitter Cry of Paris. We who know the blessing the London City Mission has been to London, must seek to make her little sister in Paris a blessing to that City. The Paris City Mission is worthy of our support, because it carries the Gospel direct to the homes and to the hearts of the people by familiar and friendly intercourse. The men at work are peculiarly qualified to carry Christ to the people by their lives and in their ministrations. The Parisians are not great readers of books, but they love discussions and conversations.

Mr. F. A. BEVAN said this Mission is peculiarly adapted to help all other Missions, and to follow up individual cases. The French are most communicative, and are easily reached. We who visit Paris ought to send the Gospel to the Parisians, and win their hearts from scepticism and popery, to faith in the Lord Jesus. This is a direct missionary effort to save individual souls; the Gospel has not lost its power.

The key-note of the meeting was the information that the funds were so low as to necessitate the withdrawal of two missionaries. One of these, however, having a third of his salary provided by a Paris congregation, declined to be withdrawn. Certainly the small number of missionaries ought rather to be doubled than decreased.

Ragged Schools in London.

ON Wednesday afternoon, last week, the Lord Mayor presided at a meeting held at the Mansion House, the object being the extension of the Ragged School Mission System in all the densely-populated and needy portions of the metropolis. The attendance was not so large as we had hoped. The Earl of Aberdeen, the Baroness Burdett-Coutts, and others, sent messages regretting their inability to be present, and expressing their deepest sympathy with the movement.

Mr. H. R. WILLIAMS read, from a report, extracts showing the origin and progress of the Ragged School Union. After much prayer and consideration the Committee had resolved to raise a fund of £20,000, which they propose to call "The Shaftesbury Fund," for consolidating and extending the work of the Union. An unexpected legacy of £1000, which had just been announced to them, would be devoted to the inaugurating of the proposed fund. Extensive repairs were absolutely necessary for many of the existing buildings; freeholds were needed to be secured in others, and leases were falling in which must be renewed. If their expectations were realised, accommodation would be provided for 10,000 additional children.

The proposition was supported by the Earl of SHAFTESBURY, who again pointed to the fact of 300,000 children having been taken off the streets by the Union, and put in honourable service. The first question asked by many a parent on locating in a fresh neighbourhood, was, "Where is the Ragged School?" Someone went into a large court to try to reach the children, but they could not be found. So he took next time a "Punch and Judy," and the half-naked little urchins came creeping out from under water-butts, and beds like so many black-beetles. As a certain Bishop had said, he hoped the time would soon come when there would be a fold for every flock, and a shepherd for every fold.

The announcement was made that the sum of between £200 and £300 had been promised by the friends present, which included £100 from Mr. H. R. Williams, and the same sum from Sir R. Carden, who took the chair vacated by the Lord Mayor. Rev. B. Cassin said he could easily get 500 children instead of 260 in his parish if the funds were increased. Sir Fowell Buxton, in a neat speech, said that the Board schools did not clash with Ragged schools, any more than the mowing machine clashed with the old-fashioned scythe.

MISS MASON'S HOUSE OF REST.—A gentleman who has read the New Report of the House of Rest for Christian Workers, writes to Miss Mason sending £50 for current expenses, and says that he is most anxious to relieve her of the burden of the £1000 mortgage on the Eastbourne house. He adds, "If you can find anyone to join me at the first £500, we will pay it off, £250 each." According to the terms of the mortgage, it must be paid off either in one sum, or in two instalments of £500 each. Communications on the subject to be addressed to Miss Mason, 7, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn, N.W.

BLACKDOWN HILLS MISSION.—Mr. John Lobb, editor of the Christian Age, and member of the London School Board, has been visiting our various Mission stations, and addressing large and attentive congregations in the different localities of the Blackdown Hills. His words were with blessing, we trust, to those who have had the privilege of hearing him. He has recently married a lady who was formerly in our schools, and converted while with us. Her parents reside on the Hills, and in visiting them he has been gladdened to find so many happy, intelligent Christians on these once neglected parts. We also have been delighted with his large-hearted and genial Christianity. G. B.

MR. MOODY'S CONFERENCE

TEMPLE GARDENS HALL, LONDON, E.C.,

JUNE 17, 18, and 19, 1884.

TUESDAY, JUNE 17.

AS announced in our last issue, Conferences were held in the Embankment Hall on the mornings of Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday last week. When the proceedings began, at 11 o'clock on Tuesday morning, there was an excellent muster of workers and others. Mr. MOODY presided throughout.

The meeting opened with the singing of the favourite hymn—

"My Jesus, I love Thee, I know Thou art mine;"

then Lord Radstock offered prayer for a blessing on the engagements of the hour. Another song of praise having ascended, Psalm cxvi. was read by a clergyman. Thereafter followed prayer by Rev. J. L. Luce, who thanked God that so many of those who had received blessing at the past meetings were showing the reality of their conversion by their changed lives. One more hymn, and then an Opening Address by Mr. MOODY.

It was thought that it would be pleasant to call together the workers who have been engaged these past months in the different parts of the City, to have a little quiet time with the Lord, in separation from the world. The meetings these three mornings will be for that purpose. Many of us have been very busy during the past seven months, trying to reach others; it may be that leanness has come into our own souls. While we have been looking after the vineyards of others, our own vineyard has been neglected. So this morning let us keep this thought before us, that we have come really to meet with God rather than to hear man. Let us be praying that God would speak to us, and that we may hear his voice when He does speak. Sometimes we are so immersed in the world, and it makes such a noise all around us, that we cannot hear the voice of God. To-day, even if man has nothing to say to us, I am quite sure God will have something to say, if we will but listen to hear his voice.

A friend of mine was telling me that he was in his study one day preparing his sermon, when his little child came into the room. Looking up, he said: "Well, my daughter, what do you want?" The little one replied: "Nothing, papa; I only want to be with you." That was real communion and fellowship to the child—to be near its parent. I think the Lord wants us sometimes just to come into his presence and rest there, even if we do not ask Him for anything. It is not so much prayer that we need to-day, as simple waiting on God. If there is anything separating us from Him, let us ask Him to show it to us while we wait upon Him. Our subject to-day is—

Separation from the World, and Service for God in the World.

In Psalm lxxxv. 8, we read: "I will hear what God the Lord will speak." When we think of this it is well for us to turn to John xiv., and see what Christ did say to his disciples. It was when He was alone with them that he uttered these words. After the events recorded in the twelfth chapter he turned away from the world as if his public work was done. Chapters xiii. to xvii. record what He said to his disciples. In this 14th chapter, verse 15, He says: "If ye love Me, keep my commandments. . . . I will not leave you comfortless; I will come to you." This seems to have been the burden of his prayer: that his disciples might be sanctified, set apart, separated from unbelievers and from the world.

Many Christian people say: "Christ said we were not to be taken out of the world; therefore we must go into the world." There is a great deal of difference between my being in the world and the world being in me. There is as much difference as between a vessel being in the water and water being in the vessel. When the world gets into me, so that I love it, and my heart is set upon worldly things, my communion with God is interrupted, and I begin to lose power. The surest and best way to get the disciples of Jesus Christ out of the world is to give them something better. I do not know of anything sweeter than real fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ—than to have the Father and the Son coming to abide with us. That is better than all the world can give. Would you not rather have the God of glory coming to dwell with you—not merely to visit you now and then, but to abide with you—than all the friendship of the world? That is what He will do for us if we serve Him and keep his commandments.

Contact with the world will chill the true believer. If we really belong to God we will turn away from the world. The question may come up: "What is the world?" Anything that interrupts our communion with God—that hinders the progress of the spiritual life, and that chills our affection for Christ. Anything that does that, we ought to give up. If we are willing to do so Christ will more than make it up to us. Many Christians seem to have the desire to live as near the world as they possibly can—to have as much of the world as they can, and have Christ at the same time. My experience has been that such Christians are the most wretched people on the face of the earth. They neither enjoy the world nor Christ. They are what are called border Christians, running a little over the line, mingling with the world to-day, and coming back among Christ's people tomorrow. The best way is to keep as far from the world as you can—to have as little to do with it as you can. Someone asked Billy Dawson how the world was getting on? He said he didn't know; he hadn't been there for a number of years.

I remember there used to be an apple-tree near the town where I lived when I was a boy. I suppose the apple-tree was a very good one, but it was so near the road that we boys used to get hold of the apples before they were ripe. The fruit never was allowed to get to perfection, because of its being so near the public road. If it had been away back in some more retired spot, no doubt the apples would have been delicious when the proper time came. So it seems to me there are many professing Christ who never bring forth any ripe fruit; they are so much hand-and-glove with the world that there is no separation and no bearing of testimony.

I know that some people use the argument: "If you get so far from the world, and are so dead to it, you will not have any influence over it." Well, I have not gone through the world with my eyes shut, and I have yet to find the man or woman, living a worldly life, who has got much influence with it. Have you ever found a wife, living a worldly life, who had much influence for good over her husband; or such a husband that had influence with his wife? I believe that Lot had less influence in Sodom than Abraham had. When he wanted to save his sons-in-law they mocked at him. Every time the children of Israel turned away from God to other nations, in order to increase their power and influence, they always lost instead of gaining influence. You cannot win favour from the world without compromising your loyalty to Christ, and losing your influence as Christian men. Wives have come to me, and said they had tried to get their husbands to come to religious meetings. "He has promised, if I go to the theatre with him now and then, he will go to church with me." I have said to them, "How did you get on? Does your husband have as much respect for your religion as before?" I have invariably been told that the wives lost influence with their husbands by such compromises.

We are told that if we lift the standard too high many people will leave the churches and chapels. There is no doubt about that, but you will get a good many more. The power of God will be with you, and then many souls will be added to the Church. What do we see to-day? A low standard of Christian life, and therefore little power in the churches and chapels, and few sinners converted. People go on with their grand choirs, and their organs, and their preaching, but there are no conversions. What is the trouble? The world has come into the Church. It is a popular thing now to belong to some church or chapel. We want to see where we are, and to be separated from the world, if we would be faithful to our Lord.

Let me refer to a passage in 2 Chron. xviii. In the preceding chapter we are told that Jehoshaphat was prospering wonderfully. Then in this eighteenth chapter we read: "Now Jehoshaphat had riches and honour in abundance, and joined affinity with Ahab." Right then and there his dynasty began to fall. He had formed an alliance with one of the worst men then living—Ahab, the bitter enemy of the prophet Elijah. These two had nothing in common. Jehoshaphat thought perhaps that he was going to strengthen his kingdom when he formed this alliance. The next thing we hear is that he has gone down to Samaria to visit Ahab, who enticed him to go to war along with him. There he was hand-and-glove with Ahab. His son married Ahab's daughter, and it was the ruin of the kingdom of Jehoshaphat.

May God bring us out from the world. If we have formed any unholy alliances, or if we have "joined affinity with Ahab," let us confess it this morning, and ask God to forgive us. Let us draw near to Him. A verse came into my mind this morning that I want to leave with you: "Draw nigh to God, and God will draw nigh to you."

At the close of Mr. Moody's heartfelt exhortation, the whole company sang the hymn with this appropriate refrain:—

"Draw me nearer, nearer, blessed Lord,
To the Cross where Thou hast died;
Draw me nearer, nearer, blessed Lord,
To Thy precious bleeding side."

Address by Dr. PENTECOST.

The verse that fixed itself upon my mind with reference to this subject is in Psalm cxvi. 16: "Oh, Lord, truly I am Thy servant; I am Thy servant, and the son of Thine handmaid; Thou hast loosed my bonds." In this Psalm David is breathing a desire to render something unto the Lord for all his benefits; in this verse he makes an acknowledgment and a confession—a confession of mercies having been received, and an acknowledgment of obligations incurred. If we are Christians at all, that is the first thing we learn: God has loosed our bonds. We are bound in sin, bound to Satan, bound to death. God has loosed these bonds, and set us free. He sets us free—from what, and to what? Free from our sins and from all our bonds, but not free from Him. He sets us free from those things which work our death, but in love to us He binds us to Himself. I think the Lord knew perfectly well we could not have freedom apart from Himself, so He just bound us to Himself.

Sometimes when I have read some of the Apostle Paul's most conspicuous expressions, I have wondered whether he rejoiced most in his salvation or his bondage. He rejoiced that he was saved from death, but at the same time he fairly gloried and revelled in the idea that he was a bond-servant of Christ. It delighted him to speak of his sonship, but it seems as if a thrill of joy possessed him when he spoke of the bonds that bound him to Christ. Again and again he gloried in the thought of being a servant of Jesus Christ, holding up his shackles as though they were the very best ornament he could wear, the highest marks of honour that could be upon him.

Our topic is, "Separation from the world, and union with Christ for service in the world." I once saw a diver go down into the sea from a ship. I noticed that he was careful to see that every cord binding him to the ship above the water was perfectly safe. He had all his communications with the upper world made sure before he ventured to go down into the under world. So, before we go down into the world for service, we must be sure that we are bound to God in heaven, or we shall perish in the world again. Like the diver, we must draw the vital air from above us, and at the least alarm or danger we have but to pull the cord of communication, and either we will be brought up again instantly out of the place of service for refreshment and a larger breath, or better supplies will be sent down to us.

David says: "Oh, Lord, truly I am Thy servant." When we think of who David was, it delights us to hear him say this. He was a mighty king and warrior, a chief captain, a man of boundless influence in the world; yet he delighted to take his place as a servant at the feet of Jesus Christ. The other day I was on the Row in Hyde Park, and a friend who was with me pointed out a number of the celebrities and notabilities in London, titled ladies and gentlemen, and others. I was quite desirous of seeing some of them. I had heard of and been familiar with their names—some of them belonging to families that are interwoven with the history of England. But I have thought, looking over the faces of some in the audience this morning—some having earthly titles, and some having no titles—I have seen from their faces that they are bound to the Lord Jesus Christ, and that they wear his name. They are the servants of Him who is the Lord of lords and King of kings, and I have had more delight in looking at some of these faces than in looking upon the faces of those who merely represent rank or title in the world.

I do not think that we enough magnify the dignity of the Christian name. If it should ever please anybody to put a tombstone over my grave after I am dead, I would rather have one name written there by right, than have on it all the epitaphs that could possibly be composed. I should be content if it could be said truly of me: "Here lies a Christian who was faithful in the world to his Master."

The flesh is so weak, and we are so entirely unable to take a position and hold it by ourselves, that our God has made wonderful provision for for us. In Matt. xvi. (and in other Gospels we have the same thing) it is recorded that Jesus said: "If any man will be My disciple, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and come after Me." There are many Christians who seem to think that the cross is the terribly hard thing about discipleship. The world to-day wants a Christianity without a cross in it. There are two conditions of salvation—coming to Jesus, and following Jesus. The benefits of the first are conditioned also upon the second. A man who simply becomes a disciple in the sense of believing in Christ for justification, and who has not taken the next step, taking up the cross and following Jesus Christ, is at best only half a Christian. Indeed, I am not sure that he is a Christian at all. Paul says it was by the cross he was crucified to the world, and the world was crucified to him. He did not speak of it in this instance so much as that upon which his sins were atoned for, as that by means of which a practical separation between him and the world took place. The cross was that upon which everything that was in him that was contrary to God was put to death. So if we are to serve Jesus Christ in the best sense of the word, we must come into fellowship with Him by taking up the cross He has appointed to us.

There are many who will not accept the first condition of salvation. I am afraid there are many who seem to have accepted it, but who shrink from the second condition, or the continuous condition. It would be a sorry thing if a woman should say she was willing to marry a man, but did not want to be bound to him after she was married, and so be separated from all other men for his sake, to bear his name, and to lose herself in him, so to speak. He would be a strange young man who should go to one of your universities, desiring to matriculate, on condition that he would not have to study, but simply have his name enrolled in the College books. He would be a strange soldier who wanted to enlist on condition that he was not required to leave his home, put on the uniform, or ever go to war. In like manner, he is a strange Christian who wants to believe that Jesus has somehow or other put away his sin, but who does not want to be bound to Him, to take up his cross, and follow his Master in this world to the very death. We read that he that "continueth steadfast," or he that "endureth to the end" shall be saved. While the promises of salvation lie all along from the initial movement of faith in Jesus Christ, these promises still hold us bound to a certain walk and service all the way along.

I have a conviction that before we can really serve Jesus Christ we must settle this point for ever—that we are to take our cross and follow Him. We cannot serve Him if the flesh is uppermost in us. We must take the cross in order that the flesh may be put to death. I do not know what you read out of your Bible, or what your experience is, but I read, and my experience corresponds with this, that "the old man" will never die a natural death. He must be put to death. He will struggle and fight, and resist to the death, until we get him bound, nailed to the cross, and let him stop there. Until by the power of the Lord, he dies, he will never die. So I desire to take the cross in order that "the old man" may be bound to it, and put to death.

The cross, of course, involves something. It involves nothing to the real Christian, but a good deal to "the old man" that is always on his feet whenever he gets a chance, crying out for his rights. The cross brings suffering only to that which ought to suffer; sacrifice only to that part of us which ought to suffer sacrifice; it cuts only where it ought to cut. So our Lord has insisted that we must take the cross, and follow Him—have fellowship with Him in his sufferings. By it sin is dealt with in us, as it was dealt with for us by his death on the Cross.

There is a good deal in all this that many Christians shrink from; for this reason, they never prove the truth of Christianity, and never do any real service for Jesus Christ. In bearing reproach from the world, or from friends in our own homes, of course the nearer the person is from whom the reproach comes, the severer the pain of it will be. We must learn to have fellowship with Jesus Christ, to be separated to Jesus Christ in our own homes, even if He comes between us and those who are nearest to us; otherwise we shall not have the fulcrum and the lever of power for service in this world. When Jesus Christ came into this world, the world put Him to death. But be you assured, dear friends, if Jesus is coming into you it is to put you to death. We first put Him to death; when He takes possession of us He puts that in us to death that first put Him to death. Then things get pretty even, I think, on the line of the grace and glory of God.

We are asking God for blessing. We desire to be used in his service. I hear many Christians praying for power, that they may be successful in their service. I have been wondering why so many of us get no answer to this prayer. I think it is because we make the prayer, but yet we are not ready to receive the answer. Some years ago, at my home in Northfield, I said to a friend of mine, who was laying in a store of coal for Mr. Moody's Seminary there, that he might as well order half a dozen tons for me. "Have you got any place to put it?" I told him it could be put into my cellar. I had no idea that the coal would be there for a week at least. I think it was about two hours after, that a man came running up to me, and said: "Where are you going to put this coal?" "What coal?" "Why, the coal that Mr. Marshall sent up!" "Surely it has not come up already?" "Yes, there are six waggon-loads of it standing there." I had made no arrangement or preparation of any kind, and the cellar was full of rubbish. I had asked for a thing, and it had come instantly, but I could not receive it, because I was not ready for it.

So when we ask God for power, that we may be used in his service, the Spirit of God is ready, but too often we have no place for that which we asked for. Our hearts are full of the world, our lives are all in a tangle, and we do not really expect the power. Perhaps we want God to put it on the top of all that worldly rubbish, but God will not put it there.

About the bitterest experience any one can have is in trying to do God's work without God's presence. It is labour, and toil, and disappointment, and bitter regret. Two or three years ago my little boy was playing about on the lawn. There was an apple-tree there on the edge of the lawn, and the apples were falling upon the grass. I said to my boy, "George, go and pick up those apples, and clear them away from the lawn." "Yes, papa," he said. I came back in the afternoon, and saw all the apples there; he had not picked one up. I said: "My boy"—he was only some six years old—"why have you not picked up the apples?" "Oh, papa, you must come and help me; I am too little to pick up the apples by myself." When I went out with him he picked them up with great gladness. So it seems to me there is no service that we dare do—not even the least—unless our Father comes to be with us and to help us; we are of ourselves too little and too weak. God has so much work to do, and so few to do it, out of the multitudes that name his Name, I do pray that out of this London Mission there may come up a great host of men and women who will understand that Christianity means not only salvation in heaven, but separation from the world in order that from heaven we may go back into the world and do service for Jesus Christ.

A very solemn season of praise, prayer, and personal consecration followed. Mr. MOODY said he might never have the opportunity of preaching in London again, and he asked that the congregation should unite in prayer for him, and for fresh power in his work during the present week. He had been trying to give out to others during the past seven months, and he felt that leanness had come into his own soul. If any others felt the same need of a fresh anointing for service, let them present themselves. Dr. Pentecost and Lord Radstock in a few brief words expressed their wish to stand beside Mr. Moody in this respect, and presently the great bulk of the company stood on their feet in token of their desire to get an individual blessing. After a lengthened pause for silent petition, a brother on the platform led in earnest and appropriate prayer. Another hymn of consecration was sung, and thereafter Dr. Sinclair Paterson dismissed the chastened assembly with the benediction.

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 18.

There was again a large attendance this morning, including many of the workers whose faces have been familiar to the habitués of the past winter's Mission. The opening hymn was:—

"Fade, fade, each earthly joy,
Jesus is mine.
Break every tender tie,
Jesus is mine."

Prayer followed by Rev. E. A. Stuart, of Holloway, and subsequently by Rev. Robert Taylor, of Norwood, the first chapter of John's First Epistle having been read between by Rev. Chas. Graham. The subject for the morning's Conference was Communion with God.

Address by Rev. J. J. LUCE.

The desire of the heart of many of us is to enjoy this communion with God as a reality—not so much to hear about it, to think about it, to talk about it, or even to pray about it; we want to know what it is to live in fellowship with our God. It is not our desire only; it is his desire. It is because it is his desire that it is our desire. He longs for fellowship with us, and so we long for it too. This is what the Lord says in Hosea ii. 23; "I will say to them which were not my people, Thou art my people; and they shall say, Thou art my God." We generally begin with our experience first, do we not? We say, "Jesus is mine;" and then, "I am his." We are first of all occupied with what we have got, and then we come to think of what He has got. And just as we claim Him for our "all and in all," so He claims his people for his inheritance, and his whole inheritance. He has not bought a share in the concern; He has bought us out and out. He purchased us for his dwelling with his own blood; then He comes to possess the dwelling He has purchased. So we are his utterly, wholly, and for ever. Everything that does not go to Him is so much robbery against our Lord.

We all understand and believe this; what we need to know is the power in which we are to live out this life. This fellowship with God is best known, perhaps, when we have once tasted it, after having lost it. When you know what it is, you will never be satisfied with anything short of it. If, like Israel of old, you have wandered, and have been unfaithful to your Lord, you must get back again. The Lord says we are to know Him—that is fellowship; to walk in Him—that is fellowship; and to dwell in Him—that is fellowship.

We are to know HIM—not only to know his dealings, to know about Him, but to know HIMSELF. Read carefully this second chapter of Hosea, and you will see that Israel knew a great deal about God's dealings, but that was not enough. Israel was an adulteress from God; she had been unfaithful to the Lord. There is no term too strong by which to denounce unfaithfulness to God. Oh, that we had a horror of it; that we realised the awful tenderness of God's love as well as the awful blackness of the sin which He calls adultery against Himself. Israel was first of all brought to know the Lord by dissatisfaction with the world and the pleasures of the world. Then began the desire to find the Lord again. "I will return to my first husband." Why? "For then it was better with me than now." That was a very unworthy motive. Yet the desire was a right one. Then comes judgment. "I will visit upon her the days of Baalim." You must not be surprised if you find that God is separating you from all that hinders your communion with Himself. If we are to bring forth more fruit we must be cleansed from all that would prevent the outflow of his life in us.

But this is not enough; for you know He says, "I will betroth thee unto Me for ever . . . . in righteousness and in judgment, and in loving-kindnesses, and in mercies . . . . and thou shalt know the Lord." We know so much about Him; we talk so much about Him, and theorise so much about Him; but alas! how little there is of real intimate personal acquaintance with the Lord Himself. Suffer me to exhort you. Do not go to your day's work until you have an interview with Jesus, morning by morning. I believe this is at the bottom of half our failures as Christians, of the want of backbone in our Christian life and testimony. This accounts for so much of our powerlessness. We do not know sufficiently what it is to be alone with God.

But it is not only in a retired sequestered view that we are to look at this fellowship. We are to walk with God. This is very practical, and touches our daily life, our words, our thoughts, our feelings, our steps. To walk with God means that we are to have nothing separate from Him; that we are to know what it is to have his companionship at all times—under all circumstances. It means that, moment by moment, we are to do, as we sometimes sing:—

"My Saviour comes and walks with me,
And sweet communion here have we;
He gently leads me by the hand,
For this is heaven's borderland."

Then we are called to walk in the Lord—to dwell, to abide in Him, and He to walk, and dwell, and abide in us. Is not this marvellous? It is one thing to go to the Lord for help as you go to a rich, kind, generous friend who lives next door; it is quite another thing to live in Him—in the abundant fulness of the Lord. To live in Christ and have Christ living in me—that is what I want to know. The secret of it is to guard against all that is unloving. When Jesus spoke of our abiding in Himself, and his abiding in us, He went on at once to speak of this first fruit of the Spirit—Love. This, of course, includes love to Himself, obedient love; but let us not forget this other part, "love to the brethren." How can Christians think of being in communion with God and at the same time out of communion with one another? It is utterly impossible if there is any grudge, any ill-will in our hearts against a brother or sister, that we should be in fellowship with our Lord.

Let me mention two conditions of fellowship, or two results of fellowship, for they come very closely together. First of all, CONFESSION; and then PRAISE. If you want to have continual communion with God, you must be continually judging yourself before God, for all that you know, and for anything that you suspect, that is contrary to Him. I do not see the slightest inconsistency between confession of sin and communion with God. It is the other way round. If instead of trying to justify our own particular views and ideas, or the ideas of other people, we were simply to go into the presence of God when we suspect that any cloud has come between our souls and Him, and look at everything in his light, and at once begin to judge ourselves, with confession to God, we should maintain our fellowship with Him.

If we are to know this life of fellowship, we must also praise. This matter is very much laid upon my heart. I do think that the singing part of our Christian life ought to be more prominent than it is. "She shall sing there, as in the days of her youth, and as in the day when she came up out of the land of Egypt." There is a hymn that is often a stumbling-block to Christians; I often hear them talk against it:—

"I feel like singing all the time,
My tears are wiped away;
For Jesus is a Friend of mine,
I'll serve Him every day.
I'll praise Him, praise Him, all the time."

We will not say anything about the first line, because we do not always "feel like it;" but that does not matter. The question is: Are we praising all the time? We can always be doing that, I think. "I will bless the Lord at all times," says the Psalmist; "His praise shall continually be in my mouth." Do not leave out the word "continually." Or take it in the form of the command, "Let us offer unto God the sacrifice of praise continually." Again: "Rejoice in the Lord always." Do not omit the word "always." Do not be satisfied until you know what it is—because it is your duty and your privilege, and because you love to do it—"to praise Him all the time."

In harmony with the subject of the Conference there was then sung, to Mr. Stebbins' expressive tune, the beautiful hymn—

"I've found a Friend—oh, such a Friend,
He loved me ere I knew Him;
He drew me with the cords of love,
And thus He bound me to Him."

The prayer and confession of the assembly were given utterance to by Rev. Nevile Sherbrooke, after which came an Address by Rev. C. GRAHAM.

Communion with God! May we aspire to it in our present fallen state? Paul will answer our question: "What we have heard and seen that declare we unto you, that ye may have fellowship with us; and truly our fellowship is with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ." But we must ever remember, even when we enjoy this fellowship, that between us and God there is an infinite distance. He is the Creator; we are the creatures. He is the Saviour; we are the saved. He is the fountain of all blessing, and we are dependent on Him for all things.

The conditions of fellowship have been touched upon by Mr. Luce. The first of all the conditions, and that which is absolutely necessary to communion with God, is union with God. This union takes place when we believe in the Lord Jesus Christ as a Saviour. Out of that union springs all our communion. Communion may be interrupted, but union abides. We are as much in union with the Lord when asleep as when awake; but we could not say when we are in a sound sleep that we are in communion with God. Communion is a blessed conscious reality.

Another condition is this: "If we walk in the light." "If we say we have fellowship with God and walk in darkness, we lie, and we do not the truth." While we walk in the light we find Jesus ever before us; for all light from God comes to us by Christ. Walking in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us (or is cleansing us) from all sin." There is sin that we know, and there is sin that God's eye takes cognizance of that our eye cannot discern. We need the all-cleansing blood for that, and we have it while we are walking in the light But if we are living consciously in sin, an arrest is put upon our communion; it is interrupted. If we would enjoy abiding communion, so soon as we are conscious of any sin, let us confess it: "If we confess our sins, He is faithful and just (faithful to his promise and just to the work of his Son) to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" —from all sense of defilement.

Now, love is the great magnet that draws the soul to God. Communion necessarily implies that our likes and dislikes are in accord with God. When we love him, we will love all that He loves and hate all that he hates.

What are the main spheres of our communion? All that God has ever done. We have communion with Him in all his works, in his works of Creation, in his Providence, in all that He has done in Grace, and all that He has promised to do. But, to be a little more specific, we have communion through the Word. It is ours prayerfully to read it, day by day, and to attend on the ministry that instructs us in it. The written word reveals the incarnate Word. As we know Christ and appreciate Him, we have fellowship with the Father. We meet God there, and we must abide in Jesus if we would have fellowship with the Father. Our fellowship with God has relation to all that God says about Christ, and about the glory soon to be revealed, of which Christ will be the centre and minister to his Church and to the redeemed creation.

But there is another important sphere of service; I trust we are all beginning to see and realise more the importance of it. That is the sphere of spiritual service. I say spiritual for the sake of distinction. God is carrying out his purposes of redemption, by redeemed men. He has not committed to angels the work of carrying out the grand design which from all eternity He had planned for his own glory, and for the glory of his own son, and for the glory of his Church. God employs us; we have a higher ministry than any angel in heaven. We are connected immediately and directly with the work of Christ in the salvation of souls. As we realise compassion and sympathy with God in his compassion for perishing sinners, and in his love for his people, and practically manifest it, we have fellowship with Him, and that fellowship becomes apparent to angels, to devils, and to men. And unless our fellowship is so manifested, after all there may not be much in it but a name.

There is another sphere, and very important it is—though a very humble one, we will admit. God means that we should have fellowship with Him in our daily business, in our avocations, in our callings, our employment, whatever it may be. If our business is a lawful one, it is ours to accept it as from God, to fulfil its duties for God, to consecrate its gains to God. All that remains after the sustenance of ourselves and those dependent upon us ought to be the Lord's. If we have not fellowship with God here, it is a question whether we have much fellowship in the higher spheres. As we go on in this fellowship, we will be ascending the mount of communion; the air will get purer; the prospect will get larger and finer; we shall reach the summits of the Delectable Mountains at last; we shall see the spires of the Celestial City, and hear its bells of joy and its music even before we reach it. "The righteous also shall hold on his way, and he that hath clean hands shall be stronger and stronger." "For the path of the just is as the shining light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day."

MR. MOODY ON COMMUNION.

A lady was telling me yesterday, after the morning Conference, that she had set apart the hour from seven to eight o'clock each morning for communion. She dreaded it because she could not get her mind fixed on a subject in prayer for a whole hour. A great many people have the idea that the only way to commune with God is to be on their knees in prayer. I do not think I have ever seen a day in my life when I could pray uninterruptedly for one hour and keep my mind on the subject. When I go to God I tell Him what I want, and there is an end of it. If He sees best to give me what I ask for, I am very glad, but it may not be his will to do so. When I pray I am talking to God, but when I come to this Book and read it, that is God talking to me. Prayer is very important, but I think it is often more important that God should speak to me than that I should speak to Him. How is God going to speak to us now but through the Word? Any communion that does not bring us to the Word is not real, after all. Before they had any written word, God used to come down and speak to man. Angels came down bringing messages from above. We are told that Abraham fell on his face, and God talked with him. Moses went up into the mountain for forty days, and I do not think he was praying all the time; I think God spoke to him.

So if there is to be real communion we must pause once in a while in these busy days, and let God speak to us. There are so many things going on around us, that crowd out all thoughts about God and about his Word, that we need to be closeted alone every now and then—shut up from the world, and shut in with our Bibles, that God may speak to us through his Word. If we could spend an hour every day alone with God I am sure we would hear some message from above very often. Then our faces will shine. I believe we have an account in the Bible of three men whose faces shone. The first was Moses, after he had been with God for forty days. But, as some one has said, he did not know it himself: "He wist not that the skin of his face shone while he talked with Him." The nearer we get to God alone, the more we will be thinking of Him and the less of ourselves. We will not be all the while talking about how good we are. Dr. Andrew Bonar, speaking of Stephen's face shining, as recorded in Acts xii., says that when the Jews accused him of blaspheming the law of Moses, God lit up his face with the same glory that made Moses' face to shine when he received that law. The third instance of one whose face shone was Jesus on the Mount of Transfiguration. He was then in communion with God. He not only spake to the Father but the Father spake to Him. You notice that in the case both of Moses and Christ they came down from the mountain to service. So it is with us. The spirit of the Gospel is getting and giving. We cannot touch God's work, with a right motive, without virtue going forth to others.

After the congregation had sung in subdued and prayerful accents the hymn,

"Oh, to be nothing! nothing!
Only to be at his feet,"

Mr. Moody said he hoped all would pray to be filled with the Spirit. It was said that there must be an emptying before there was a filling. If God would fill them with his Holy Spirit that would empty them. Many people were wasting time trying to empty themselves instead of letting God fill them. "I will pour water upon him that is thirsty," says God; and again we read, "Blessed are they that hunger and thirst after righteousness for they shall be filled." To illustrate this point, Mr. Moody took a tumbler, and in order to empty it of the air, poured in water till it overflowed. If we are full of pride and self-seeking, he said, let us first ask God to fill us with his Spirit and all these things will be cast out.

Address by Dr. PENTECOST.

One of the most depressing, and one of the most pernicious habits into which the people of God are tempted to fall, is to try to realise experience. I suppose more Christians get out of communion in this way than almost in any other way. The very minute you begin to look into your own heart to find something that is essentially in God, you only see something you do not want to see. You have got your eyes turned away from Him in whose face alone you can realise the thing you desire.

Now, my thought, gathered from Scriptures, is that communion is not an emotion: it is a relation out of which communications pass. Mr. Graham has well said that before there can be communion, there must be union. But I am thinking a great many people—and God's dear people too—are trying to get a consciousness of union by their experience of communion. The very first essential of communion is the thing which they are reaching after. "Through Him we have access to the Father." Access to God must be an established fact between us before there can be any communion; so that all true communion rests fundamentally upon a clear apprehension of our union with God by Jesus Christ.

Mr. Graham has said that in communion we must recognise the infinite distance between us and God. There is an infinite distance between the Infinite God and finite man; but we want to recognise as well that while there is this difference of distance between us, there is no difference of separation between us and God. "We who were afar off by wicked works are made nigh by the blood of Christ." There is no communion between God and an alienated sinner; there can only be communion between God and his child, or his child who has become his servant. Sons we must be before we can have communion, and there is no great difference between a son and his father; that is, there is no difference that separates. God is always infinitely above us, but He is always infinitely near to us in Christ Jesus. This nearness is not accomplished by our feeling or by our purpose. We are "made nigh," and we are nigh, even if we are not in communion. But when we know that we are nigh, we are more apt to keep in communion. It is the neglect, or the forgetting, or the failure to recognise our nearness in Christ, that goes so far to interrupt and break up our communion.

The word "communion" might perhaps be a little better understood than it is. We get into ruts of meaning and definition. The word is sometimes translated "communication"—that is, a passing from one hand to another. "Let him that is ministered to in the word communicate to him that ministers the word." The Apostle was speaking of the servants of the Church. They are giving out to you, he says, of their spiritual things; you have to communicate with them by your temporal things. God gives to us, and He expects from us. It is not so much the passing of the love of God to us, and we giving back to Him some emotional delight in Him; it amounts to more than that. Mr. Moody, I think, touched the point when he said that it consists in the full recognition of our union with God, and in the earnest manifestation of our glad service to Him.

Let me suggest some scriptural thoughts on the subject. Communion is always by means of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit has scarcely been mentioned to-day; I suppose because his presence has been taken for granted, and probably because the consideration of his work belongs more specially to the subject of to-morrow's Conference. We have access to God, on the basis of the finished work of Christ, by the Spirit. Then it has been suggested that communion is by means of prayer, or intercourse between the soul and God. Prayer is rather the communion of the soul with God than God's communion with the soul. That also is by the Spirit. So with the question of knowledge, which has been mentioned. We cannot have communion with a person we do not know. It is the office of the Spirit of God to take of the things of Christ and show them unto us. That carries us to the Word, in dependence upon the Spirit of God. We cannot know God apart from Jesus Christ. The Apostle Paul was constantly desiring to attain to a higher and more blessed communion, and I think his enthusiasm in service rose in proportion as the measure of his knowledge of Christ increased. So we find him expressing the desire to the Philippians "That I may know Him." Yet he had been serving the Lord for thirty years. "And the power of his resurrection"—to know more of the meaning of the Resurrection, what the Risen Christ meant, as well as the suffering or crucified Christ, and what was his personal relation to Him. "And the fellowship of his sufferings, that I may be made conformable unto his death." So Paul was constantly thirsting after the knowledge of Christ—pressing forward into the things that God had in store for him.

Then we have heard of communion with God in our walk. "If we walk in the Spirit we shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh." "How can two walk except they be agreed?" It is impossible to expect communion with God if we are consciously, deliberately, and continually holding on to things that God cannot have fellowship with. We cannot keep up our spiritual communion—I mean by that, not only the passage of thought and affection, as between God and us, but the service which has to be done—if there is anything really between us. As a matter of fact, I have been thinking to-day that that pulpit [pointing to Mr. Moody's rostrum, which stood a little in front and was unused for the occasion] has interfered with the communion between some of you and the platform. I have noticed people trying to look round it. It may be a little thing, but it has been in the way. So there are a great many little things, and things that are most useful in themselves, that get in the way, and there may be a break in the communion.

One word, in closing, about teaching. Mr. Luce has said truly that we do not want simply to know about communion—it is not so much knowing this, that, or the other thing as a statement. That is perfectly true, and yet I have felt that if we would get into communion and enjoy communion—I do not mean enjoying it merely in the sense of consuming something upon the altar of spiritual pleasure—but if we are going to enjoy communion as a man in the fulness of life enjoys life, as a man who is enthusiastically in love with his work, enjoys work, we must know more about what it is and what it means. It is not merely religious sentimentality. I confess I get very weary of hearing many people who are supposed to be reaching out after a higher life and better communions. It often seems to me nothing but a desire for sentimental enjoyment, the mere cultivation of a set of emotions. If we are to have real, living, healthy communion, we must ever be increasing our knowledge. We want to know more about God and Christ, in order to know God, and to know Christ better. We need a large knowledge of the Word of God, and clear ideas of the Word of God concerning these great things. Anybody who has studied the Scriptures with any degree of care knows that one of the remarkable peculiarities of the Word of God is the extreme care with which the Holy Ghost has expressed the thoughts of God to us. So we want to get clear ideas, for example, of the difference between Forgiveness and Justification; between Justification and Sanctification; between the Witness of the Spirit and the Comfort of the Spirit. We want to take the Word of God and to hold it up before God in dependence upon the Gift of God, to find out what his thought is. If we get into real living spiritual communion with the Word of God, the life of communion will come of itself; it cannot help it.

I have to confess that I am tempted almost every day to fall back from the simple fundamental rule of the Christian life—namely, that "we walk by faith"—and to find in myself another way of walking by realisation or by feeling. It is a constant temptation to all of us to abandon the simple principle of walking by faith, taking the naked word of God at its full value. Faith is the apprehension and the acceptance of unseen things, as though they were seen. It is making substantial those things that are unseen and intangible. To begin to look for communion in the heart is about the most intangible thing in the world. If you look into the heart for peace and joy in the Holy Ghost, you cannot find them. God means us to dwell with Him, to work for Him, to worship Him, always, altogether, and upon the principle of faith. Otherwise we get into the realm of the wisdom of this world, and it has pleased God that the world by wisdom should not know Him.

Communion or communication with Jesus Christ is to be, not sometimes but always, not somewhere but everywhere. It is very delightful to serve God in a Mission like this. A great many people are saying, "What shall we all do when these Mission meetings are closed?" Why, there will be a thousand times more for you to do than there has been. The work is just beginning. But you say there will not be such enthusiasm about it, or the coming together of multitudes, or the same fellowship with each other, and all that. Well, that is just a reason why you want to have communion with Christ. Is the Lord going to leave all those converts to walk alone? You will have to set about ministering to them by the Spirit through the Word.

Then we want to commune with Christ wherever we are. It is delightful to have fellowship with Him in pleasant circumstances, and amongst his people. But the grace of God goes into all sorts of places, into very bad places, or it would never have got into my heart, however it may have been with you. So we want to commune with Christ everywhere. It may be He will carry us into places where we would not choose to go, into places that are not agreeable to the flesh, and in ways that will violate many of the canons of the set in which we live. Whether it be a cup of cold water to a disciple, a letter written here, a visit paid there, whatever it may be, we shall find communion with our Lord, if we are manifesting our union with Christ, if we are surrendering ourselves to him in the spirit of communication, yielding ourselves to Him for his service anywhere and everywhere.

Thus ended the addresses of the morning's Conference; it only remained for Lord Radstock to offer prayer, and Mr. Moody to pronounce the benediction.

THURSDAY, JUNE 19.

In the course of the preliminary service this morning, prayer was offered by Rev. E. H. Hopkins and Mr. C. R. Hurditch. Mr. Moody read the closing verses of Galatians v., in which the Apostle enumerates and contrasts the fruits of the Spirit with the works of the flesh. The topic of Conference for the day was

The Unity and Fruits of the Spirit.

Address by Rev. H. WEBB-PEPLOE.

We have already exemplified the unity of the Spirit, because Mr. Moody was led by God the Holy Ghost to read the very passage which I had prepared to read and refer you to, this morning. I love to feel there is a unity of spirit pervading such an assembly as this, and that we may forget everything but the one fact—that we are in God, that we are with God, and that by the grace of the Holy Spirit everything is to be of God, and for God, we trust.

Born of God, is the position we occupy, or else we have hardly any place in a Conference like this—born of God, sons and daughters of the Lord God Almighty. This life that we have received of God is the grandest possession that God can offer to man, because it is the very life of God, and the life of God freely given: not only a natural affinity with Him who begat us, but also a fellowship and enjoyment of life with God—the life that we have from Him. We must, as children of God, rejoice that by our communion with the Father there will also be exemplified in our daily life the tastes and habits that God Himself possesses, because the life that we have is our Father's life.

"God is love." "Walk in love," says Paul, "as dear children." We are to walk in love, as Christ also loved us, and gave Himself for us, offering a sweet-smelling savour unto God.

"God is a Spirit," or "God is Spirit," as it might more properly be put. "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit." The Spirit of God is in our souls already, crying, "Abba, Father," or we have no place here as God's children this morning. Then, says Paul, "walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfil the lusts of the flesh."

Again, "God is light." "If we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son is cleansing us"—thank God for that, my brethren, that as to the sins which are on us and in us, day by day, moment by moment, we can say, "the blood of Jesus Christ his Son is cleansing us from all sin."

Now it is to the manifestation of this glorious life that we are called of God; to go forth into the world to love as God has loved us; to show that as God sent forth his Son filled with the Spirit, so He has now endowed us with the same Holy Ghost to the fullest extent that He can bestow it; to walk in the light, so that the world may see us as lights shining in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation, thus magnifying the God who has endowed us. When we come together in these meetings I fear it is too often the case that we come with a desire for our own happiness more than anything else. There is a sad misunderstanding as to the nature of God's life in us. It would seem as though the devil, even after God has been dealing with us, had great power over us. What do we mean by happiness? What mean the children of God by coming together so frequently? Is it to hear how they may be made happy in this life, and how they may have everlasting happiness in the world to come? Happiness means simply that which haps, or which depends upon circumstances. The God life is not dependent on circumstances; it is character. And the child of God must not depend on circumstances; he must be one who lives independent of circumstances altogether. To be perpetually seeking after happiness is altogether to deny ourselves the wondrous honour and privilege to which we are called in this world.

When the Lord Jesus Christ was about to leave the world He gave his disciples, as a representative body that should set before the world the magnificence of God's gifts, this high privilege—to be fruit-bearers; to bear much fruit to the glory of God the Father. When we turn to the passage and ask what He meant by bidding his disciples bring forth fruit we find that there are three distinct manifestations which He requires; they are the very three that head the list which Paul gives in that fifth chapter of Galatians, when speaking of the fruits of the Spirit. In John xv. 9, we read what our Lord says of the possessions of those fruit-bearers: "As the Father hath loved Me, so have I loved you: continue ye in my love." Then, again, in verse 11: "These things have I spoken unto you, that my joy might remain in you, and that your joy might be full." So the love comes first, and the joy takes the second place. In the 16th chapter, verse 33, we get the other word: "These things I have spoken unto you, that in Me ye might have peace." Here we have love, joy, peace—the three manifestations of God the Holy Ghost, which the Lord Jesus Christ expressly expects from every child of God, and these three are to be exhibited in every disciple.

Now comes the question whether we can manifest these or whether they are impossibilities for us in the midst of a world that is full of sorrow, evil, and pain, of sadness and distress, and in which we are ever conscious of the burden of sin. You sit down beside a brother and begin to feel his spiritual pulse; before long, as you touch on the sins of the world, you will find that his pulse begins to throb and quiver, and you are conscious that there is a heavy burden pressing upon him—that life is full of sorrow and trial to him. You know the old proverb, that "there is a skeleton in every cupboard." But it is more than a skeleton; it is a full-bodied reality. When we ask ourselves whether the Lord Jesus Christ can enable his disciples in such a world as this to exhibit love, joy, peace, and all the other graces that come from God the Holy Ghost, we are led to realise this, that there must be the ability, or He would never have demanded it. But whence the ability?

We turn to the Master Himself. We look at Him, and we find that He was essentially "a Man of Sorrows and acquainted with grief." His life was a life of burdens more heavy than any other man has had to bear, and that not because of his poverty, or because He had nowhere to lay his head, or because He was left dependent on the charities of others. The very fact that we lay such a stress on his poverty shows how degraded our idea of manhood is. We have never learned that true manhood is independent of such accidental circumstances as wealth and worldly luxury. Christ was a man of sorrows because of other men's sufferings and of the sorrow all around Him. Jesus was never spoken of as a happy man. And I am not sure that the child of God will wish to be happy, if he is a wise man. There is something better than happiness. Christ knew nothing of what we call "pleasure." He knew not earthly happiness. Yet He could pray for his disciples, when He was about to die for the sins of the world, that his joy might remain in them, and that their joy might be full. He did say that He wished his people to have peace—perfect peace—"My peace I give unto you." He wished his people to have love—"Continue ye in my love." There were in the Lord Jesus all these fruits of the Spirit, and He was able to pass through the world constantly blessed and joyful.

Has it ever struck you that the Lord Jesus in the very darkest moment of his life was able to "rejoice in spirit"? And again, when He prays to the Father before his last agony and death, He asks "that they might have my joy fulfilled in themselves." What means all this? It means that God's Son had seen what life really is. To Christ the life of man upon the earth was a life of absolute self-sacrifice, of love, of giving up all for the sake of others. We read in Hebrews xii. 2 that "for the joy that was set before Him, He endured the cross, despising the shame." In Luke xv. we are told that when a single lost soul is found, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God. That is Christ's joy—the joy of the shepherd who has brought back the sheep. The life of the real child of God is to have God within, and to be continually giving out God. God is full of that which gives out. He cannot restrain his delight in giving. Brethren and sisters, we have too long lived a self-contained, self-seeking, self-hoping, self-centred life: therefore we have not had true happiness. What is it that, to the children of God, too often constitutes their ideas of the highest bliss? It is that we should have rest and calm and quiet. Or, perhaps, we desire that certain circumstances shall come to us—it may be wealth, or position, or privilege, or the love of others—something from the outside, that, coming towards us, brings with it a kind of pleasure to our souls. But that is not the highest kind of life. It is to be giving out from within, not to be drawing in from without. For God never draws in; He ever gives out. God is the only truly blessed One in existence, and if we would be blessed we must be like Him.

Now, if we look at the Lord Jesus Christ, we see that He was not a man we are to pity and to constantly mourn over. We are accustomed to dole out our sympathy to Him as One who was full of sadness and sorrow, surrounded with sickness and sins. Yes, give Him that sympathy, if you like, but rise higher in your thoughts of Christ. "Thou lovest righteousness and hatest iniquity; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed thee with gladness." My Saviour was a glad Man. He was full of gladness and joy. Why? Because He was like God—He loved righteousness. He loved to think that any man who was sunk in sin might be brought to be like God. He gave Himself for that blessed end—a sweet-smelling sacrifice unto God for our sins.

Mr. Peploe, in further expanding this thought, said that, as God the Holy Ghost had fully taken possession of Christ, producing the gladness of heart which He had, so it must be with us. We are one in spirit, whatever may be our external differences: let us be one in the aim of our lives. Let us covet the unspeakable privilege of winning souls to Christ. When once we get into this atmosphere of life, when once the Holy Ghost has taken full possession of us for God, there must then be joy and peace. There is no longer any ruffle; all is uninterrupted calm, because we find that our highest aspirations are fulfilled. We see sinners saved and exalted to God in heaven, and we have the blessed privilege of looking forward to meeting them in the world to come. Day by day, for the last week, I have been visiting the death-bed of a dear young girl who has just passed away to glory. As I left the door of my house to-day a letter came from the father, full of sorrow and trial, saying that his dear child closed her eyes this morning at three o'clock, and passed to heaven. One letter, such as that, stating God had used you to bring a precious soul to glory, is worth more than all this world can give. I beseech you let your whole soul be given to God that He may fill you with his Spirit; then the fruit of the Spirit shall be love, joy, peace, and everlasting blessedness when Jesus comes to make up his jewels.

Remarks by Mr. MOODY.

If a man has had an estate left him, the first thing to do is to take possession of it. We have not got to make peace; we cannot make it, any more than we can give ourselves life or light. But Christ has left us this word: "My peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth give I unto you. My peace I leave with you." There are a good many of God's dear children who never get peace because they do not make this promise real. It is just as real as any estate that was ever left to any man in England. It is more real. If there is a child of God here who has not got peace, there is no one to blame but yourself. It is because you do not take possession of what the Lord has left for you. Perhaps you never thought you were remembered in his will. When He expired on the cross, He gave his body to Joseph of Arimathea; He gave his mother to John, the son of Zebedee; He commended his spirit to his Father; but his peace He left to his disciples. Let us take possession of it this morning. Let us pray God that we may get into perfect peace. It is the privilege of every child of God to have perfect peace, to walk in an unclouded sun. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee." I never knew a man or woman to have peace whose mind was stayed on themselves. When our thoughts are lifted up above ourselves and fixed on God, then there will be perfect peace and rest.

Some one has said, you can sum up all the fruits of the Spirit in one word—Love. If we are full of love we will have all the fruits of the Spirit. Joy is only love exulting; peace is love in repose; long-suffering is love enduring; goodness is love in action; gentleness is love at home; faith is love on the battle-field; meekness is love suffering; and temperance is love in action. So let us pray that God may fill us with love; then we shall have joy and peace, and all the other graces of the Spirit in their order.

Some of us know what it is to have the joy of salvation. We have been born of God, and we know what great joy there comes from a sense of sins forgiven. But we do not want to stop there. There is a joy beyond that—the joy of leading others to Christ. Next to the joy of our own salvation is the joy of seeing others saved. I never knew a man or woman engaged in leading souls out of darkness into light but their joy was greater than the joy of those whom they were the means of saving. "He that watereth others shall himself be watered." "The liberal soul shall be made fat."

There is another joy. John, in his old age, said he had no greater joy than to see his children walking in the truth. It is a great joy to see those whom you have been instrumental in leading to Christ growing in all the graces of the Spirit. There is a still deeper joy—the joy of making Christ glad, of refreshing his heart. May God help us to-day to cultivate all the fruits of the Spirit.

Address by Canon WILBERFORCE.

Mr. Moody has struck the very thought that was in my mind, as to the fruits of the Spirit. We are not here simply to obtain enjoyment for ourselves. What we need to see in London, and up and down the Christian Church, is Love in action. When Mr. Moody spoke just now about the joy of being the means in the Lord's hands of bringing some one else to Christ, I thought of a letter I received two or three days ago from a young Christian. She had been full of introspection, looking within to see if the foundation of her faith were quite sure, if she had got right in herself. She has gone to Ireland, and has been used of God for the first time in winning a soul to Himself. She sat down and wrote me a letter that was so full of joy, I wonder it did not burst the envelope. She said, "It is all so true to me now; it is so much more real than ever it was before, when I was looking so much to my own salvation, and seeking satisfaction for my own spiritual life. Now I know that the blessed Lord dwelleth in me, for He has overflowed the boundary of my life, and used me to bring one soul out of darkness into light. I am so full of joy that I can hardly bear it."

That is what ought, in my humble opinion, to be the result of all these splendid meetings in this tabernacle. They should have the effect of sending forth among the spiritually suffering ones of this great metropolis, missionaries so full of the Spirit of God, that on all sides others will be brought to the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. Did you ever think what a tremendous mission the Lord laid upon us? Just let the words be turned over in your mind. Remember, He was not speaking to the clerical profession when He spoke these words: "As my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." He was speaking to the millions of Christendom. What did He mean? When He was on earth in the flesh, He was to the Father—I say it with reverence—brain, and hand, and voice, and arm, and mouth, and expression. He said: "I am God's arms embracing the world; I am God's heart, loving you. He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." That is why Christ is so intensely attractive, when preached fully and faithfully; not as some beautiful echo of the past or some prominent name in history, but as the living, loving Lord Jesus, caring for the souls of men. When He is preached like that, it is like pouring water upon some parched field, like the rising of the sun after long watching through the dark and cloudy night. He meets men exactly where their instincts cry out for Him, and He fills them with Himself. To ask a man to accept the living, loving, keeping Jesus is like asking a poor wandering soul to come home. It is not laying a quantity of new burdens upon him; it is asking him to come home to God, and that is giving the full, true meaning to the beautiful word "home."

All that Christ was, on earth, to God; He was his voice, his arm. And so perfect was his confidence in those who should learn to love Him, who should be drawn to Him by the attractiveness of his character, that He withdrew Himself, as He was manifested in the flesh. He said: "It is expedient for you that I, Jesus of Nazareth, should go away." He went back into the realm of spirits, and if you could have asked Him how the world could afford to do without Him, what would have been his answer? "As my Father hath sent Me, even so have I sent thee. I have perfect confidence in thee. If I want a mouth to speak for Me in London, I know I can find it. If I want an army to be raised for Me to go anywhere in the world, I know I can find it. Those who name My name: those who have accepted from Me their position in God; those who know the meaning of being saved—I have sent them as God sent Me." Have we ever realised the tremendous import of that responsibility? Oh, may God forgive us! Have we been his arm, his heart, his voice? Have we witnessed for Him before the world? Have we been true to Him who has put such a trust upon us? Have we gone out into the world to speak, and act, and think, and live, and work for Him?

This is what is called "a believers' meeting." There is great responsibility involved in such an expression as that. Those who have listened to what has already been said have felt that it is good to be here. We have here manifested the unity of the Spirit. We are here gathered as members of the true, holy, catholic Church. We are bound together in Christ. No man can be nearer to God than being in Christ. We may differ from each other according to our external methods, and we may each hold strongly to our own opinion with regard to the best methods of worship, and so on. But when we come and really look into our own hearts, we know that there is a unity underlying all these things.

We are here as believers in the Lord. What is a believer? He is a man who has done exactly what Mr. Moody said—taken possession of his inheritance. Is it enough to be redeemed? For whom did Jesus stretch his arms on Calvary? For a select few? The redeemed are all men who have ever trod this earth; the saved are those who have entered into the knowledge of it, those who have accepted salvation, possessed their glorious inheritance, signed their names to the title-deeds, and handed over their lives to Him who has left them the fortune. They know that they are not perfect; they feel the old Adam nature within them; they feel the uprisings of indwelling sin, but they look up to God, and they say: "I am saved in Him; my salvation is now being completed by the indwelling of his blessed Spirit. Thank God, I am a saved man."

Or, to put it in another way: Somebody lately gave me a definition of a believer, and it has been ringing in my heart ever since. I do not know who said it; I know I could never have invented it myself. A believer is "one who is in Christ before God." You cannot touch that, bless the Lord! There is my salvation. The devil may come to me and say, "You are a sinner." "I know it; but I am complete in Him. I am 'in Christ before God.'" But that is only one half of the truth, though I fear there are thousands of believers who are resting there and becoming miserable, sterile Christians. The believer is also one who is "for Christ before the world." That is the meaning of our gathering here. We are like Peter on the Mount of Transfiguration, receiving such power and strength to our spiritual life by personal contact with Him who is really here this morning, that we may go down from the mountain and back again into the world, where there are lepers to be cleansed, demoniacs to be exorcised, Pharisees to be argued with, and Sadducees, if possible, to be confuted, and work to be done for the Master and for humanity, until He comes again and calls us to Himself.

I would not say a word that might cause needless unhappiness to anyone, but there is always a peril after meetings like these, lest Christians should be left in that first position—in Christ before God—without having realised that if they would be true and real believers, this life must be lived out and witnessed before men and angels. They must be for Christ before men, every day and every hour of their lives.

Let me refer for a moment or two to a single text of Scripture I like to nail a subject like this home with a text. I want to know whether a sentimental acquiescence in a glorious truth is enough. After Christ has been preached to you, you have stood up, perhaps, to be prayed for; you have gone away thinking you are a converted man, and that it is all right. I say that every form of sentimental acquiescence, if it is to be real and true in the sight of God, must be incorporated into the verities of your daily existence. A question was once asked of one who loved Jesus, and loved Him quite as much as you do, though it was not in the same dispensation. One day a servant-maid asked him this question, "Art not thou also one of this Man's disciples?" What was his answer? Did he turn round and say: "Why, it was only a few days ago that I declared before everybody that He was the Christ, the Son of God. Only a few hours ago I said to Him that though I should have to die with Him, I would not deny Him. Of course I am one of his disciples." Nay; he turned round, like a craven coward soul, and said, "I am not!" It makes one blush for humanity. There was not a single fault you could find with the orthodoxy of his confession. He would have passed any examination as to the Godhead of Christ. He even received commendation from head-quarters when he said, "Thou art Christ, the Son of the living God." There was the most perfect orthodoxy of view. Yet, when he was confronted with the question, there came miserable failure in practice, there came the craven, cowardly lie, "I am not!" How wide the gulf may be between the word and the power! How very wide the gulf may be between the orthodoxy and the action! How tremendous may be the hiatus between a sentimental apprehension of the fruits of the Spirit, and their practical daily exemplification!

I do not want to discourage any man, but I give you this single text to take and to live out before Christ and before the world. There is not one of us here who will not have to face this question in some shape or other before this week is out—in the family, in daily life, perhaps in the public street, in business, in society—"Oh, I thought you were a Christian!" "Art not thou one of this Man's disciples?" What is the answer going to be? Are you going to turn round and say, with the power of the Spirit kindling in your eye, "Yes, thank God, I am, and I thank you for reminding me of it. If there has been any inconsistency in my life, point it out, that I may confess it, and put it away. I am one of his disciples." That is the sort of answer that we must look for after such meetings as these.

Possibly the questioner may be nothing but the power of conscience. A young convert—I do not mean only young in years; many a young convert has grey hairs—one who has entered into a full knowledge of the truth, may meet with the temptation to return to the old environment. He may find himself on the borderland, and the devil will try hard to take him over the line, and get him back again to the region of worldly religiousness or orthodox religiosity. There comes to him the temptation, and conscience whispers: "Art not thou one of this Man's disciples?" Then comes the answer: "Yes; thank God I am. If it is needful that a guard should be put upon my lips, that my anger shall be mortified, that the things that tend to the flesh shall be subdued within me, I thank thee, conscience, for reminding me of it. I am one of this Man's disciples." Or perhaps the spiritual life gets a chill, as you think of the misery, the sorrow and the sin around you; the great aggregate of the wretchedness of London pours in upon your spirit, and you stagger under it. Then the question comes up: "Art not thou one of this Man's disciples?" Who is this Man? The Christ. Who is He? The One who has "all power in heaven." Is that all? "And on earth." The Lord knows what He is about. Think of his wonderful Names—the "Counsellor, the Mighty God." Remember that "the Mighty God" is one of the mystic Names of the Christ. In Him I will rest, whatever may be the sorrow and the misery round me. Why? Because I am one of this Man's disciples. In all times of despondency and darkness, let the answer come clear: "Thank God, I believe not only in the saving power, but in the keeping power of Jesus. I am one of this Man's disciples." Let us not forget his words: "As my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you"—and you, and you, and you. If He sends us, He has got the power to help us, and we must accept the mission as from Him.

Yes, He has not only got the power to save, but to keep. The power may come to us gradually. Do not be in too great a hurry. There are cases where people spring immediately into the full and glorious possession of this power. I have seen many cases in which the Lord has completely and at once changed the whole current of the life. But there are other cases where the Lord has taken a long time in the perfecting of character.

When I was in Rome the other day I went with a friend to one of the studios, to see a man finishing off a beautiful statue that was to be exhibited in the Royal Academy. We thought it perfectly complete, and that it might have gone home in the next ship. But the sculptor got a small chisel not bigger than a lancet, and began to take a little chip off the corner of the lip or the nostril, or some other part of the figure. He said there was about a month's work on it yet. I could not see any flaw in it, yet it needed the finishing touches of the artist's hand in order that it might be turned out according to his idea of perfection. God is shaping our characters, not according to our ideas, but according to his own, and if He takes a great deal of time about it we must let Him have his way. He is fitting us not for any earthly exhibition, but to take our place among the angels and archangels and the great company of heaven. One of the most glorious truths is, that day by day, and hour by hour, though we may not be conscious of it, He is pouring into us, by his blessed Holy Ghost, what we may call "the ascending principle of life." You cannot raise that which is sunken except by an ascending principle.

A friend of mine was at Malta, holding a Mission there, and speaking to the sailors. Right in front of the harbour a big ship lay at the bottom of the water. There it was, made for something better than to be down in that mud; its true element was above. But how was it to be raised? It had not got one grain of the ascending principle in itself. It was in the way, and it must be got out of the way. Every backsliding Christian is in the way, and he must be got out of the way, so as to allow others to get into the harbour. My friend said that what they did with the ship was this: they brought a kind of atmospheric pump, and pumped into it the air or atmosphere from above. By-and-by there was a little movement, then a little more and a little more, until at last it threw off the superincumbent element and rose to the surface. So "the ascending principle" we know is not in us, but in God. As we leave this meeting this morning, let us ask Him to fill us with his Holy Spirit, so that like the sunken vessel we may be raised into our proper element, and be fitted for carrying a thousand cargoes before we are laid aside for ever. May God send us out with these texts ringing in our hearts: "Art not thou one of this Man's disciples?" "As my Father hath sent Me, even so send I you."

At the close of the eloquent Canon's address, which we have somewhat condensed in its latter portions, Mr. Moody said there was a danger of hearing so much that one good thought would crowd another out. Let us ask that God will help us to retain and appropriate what we have heard these three days. Let us bow our heads in prayer. Prayer having been made, another hymn, which is also a prayer, was sung:—

"More holiness give me,
More strivings within,
More patience in suffering,
More sorrow for sin!"

Then a minister on the platform pronounced the benediction, and the Conference proper broke up. Those who were privileged to attend its sittings will agree, we think, that it was a time of much soul-refreshing for all who in these past months have been in the thick of the Gospel campaign.

STRANGERS' REST, CARDIFF.—The new hall in connection with this building was opened last week by John Cory, Esq. This Rest has had a remarkably successful career. Started about two and a half years ago in one small room, it soon became so popular that six months after the first opening the room had to be enlarged. From this the institution increased, until still further accommodation was needed. The result has been the erection of a hall, which is in the rear of the other building, and is for the present set apart for public and divine work on the Sunday. It will hold about 250 people, and has flags of different nationalities to mark the cosmopolitan interests it represents. The Hon. Superintendent is Miss Tilly, who is assisted by a staff of ladies. The number of visits paid to the Rest during the first year are estimated at 30,000 of English speaking people and about 7000 of Scandinavians. Parcels of books and papers to send on board the vessels are much needed.

BORDERING ON MOROCCO.

BLESSED be God, light is being cast on the evil deeds perpetrated in these dark Mussulman countries, Morocco and Tripoli. The Moniteur, of Algiers, a few days back, stated something to this effect: "A Mons. Drummond Hay, walking in his garden at Tangiers, observed a couple of men, laden with chains, being led by some Moroccan soldiers. On inquiring the nature of their crime, he was told they were smugglers, and they were taking them to a Jewish butcher to have them executed. The butcher bungled so much in hacking off the head of the elder culprit that the other entreated that he would use a sharper knife for him, which he did accordingly, and his head, too, rolled on the ground." Is an English gentleman to stand by and stifle all feelings of humanity in regarding these and many other barbarities? Happily the French Consul has other views, and does not fail to cry aloud against them, not being restrained by ill-judged treaties.

The barbarities of Tripoli are, perhaps, even worse. A young man who kept a bookseller's shop here in Algiers, Abraham Saradji, went to prosecute his affairs at Tripoli, and in a café spoke to some young men there of the enlightenment and humanity of European nations. One of the young men made his way to his friends, and repeated what he heard, and such sentiments being considered dangerous, he was denounced to the authorities and cast into prison without trial, into a dismal, dark place, where only the worst criminals are kept, and, uncared for, is pining away. Here, too, an English gentleman's voice is powerless; but the cry of agony under the sufferings inflicted by Mussulman administrators is reaching to Heaven, and will be heard.

In countries like these, English Christians are seeking to spread the light of the precious Gospel; and the Committee of the British and Foreign Bible Society are acting with an enlightened acquaintance with the signs of the times, and have just appointed Mr. Wm. Mackintosh, formerly missionary at Damascus, their agent for Morocco. Accompanied by Mrs. Mackintosh, they have been exploring the Riff country on the West (see Mrs. Mackintosh's interesting account of their visit to Tetuan in the British and Foreign Bible Society's Monthly Reporter for May).

We have thought that we might contribute something to cast light on the way of approaching these tribes from the East, by travelling to places on the borders of Morocco, on the extreme west of the French frontier. We have been providentially guided in obtaining valuable information, and are rejoiced to find a fraction of the Riff tribes of the Beni Snassen, in French territory, on a spur of the Ain Tafouralt mountains. These, the Beni Mengouch, speak both Riffian and Arabic, are under the rule of their Kard Si Mimoum, who lives at Azararen, and as they are subject to the jurisdiction of the military commandant of Lalla Maghnia, the country is quite safe, and can be penetrated without any risk. Happily I found at Nemours a Jew, who had lived fourteen years amongst the Riffs, and was well acquainted with their language, the Zenaitia, but as he did not know French, I obtained the assistance of another intelligent Jew who could communicate with him in Arabic, and thus obtained a short vocabulary of words in Zenaitia, which I have compared with the Shelluh and the Zouaoua of the Jur-Jura. I also had John iii. 14—21 translated into the Zenaitia, and on reading it to Fatema, the hard-working maid at the hotel, found she could understand it.

Though the Riffs and the Shelluhs are not Kabyles, according to the conventional use of the term, all these tribes have their Kebail, or confederation, and may correctly be called Kabyles. It would occupy too much of your space to go into all the details of the borders and coasts of the Riff country; but I hope to give them in the next number of Africa, which will appear on August 1 (Partridge & Co. 6d.).

We set out by rail for Oran, my wife delighted at the prospect of wide distribution along the way, and in towns and villages—where such a thing is scarcely known, and excites much curiosity—well supplied with French Gospel tracts, Arabic, Spanish, and Hebrew Scripture portions, for these various nationalities.

Leaving Oran we started by diligence, along a great salt lake, for Ain-Témouchent, 52 miles, a French village, with a population of 1500; had good access to the Jews. The railway from Oran to this place is expected to be finished in four months. We had a view of the village of the Three Marabouts, which is prettily perched on a hill. This is a Protestant village of emigrants from Dormeilleuse in Dauphigny. Hence by diligence to Tlemcen.

This most extraordinary Moorish town of 14,500 inhabitants was once the capital of the Berber Kingdom of the Abd-el-Ouad, which embraced the present provinces of Oran and Algiers. Tlemcen occupies a magnificent site, and with its ruins, its white minarets, its towers and battlements, offers a spectacle of a panorama the most remarkable. It is placed more than 2000 feet above the sea-level. The Kissaria, now a cavalry barrack, was the quarter of the Christian merchants of the Middle Ages. There were 5000 Christians here, governed by their own representatives.

There is now a nice little Protestant congregation and some lively Christians. Here I renewed my acquaintance with M. Bureau, lately appointed missionary to the Kabyle and Berber Mission. He makes excursions to the villages around, but is giving his attention chiefly to the Arabs, and is diligently learning Arabic. He is a most exemplary, earnest, and devoted young missionary—one of the fruits of the McAll Mission.

We visited the village of Bon-Medine, with its Medressa, or Arab College; there is a lovely view from it of the surrounding country. This was the seat of religion and science, when Tlemcen was inhabited by warriors and statesmen. We penetrated many quarters in Tlemcen, under the guidance of a friendly Jew, amongst Moors and Jews, and had groups of the latter, with whom we reasoned out of the Old Testament. A day or two after we left, a water-spout broke upon the town, causing much damage, but at Bon-Medine it destroyed eight houses, and carried away to a distance of 1200 feet an Arab woman and her girl, who were drowned.

Another diligence journey to Lalla Maghnia, a military station, with a population of eighty. It is situated at the foot of a range of hills, in view of the mountains of the Riffs of the Beni Snassen. This village is only about eight miles from the Moroccan frontier. There is a large market within a railed enclosure, held on Saturday and Sunday, to which a great many Riffs bring their cattle and their corn. About four hours' mule journey from here Oudjda is reached, in Morocco, a most characteristic Moorish town, where one seems to be transported into the veritable Barbary, with all its strangeness, and the habits of that extraordinary country, forming a perfect contrast, at so short a distance from the more civilised Lalla Maghnia; it is like entering a new world. Here is held one of the largest markets for the two countries, on Sunday. There are shops, no auberges, or European houses. The interior of the town, which is more populous than Tlemcen, is dirty in the extreme. The only accommodation to be had is in the house of the Kaid, who will entertain travellers for three or four days.

On our way by diligence to Nemours, we mounted and then descended Bab Taza, 3600 feet high, to that most interesting Moorish town, Nedroma, the Kalama of the Romans, surrounded by walls, with a population of 4000, and a French-Arab school, 400 Jews, and 24 French, and two hotels, commanding a view of the sea. As we came upon it, it had the appearance of a miniature Jerusalem surrounded by hills. Its Thursday market is sometimes resorted to by 20,000 Riffs and Arabs. Though its interior is very dirty, it is on the whole healthy. When the Moors were expelled from Spain many took refuge in Nedroma, and some of their descendants still have in their possession the keys of their houses in Grenada and Cordova! The people are very unsophisticated, and here would be an interesting sphere of labour for a married couple. From hence up to Nemours we passed through the lovely valleys of Tazari and Malebar, gorgeously carpeted with flowers of all the colours of the rainbow, by hedges of roses and fields of crinvegetal.

Nemours is the last town on the coast of the Mediterranean, with 2000 inhabitants, a few Protestants, no temple, and 500 Jews. We had a good distribution to soldiers, Spaniards, Jews, and Arabs, and good access to sailors and fishermen in gronps on the beach, and were able to undo some of the mischief of the propaganda of a Spanish, deportés a disciple of Bradlaugh. They clamoured for gospels, and were glad to listen to my wife's earnest appeals. The poor Riffs having had such bad harvests for three successive years, are obliged to come here to buy flour, for which they give 19 francs the quintal—200 lbs.—and carry it back to their mountains on donkeys and camels.

We took our passage from Nemours for Oran with 534 Riffs, who had come on board at Mellia, each having paid 10 francs, to work as labourers for the harvest in the province of Oran, getting 3 francs 5 cents. a day. The Ruffians—who have given by their noted turbulence of character another word to the English language—were as quiet as lambs on the deck, wearing their bournousés, and characterised by having a long curl on the right side of the head; immediately they brought forth out of their goat-skin bags their ready-cooked dry couscons. Putting it into a large piece of leather, they poured water on it, kneeded it, and put in huge mouthfuls, some eating a coarse meal cake. For drinking they had the Mousse's pailful of water, and passed it round. An intelligent chief sat near us, and on asking him if he believed that Sidna Assa was coming soon to judge the world, he said: "Yes; we expect him at every sunset."

At Oran there is a small congregation in the Protestant Temple; two faithful pastors who supply various annexes at considerable distance. There is a colporteur of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and a Spanish evangelist. I attended a service with about twenty Spaniards. Pastor Krüger cherishes the sweet memory of Mr. Ogle, who lived in and near Oran, and devoted himself to evangelisation amongst the Spaniards from 1858 to 1865; but his attempts to combine agricultural operations for their benefit was not a success. He was washed overboard with forty others, out of a company of three hundred, wrecked on the island of Plane, twenty miles west of Oran (which we passed), on a very rough passage from Marseilles; he was last seen with Bible in hand, calm in the confusion, encouraging his fellow-passengers. Pastor Krüger says: "He was a citizen of heaven whilst walking on earth" (see his Life by Dr. Wylie: Longmans).

On our railway journey back to Algiers had nice opportunities with Spaniards, Arabs, and Kabyles, and reading Spanish Testament and Kabyle translations to willing listeners. On this journey we have been very much struck with the readiness of the Jews to listen to the Gospel. What fields of labour! What need of labourers! How short the opportunity! We ask for much prayer for these regions, and for ourselves.—Yours affectionately, L'Agha, Algiers. Geo. Pearse.

HENRY HOLLOWAY.—We learn with the greatest regret that this once useful evangelist is now afflicted with general paralysis of the brain, and has lost the use of both legs. The doctors give no hope of his recovery. His wife asks the prayers of Christian friends for him, and for herself and family. Her address is 24, Byron-street, Derby.

WALSALL Y.M.C.A.—Mr. Henry Thorne has again visited the Association here, delivering two powerful addresses on Sunday, June 15, when the lecture hall was well filled; the evening meeting was crowded, and much blessing received, several young men remaining to the after-meeting to converse with Mr. Thorne. A Bible-reading was given on Monday evening, when large numbers assembled. All regret that this dear servant of God could not remain longer in the town.

The Ratcliff "Bridge of Hope."

PERHAPS in very many ways the past winter has been the most difficult we have hitherto passed through. We have often been "troubled on every side, yet not distressed, perplexed, but not in despair." We have never received so many into the house. The Refuge is always more full than it should be, for health's sake, and nearly always we have girls seated in the waiting-room, sometimes for days, ready for admittance when a vacancy occurs. It goes to my heart to send them away; it is so difficult to find another shelter. For though so great an impetus has been given to rescue work, because within the last few years so many educated women have given themselves to it, yet the number of poor wanderers is so large that all the Refuges are usually full.

But although there have been so many difficulties to contend with, we have had a very blessed winter. There has been a more earnest spirit among the girls, and I believe several have sought and found the Lord. We feel we have been sustained in prayer. Some friends have joined our Prayer Union, and thus learn from time to time our special needs; we realise that we have been strengthened in the thick of the fight by many who are praying for us from sick beds.

If it were desirable I could relate many thrilling incidents, but nearly always such histories are best kept quiet. All classes among these "unfortunates" come to us. Often a deep tragedy underlies their lives. Sometimes a well-dressed, better-educated woman comes and pours out her tale of shame in an agony of grief, and her confession must be held sacred; but more often those who come are very ignorant; their ideas of God and of goodness are crude in the extreme. "I'm sure the Almighty had a hand in bringing me in here," said one poor girl. "I thank the Almighty He's given me a chance, and now I won't do bad no more."

We are longing for the completion of our enlarged premises, not only because we shall be able to receive more girls, but also that we may have a room of our own for the mothers' meeting, girls' classes, &c. The household arrangements are carried on as economically as possible, in order that there may be a little to spare for the very poor around us. We have been able to relieve many by gifts of food, and coal, and clothes.

We sometimes thought in the winter, when the summer comes the number of applicants will be fewer, and their wants in a measure decrease. Such, however, this year has not been the case, and the call upon us, on all hands, is continual; we are therefore obliged to make known that our needs are very great.

It is of the Lord's goodness, that with so much sin and sorrow at our doors we are not utterly cast down. Although sometimes it is heart-breaking, there are often very bright rifts in the clouds, and we know and are sure over all the Lord reigneth. MARY H. STEER.

RELIGION, in its fundamental principle, is fellowship and communion between the infinite and the finite, between the Eternal Spirit and the creatures He has made; therefore, in its very nature it is a mystery.—Rev. J. Iverach.

SECOND ADVENT PRAYER UNION.—The first quarterly meeting for the South London district of the Second Advent Prayer Union was held in the Conference Hall, Clapham-road, S.W., on the 16th inst. In the afternoon an address was given by the Rev. W. Fuller Gooch, of Lower Norwood, who spoke of the spirit, object, and methods of the Union in connection with which they were assembled. In the evening an address was delivered by the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, of the China Inland Mission, also commending the aims of the Union to Christian regard. A spirit of earnest prayer prevailed in the meetings, which, though not large, were yet marked by manifest tokens of the Master's presence and power.

Temperance Jottings.

Mr. Francis Murphy has been labouring about two weeks in Chicago, with signal success. He is leading many, not only out of intemperance, but out of degradation and sin, to the feet of the Lord Jesus Christ. He has filled some of the largest halls in the city, and is now labouring in Plymouth Church (Dr. Scudder's), on the South Side, holding meetings every night except Saturday. —Chicago Advance.

Mr. R. T. Booth.—It has been resolved to retain the services of Mr. Booth for Temperance work in the Australian colonies. "A sufficient sum has been subscribed," says The Southern Cross, "to warrant Mr. Booth in sending for his wife and family from America. We are founding a new nation, and now is the time to grapple earnestly and effectively with the curse of strong drink. At present so-called vested interests are sufficiently powerful; but what would they not be in a hundred years' time, if only allowed to develop unchecked? A vigorous crusade now, and the battle will be won all along the line. We trust that Mr. Booth will husband his strength, and that for many years he will be spared to head the crusade against the liquor traffic."

Intemperance in Manchester.—The new Dean of Manchester (Dr. Oakley) has not been long in giving the "Manchester men" a bit of his mind on the Temperance question. Preaching in the Cathedral recently, he said: "As a stranger among them, he had been very much shocked at the wide-spread tokens of drunkenness which one encountered on every hand, especially on Saturday afternoons and evenings, and on Sunday evenings, in Manchester and in the ring of minor cities which surround it. He had lived for fifteen years in one of the poorest parts of the East-end of London, and never saw the same. He had spent the last two years in a northern city, in a county which had a bad name for some vices, but had never seen the same; he had spent a Sunday in another populous northern town, and had not seen the same. It seemed to him that they need to enter into a solemn league and covenant to resist and put down this terrible mischief amongst them."—C. E. Temperance Chronicle.

Evangelistic Notes.

Messing, Essex.—The week's services conducted by Mr. J. Harris here have been much blessed of God. Large numbers have professed conversion; on the Sunday the barn was more than full, many being compelled to stand outside.

Ipswich.—Open-air services have been held at the Barrack corner and in other parts of the town, when earnest Gospel addresses were given by Mr. Campion, town missionary, and Mr. J. Smith. Mr. J. Smith played a portable organ, and Mr. Campion on the clarionet, which had the effect of attracting large numbers to hear the word of God.

Gospel Hall, Sydenham.—Mr. Opie Rodway's second visit to this place on the 8th and 9th instant was much blessed to the ingathering of souls and the quickening of believers. Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, Mon., preached from the 14th to the 17th, when much power was manifested; while the visit of Rev. J. D. Rodway, late of Ramsgate, who spoke on May 25, will long be remembered.

March.—A series of services for railwaymen at this place have met with great success. On two evenings tea was provided which accommodated 340 men and their wives. On the next night a meeting was held in St. John's Hall, in which several friends took part, and an earnest Gospel address was given by Mr. J. Creer. All listened with marked attention, and several testified to the good they had received.

Framsden, Suffolk.—A very interesting Mission has been held in this parish and Helmingham by Messrs. Lovell and Taylor of the Evangelisation Society. Mission-room, schoolroom, timber yard and barn in turn became the scene of happy and blessed gatherings, help being given by persons of all ranks and denominations. Gospel dialogues, special requests for prayer, and Bible-readings formed special features of the work. As much prayer was sought in view of the Mission, we now gratefully record our thanks to God for his gracious work, and continue praying for its extension. A. J. B.

Gideon's Cry.

"PITCHERS for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
Not the beauty of the make,
But ah! the readiness to break,
Stamps the vessels of the Lord,
Meet to bear the lighted word.

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
To surprise a sleeping host
Long in sin and darkness lost,
Self's poor earthen pitcher first
Must itself with glory burst.

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
Soldiers marching to the fight
Must conceal themselves from sight;
Trumpet blasts that wake from death
Must be blown by Spirit breath.

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad:
Gideons must Isaiahs be,
Vision first, then victory!
Lips that first confess their shame
Loudest lift the Saviour's Name.

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
Burnt lips, weaned by fire from sin,
Dare not keep the glory in;
Burnt lips, weaned from self by flame,
Yield all glory to the Lamb.

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
In the vision of the Lord
Self and sin are both abhorred;
"Woe is me," saints first must sigl,
Then, "Ho every one!" they cry.

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
Christ to none his work deputes,
Hires not out God's attributes;
Christ must live, no longer I;
He must do, and I must die.

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
All the fitness we require
Is Isaiah's altar-fire;
Trumpet blast and altar-flame,
These the weapons of the Lamb!

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
Great High Priest, behold our need,
And with more than seraph speed,
Piercèd Hand, oh, touch my soul
With Thine altar's living coal!

"Pitchers for the lamps of God!"
Hark, the cry goes forth abroad;
Christ, our flaming Altar's here!
Soilèd souls and lips draw near!
Crown each penitential brow,
Fire of God, come now, come now!

CHARLES A. FOX.

DEACON ABRAHAM.—For eighteen months it had been his daily prayer that the Lord would open the way for his revisiting England, and now, following Divine guidance, as he believes, he has reached our shores. His desire is to obtain the means of purchasing land, through the cultivation of which by the lads of the Orphan Home the bulk of the expense of maintenance may be met, and the work rendered nearly self-supporting. He is accompanied by his eldest son, Simon, a promising young man, who seeks an English training for future service in his native land. The Deacon proposes to lecture and to preach the Gospel when invited to do so. He is an interesting and effective speaker. In a "letter of commendation," written in Syriac, and signed by 130 persons, including several native ministers, pastors, teachers, heads of villages, emphatic testimony is borne to the Christian character and useful service of our friend. His address in London is 56, Gloucester-street, Queen-square, W.C.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

Where are you Going?—3.

By LADY HOPE.

THE result of Burnett's mental computation is to this effect:—

"There must be some thousands present!" This is what he reckons. But how many thousands he cannot judge. "It is a curious sight, at any rate!" This he acknowledges, but he is not talking now, only thinking about it all.

How he gets time for his thoughts I cannot tell, for each phase of the proceedings alternates so rapidly with the last, that it must be difficult enough to pursue his meditations.

They are ended now, however, for there is a visible movement in the meeting, and every eye is fixed upon the platform. These hymns were only preliminaries. The meeting is going to begin.

Mr. Sankey takes his seat at the organ, and gives out an old, old hymn, that he remembers hearing when he was a child, in the village church near his home:—

"There is a fountain filled with blood,
Drawn from Immanuel's veins;
And sinners plunged beneath that flood
Lose all their guilty stains."

The associations brought before his recollection suddenly by these words are tiresome ones. He tries to deafen his ears to them. But on and on comes line after line in cruel, relentless, memory-awaking power. This he does not enjoy; but "it will soon be over." The next part of the meeting he likes better. It is a solo, sung by Mr. Sankey; and one that is now becoming well known amongst us all.

It is to be found in "The Christian Choir," and is entitled in the index, "Abundantly able to save," the words of the first verse being these:—

"Whoever receiveth the Crucified One,
Whoever believeth on God's only Son,
A free and a perfect salvation shall have,
For He is abundantly able to save.

Chorus.

My brother, the Master is calling for thee:
His grace and his mercy are wondrously free;
His blood as a ransom for sinners He gave,
And He is abundantly able to save."

There is a calm and quiet hush over the vast crowds now; and he himself quite strains forward with the effort to listen.

"So this is the renowned Sankey!" But he finds no difficulty in hearing. Every word, every note, is clear and distinct—harmonious as bells across the water.

Poor Burnett! in spite of all his antipathies, he is really becoming fascinated, and continues listening eagerly. Once or twice he draws his hand across his eyes. When it is over he gives a sigh of relief. He has "not quite broken down! that is a good thing;" but very nearly, if the truth were told.

"Open all the doors, and let the people get seats while we sing the 140th Hymn. All sing! I like to hear you all sing that hymn."

Somebody is speaking. "Who is it?"

This question he whispers to the man next him.

"Mr. Moody," the man answers.

And intently, by some strange spell, the man's attention seems to be concentrated, while he eagerly gazes at the platform.

Let us watch the wondering face of our friend! He surely listens with an interest you would have scarcely expected to the hymns that are sung, the prayers that are offered by two strangers on the platform; to a second solo from the singer who so touched him a few minutes before; and finally to a torrent of appeal from the lips of the man whom not half an hour ago he had criticised so contemptuously. Scripture has been read, and more than one passage commented upon in so graphic and striking a manner, that he cannot help listening, as he never had listened before—no! not even to the drama that had held its place in the most exciting play: and he was a man that loved the theatre. Self, surroundings, everything, is forgotten now, as the moments fly past. His common sense, his feelings, his past associations, reason—everything he possesses now, or ever has possessed, are being reached and appealed to. The whole thing is unanswerable.

"All who wish to become Christians, meet me in the inquiry-room," the speaker says, hurriedly closing his address without the ordinary sequels of prayer or singing.

"Meet him in the inquiry-room!" says our friend. "Certainly not! I would go a long way before I would meet him. What! talk to him, does he mean? Why! the man has shown me up to be the greatest sinner living. Does he expect me to go and fraternise with him directly after? I shall make for the door. All right! it is open."

And he rises to get his hat, looking like a man that awakes out of a dream. But he has overlooked the presence of the stranger who made a move at the beginning of the meeting, that he might sit next to him. At this moment Burnett feels a hand upon his shoulder, and a voice accosts him.

"You are not going to hurry out, are you? Can't you wait a few minutes? It is early yet."

It is the man at his right hand who is speaking to him. Burnett looks round.

"What is the matter?" he asks. "Of course I am going. I only came to see what was going on."

"You are taking my hymn-book with you," the other man answers. "Do accept it, if you like to do so."

"Oh, I say! I beg your pardon. Here it is; much obliged."

"No; I ask you to accept it," says the stranger,

"Oh, accept it!" he says, repeating the words, in an absent frame of mind. "All right," and he puts it in his pocket.

The stranger has a kindly, pleasant look, and as he seems to have his intellects about him, and does not appear to be in a hurry, Burnett relieves his mind of one or two questions that are puzzling him.

"That's Moody, isn't it?" he says, nodding in the direction of the platform, and twirling his hat round on the top of his stick while he speaks. "Well, I want to know," he continues, "does he mean what he says?"

"Mean it? To be sure he does. Just sit down here a minute." They seat themselves, and he finishes his sentence. "Are you referring to any particular part of his address, or do you mean that the whole thing seems unreal?"

"Oh no, I do not mean anything of the kind. It does not seem unreal. He seems very strong upon it all. You think, do you, that this is his belief—his assurance? There are a great many beliefs in the world. I can only hope that his is not the true one!"

"Why do you hope this?" the other asks.

"Because—because—if he is right I am wrong, and there is an end of the matter. I shall go now. Stop a minute; I was going to ask you another question: Does he preach every night?"

"Yes; every night."

"At the same place and hour?"

"Yes, for another week. Shall you look in again?"

"I don't know, I am sure. But I shall say good night now." And once more Burnett makes a move.

"Oh, don't treat the matter lightly," says the stranger. "The subjects spoken of this evening are from the Word of God. Nothing on earth can equal their importance. Do look them up for yourself! Here are some of the passages mentioned that are well worth your consideration"—and he takes out of his pocket a little book which contains ten short pages on the "Way of Salvation," throughout which passages of Scripture are interspersed, containing chapter and verse for reference. "These meetings will soon be over. Do come again to-morrow evening. Will you not seek the Saviour for yourself? will you not come to Him? He knows exactly how to meet the circumstances and difficulties of each soul."

But Burnett interrupts: "You talk to me as if I were a thinking man, as if I liked to argue and discuss these matters. But not at all. I tell you I am utterly indifferent to it all. I only came in for curiosity. You go your way and I shall go mine. I have plenty to think of without bothering my head about all this stuff."

Poor Burnett! He is getting angry now, and pushes his way past the chairs.

"Will you not take Christ's way?" These are the last words he hears, as he leaves his neighbour in the distance, and wends his way towards the open door.

When he finds himself outside again, he lights a cigar and walks slowly along, his meditations, in the meantime, taking somewhat this shape:

"Once more I breathe the air! Good gracious! I almost thought I was before the judgment seat, and every single thing I had ever done—or not done, for I suppose it's all the same—shown up before me. What tortures I have gone through to be sure! And that fellow, Ardent, actually trying to persuade me to go in! It really was too bad! I expect he thought he was laying a fine trap for me! He does not know that I have been there, that is one good thing. If I ever get hold of him again, what a grudge I shall owe him. It is too bad, for I haven't done him any bad turn, that I am aware of. What on earth should make him want to make mincemeat of me, like that?

"And then the other fellow coming up, and giving it me hot and strong! Wasn't it cool? Only I began it—I must own that. I had no business to go in at all. It has made me feel quite uncomfortable. What shall I do? Oh! I'll go round and have a game of billiards. That's the thing!" and he quickens his steps in a direction that is evidently familiar to him.

At length Burnett finds himself beneath a globe lamp, from which a brilliant light shines, revealing the word "Billiards." Here he stops, disappearing within the doorway. At the outer bar he takes a glass of spirits; and then enters the billiard-room, where he has long felt quite at home. To-night, however, he is not like himself. He feels annoyed. Though he is soon immersed in a game, he does not enjoy it properly. "The luck is all against him;" "everything seems to go wrong;" someone speaks sharply; he answers crossly. He calls for another glass of spirits; and still he plays his game excitedly, vehemently: strange to say, he cannot find his equilibrium to-night. Everything speaks to him; everything taunts him; everything tells him the same story. It is the one he has been hearing at the iron hall. The very balls seem to mock him with the stranger's parting words, and to turn them into a downright question:—

"Are you going Christ's way?"

He wishes "to goodness" he had never met Ardent, or heard what he had to say. "Served him right, for having anything to do with such a fellow;" and yet "he wasn't a bad chap once." How tiresome it all is! how provoking! After a time John Burnett becomes tired of his game, and thinks he will go to bed. Sleep will be the best thing for him; but sleep is a wayward friend to-night, and stands aloof just when he is wanted. The very pillow this man rests upon seems to say to him, more loudly than even the billiard balls said it—

"Are you going Christ's way?"

After a time he drops into a doze, and when morning comes he awakes but half refreshed. The same old story of last night's meeting haunts his recollection, and is vividly present to his thoughts. All day he writes and works, and walks and talks; but the phantom still pursues him. What is this that will not let him rest, and casts a shadow upon his path, long, and black, and dark—what is it?

(To be concluded.)

The Men's Meetings.

Many surmises, if not apprehensions, were entertained concerning the success of this project when it was first mooted. Looking at the circumstances all round, and the difficulty of reaching London men, especially on summer week-day evenings, when a hot meeting is not a very restful addition to the past day's work, or preparation for the next, many doubts reigned in the minds of the weak and fearful. But Mr. Moody is not a man to be daunted by difficulties; accordingly the meetings were held. It would have been interesting to read the thoughts of those Fainthearts on the Monday evening when the first of these gatherings took place. A solid mass of 4500 men's faces on such an evening at a religious service is a memorable sight, and many expressions of thankfulness ascended to God. But Mr. Moody was not yet satisfied. A good number of Christians were present, and his heart was bent upon filling the hall with unconverted men. "I want you all to take tickets," said he, "and each man bring another with him, so that we can crowd some of these Christians out!" Accordingly distribution was made throughout the hall. The gatherings increased in numbers, interest, and earnestness every evening, until the desired result of a full hall was secured.

One very great attraction has certainly been the singing, and in none of the Missions has there been such a strong accumulation of talent as during the past week. The ordinary choir, under the conduct of Mr. Carr, of Croydon, the United Male Choir, Mr. Stebbins and Mr. and Mrs. McGranahan, have all been indefatigable in making the Gospel in song charming and effective. The choruses, many sung for the first time, were taken up with the greatest heartiness by the vast body of men, to the delight of Mr. Moody, who took no pains to conceal his admiration. "Why can't you men sing like this in your churches and chapels?" he inquired. "There must be a deal of latent talent amongst you, and enough to make fifty male choirs, I should think, out of this audience. Now you just set about it, and see if you can't enliven some of your ordinary services by singing heartily these songs of Zion."

On another occasion, when the delight depicted in his face surpassed that of any previous evening, he suddenly rose and asked the audience, "How many of you men would like to join that choir?" and immediately some hundreds held up their hands. "Very well, then, you meet Mr. McGranahan at Exeter Hall at four o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and he'll take your names." So the matter was settled on the spot.

The addresses given by Mr. Moody have all been of an evangelistic character, the successive subjects being "The Rich Fool," "Dives and Lazarus," "The Dying Thief," "Decision," and "The Love of God." If possible, the speaker has thrown even more than his usual earnestness into these discourses. On the second evening, after laying special stress upon the terrible clearness of memory in eternity, from the words, "Son, remember," 270 rose for prayer; when subsequently all stood in a body, a considerable number accepted Mr. Moody's further invitation for "Still others to join them." There, before God and their fellows, stood more than three hundred men as the preacher poured out his soul with intense earnestness and emotion to God, that having thus made an open confession of their desire for salvation, they might be brought into peace, and might work for their Master. It was interesting to notice amongst the number not a few of the soldiers, for whom two rows of seats had been reserved in the front evening by evening. Mr. Stebbins sang with great power—and in less than five minutes afterwards the large inquiry-room was packed from end to end, while a goodly number remained for conversation in the body of the hall itself.

"Where is my wandering boy to-night?"

It is very touching to observe numerous little incidents that take place; here, one finds a man leading a blind friend into the inquiry-room; there, a soldier is urging one of his comrades to decide for Christ.

On Friday evening the attention was unbroken as the preacher discoursed on the grandest of all subjects, from John iii. 16, and great appreciation was shown during his account of his remarkable introduction to the late Mr. Henry Moorhouse, who preached from that text in Chicago on seven successive nights. When, later on, Mr. Moody told the familiar incident of a soldier condemned to be shot, who was saved by the English and American Consuls covering him with the ensigns of their nations, as they exclaimed, "Fire if you dare!" the patriotic feelings of the forty soldiers in the front overcame them, and in a moment a loud burst of applause rang throughout the hall. This was soon checked; but it serves to show how entirely the speaker had his audience with him throughout his discourse.

Words cannot express the heartfelt thankfulness of all the workers to God for the rich blessing which has attended these evening meetings for men.

The Lord's Supper Service.

The hallowed season enjoyed at the table of the Lord on Friday afternoon will not soon be forgotten by those who were privileged to attend it. The address of Mr. Moody on the work of the Holy Spirit by which it was preceded, was of extraordinary unction and power, fitly stirring the hearts to deep desire for the fresh anointing which we can but believe many received.

In his invitation to the congregation to remain to the Lord's Supper, Mr. Moody emphasised the fact that only those who had received Christ, and were in communion with the Lord, could rightly observe the ordinance, so that all who remained did so as a confession of faith in the Saviour. The sight of the thousands who gathered round the emblems of redeeming love spread upon the board was deeply touching, as one remembered the divergence of thought on minor matters which was represented; yet all united in obedience to the Lord's command, and in fellowship of soul with Him.

Dr. Pentecost's brief address struck the right chord. He spoke of the Supper as the central point of Christianity, the trysting place between Christ and his people, a testimony to the world as to the death of Christ, and as to the fact of his return to the earth which rejected Him; a monument of his Humanity, Atoning Death, glorious Resurrection, and triumphant session at God's right hand. A solemn, but delightful sense of the Master's presence pervaded the vast assembly. "A blessed service this has been," "A gracious time indeed," were expressions heard on all sides as we left the building.

Would that the one family of God could much more frequently be represented in unity and joyous fellowship in like manner. It would be so if only Bible-teaching on the oneness of believers in Christ more practically prevailed. Dr. Pentecost made a striking and truthful remark when he said we are exhorted in the Word of God to keep the unity of the faith, not to make it. Too often Christian energy is misapplied in efforts to make unity, when the fact is it is already made, and our part is only to recognise and maintain it.

Mr. Moody's last Sunday.

Last Sunday was the closing day of the Mission on the Embankment and in London. Early in the bright morning five or six thousand Christian workers had walked from all parts of the city and suburbs to hear Mr. Moody's last words, specially addressed to them. One young man, indeed, walked from Finchley, over seven miles, but found to his dismay the hall quite full, and the gates securely barred and guarded by stalwart policemen. It was understood that Mr. Moody's subject was to be "Daniel the Prophet," and Mr. Stebbins appropriately sang, at the commencement of the meeting—

"Do you see the Hebrew captive kneeling
At morning, noon, and night to pray?
In his chamber he remembers Zion,
Though in exile far away."

The congregation took up the chorus, and Mr. Moody made a special point of their singing it heartily, especially the line, "For the coming of the King in his glory," which was evidently the ruling thought in his mind. Then prayer was offered by Rev. W. Williams, of Upton Chapel, one of the rising ministers who have begun to make their mark in London. By the way, we cannot be too thankful for young men like him, and Ossian Davies, and a few others, to whom the Lord reveals Himself by the Word of the Lord, when too many older men are like Eli, in whose days the Word of the Lord was precious because so rarely heard, and there was no open vision.

Then we had the hymn which has been seldom sung of late—

"Dare to be a Daniel,
Dare to stand alone;
Dare to have a purpose firm,
Dare to make it known."

There is none of Mr. Moody's addresses better known than that on Daniel, but this morning it was as fresh as ever. The purpose of the preacher was to press upon his brethren the absolute need of uncompromising fidelity to God, encouraged by God's unfailing faithfulness to us.

Beginning with Daniel's refusing to eat of the king's meat, the speaker said everything depended on how a young man starts in life. He is sure to meet with temptation, which will test his character. Many people seem to think that some of the world's maxims are Bible texts: "Do at Rome as Rome does" is not the language of Scripture, but of a compromising Christian. When a young man comes to London, let him remember right is right and wrong is wrong. No man ever yet did wrong but harm followed. Daniel purposed in his heart. A good many purpose in their heads, and nothing comes of it. Daniel's faith in God was well brought out when Arioch came to take his life. "Why is the king so hasty? My God knows the king's dream. Give me time and I will tell it him." No one in Babylon slept sounder than Daniel that night, after, perhaps, the first prayer-meeting that had ever been held in the wicked city, and the faithful God repeated in a vision to Daniel the dream of the tyrant king.

Daniel was not in Babylon when the edict went forth for all people to worship the golden image, but his influence was there. The three youths had backbone; some people have only gristle in their backs. Some compromising Jews perhaps said, "We'll bow down and make believe that we worship the image, but we'll keep our hearts right with God." Do you tell me that any man would have been reached in Babylon if Daniel and his three companions had compromised, instead of being true to God at the risk of their lives?

After dwelling on the death of Belshazzar, Mr. Moody referred to Darius forming a committee of 120 princes, with three presidents, and making Daniel chairman. What a grand and glorious tribute they paid him. "We shall find no occasion against this Daniel except we find it concerning the law of his God." He had not been feathering his nest out of the public money. He had not been plundering the Government. He had to look after these 120 rascals to see that they only got their lawful salaries. When Darius' decree went forth, I can imagine some compromising friend calling on Daniel, and suggesting that he should find some business that would take him out of the city for about thirty days. Or that he should lock his closet door when he prayed, and stop the keyhole that they might not see him kneeling. "If you want to pray, get into bed and pray there." How the old man would have resented all such advice. Instead of locking his door, he prayed with his window open. Thank God for that.

God sent Gabriel three times to tell Daniel that he was a man greatly beloved. Dear friends, we have but a little while. If God should send his angel to tell us that we are greatly beloved will not that well repay all we can ever suffer for his name?

"Oh how will recompense his smile,
The sufferings of this little while."

The eleven o'clock service was more crowded than ever, some hundreds being excluded, for whom three open-air services were held, assisted by the entire choir, who had given up their places for the benefit of some of the outsiders. Mr. Moody gave a very eloquent address, urging implicit obedience to the commands of God, and the leadings of the Spirit in seeking salvation.

It was a pretty sight in the afternoon to glance over the great gathering of women with their variegated bonnets, but the interest and even anxiety depicted on many faces showed how their minds were soaring far above the trifles of earth to that glorious heaven to which the speaker was drawing their attention. He prefaced his address by replying to a question asked him by a reporter, "Are you satisfied with the results of the London meetings?" "No," he replied, "I shall not be satisfied with anything until I see the King in his beauty, and enjoy the pleasures that are at his right-hand for evermore." The key-note of his sermon was, "Set your affections on things above." After picturing the glories of the better land, and the happiness of the redeemed, he applied it in his usual telling style: "Mother, wouldn't you like to go there? Haven't you any loved ones you want to meet in that beautiful land?"

At half-past five a crowd of men began to gather at the several gates, and when they were opened at six o'clock great eagerness was manifested as the ingress was made. The entire absence of ladies afforded room on the platform for a goodly number who could not obtain seats elsewhere, while all the standing room was taken up. The subject of discourse was Daniel v. 27, illustrated by the ten commandments. Rev. William Haslam prayed that this last evening might be a crowning evening to the whole Mission, and verily this prayer was answered. The Spirit of the Lord manifestly possessed the speaker, as he earnestly exposed the prevailing sins and abuses of the present day. Many strong men were moved even to tears. A large body rose at the conclusion, among them two clergymen, and as all heads were bowed, in the solemn stillness Mr. Stebbins sang in melting tones

"Oh! the clanging bells of Time."

Mr. Moody's farewell words to the men of London are well worth remembering. "I do not recollect any occasions in my life which I have enjoyed so much as these Sunday evening services for men. If I have at times seemed harsh in my preaching, it is only because I love you and want you to forsake sin; and I would give my body to be trampled under foot if by it you would be saved. May God bring us all to meet in his Kingdom. Amen."

The New Stratford Conference Hall.

A very large gathering assembled on Monday afternoon within and around a tent to witness the laying of five memorial stones of the building which is to be erected for the use of the Y.M.C.A. and as a Conference Hall where Christians can meet for evangelistic work. This is a practical outcome of the recent visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Stratford, where Mr. Moody also opened a branch of the Association at that time.

The chair was taken by the Earl of Aberdeen, who, while expressing his thankfulness for this movement, thought it was particularly appropriate that it should be connected with the names of the two much-loved evangelists. He referred to the renovating of the Y.M.C.A. at Aberdeen during their visit to that place some years ago, and he trusted that this building would be, as that had been, a centre of varied and comprehensive Christian work. He was sure he was expressing the thoughts of his audience in saying that he was convinced a wave of prayer and praise would follow Mr. Moody when his turn came to leave our shores for his own land.

The first stone was laid by the Countess of Aberdeen, the next by Miss Eccles, who is the kind donor of the land on which the building is to be erected. George Williams, Esq., and J. G. Barclay, Esq., followed.

When Mr. Moody's turn came, he said he would make his speech first, before anyone had to leave. It was all very well to clap, but he wanted them to put their hands in their pockets. Out of the £6000 needed, £3477 had been promised; but as the committee had determined not to run into debt, he wanted to see the roof on at once. A lady had given him £250 to use as he pleased in London, and he would give that, and if everyone would have a brick in the building it would soon be put up. Papers and boxes were then passed round, and various amounts announced, including £250 anonymously, £105 from Mr. George Williams, and smaller amounts, from £20 downwards. While this was taking place a little boy was brought forward as "one of the Mizpah Band, who wished to present to Lady Aberdeen a bouquet," which she graciously accepted.

Mr. Moody stated that he always considered the Stratford Mission as one of the most successful during this London campaign. If he came to this country again, that hall would be one of the first places he would visit. He proceeded to lay the fifth stone, and showed his characteristic thoroughness by using up all the cement, to the amusement of the spectators. He then declared the stone "scientifically laid," and after prayer the happy gathering dispersed.

It was much regretted that the Lord Mayor, and Mr. W. Fowler, M.P., were at the last moment prevented from being present.

At 7 p.m. the same evening, Ned Wright addressed a large multitude in the tent.

On Tuesday afternoon Mr. Moody performed a like service for the friends at Wandsworth. Both these buildings, and the work of which they will form the centres, are the direct outcome of the past winter's Mission in London, and will form very tangible memorials of a very memorable campaign. We are obliged to postpone to our next issue detailed reports of the Wandsworth gathering and of the farewell meeting in Temple Gardens Hall on Monday evening.

YOUNG MEN IN LONDON.—The new home of the Camden and Kentish Town Branch of the Y.M.C.A. was opened last week by Lord Shaftesbury, addresses of a congratulatory nature being also delivered by several local pastors. As will be seen by our forthcoming announcements, the annual meeting of the branch takes place this evening. A building for the newly-established Hackney Branch was also opened last week, under the presidency of Mr. George Williams.

THE ENGLISH CHAPEL AT SPA.—Dear Sir,—I greatly desire to hear of someone who would be willing to undertake, with little or no remuneration, except the pleasure of doing the Lord's work, the task of conducting English services during the season in the chapel at Spa, which was built by the exertions of the late Miss Esther Beamish. The only sine quâ non is that the doctrine which he preaches should be evangelical in the old-fashioned sense of the word.

Truly yours, Horace Noel,
Hon. Sec. of the Foreign Evan-Woking, Surrey. gelisation Society.

SOLDIERS AND MILITIAMEN.—Sir,—There is a great opening for evangelistic work amongst soldiers and militiamen at this time of year, whilst many thousand men are encamped for musketry practice all over the country, and during the militia "training." Permission to hold Gospel services by suitable men can readily be obtained, if wisely sought. The men are more willing to attend these services in camp than under any other circumstances. I will gladly give information to anyone who may desire to have it. But this season of opportunity will be past by the middle or end of August. I should be glad to communicate with the friends in Glasgow, whose work amongst the Lanarkshire Militia is noticed in this week's Christian. H. G. Macgregor,

THE AUSTRALIAN ABORIGINES.

DEAR SIR,—For many years nothing was done by Christians to reach the poor, despised children of the far-off south. Nothing, indeed, was done by the early settlers for their good, but a great deal was done to render their condition far worse than it ever would have been if they had not come into contact with the professedly Christian white man. The white man's vices, diseases, and rifle-balls have done much to degrade and exterminate the race, to which we in the providence of God owe so much in return for the glorious country we have taken from them.

I am happy to say that though late in the day, the evangelisation of these people has been taken up. The efforts which have been put forth have been signally owned and blessed of God. In New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, and Western Australia, Mission stations have been formed, and the natives gathered into them; and, under proper treatment and the enlightening influences of the blessed Gospel, they have unmistakably proved themselves to be susceptible of very great improvement. They are quite disposed to settle down on reserves set apart for their use by the Government. The men learn to labour for their own support just like white men. The women become pictures of cleanliness and domestic order. In the schools, which, as missionaries, we have established for them, the most satisfactory results have been obtained.

As regards spiritual results, at every one of our fourteen stations there are many who are true believers in Jesus Christ as their own personal Saviour, and in their daily walk and conversation they set forth the fruits of the Spirit, while many in their dying moments have given us the clearest testimony of the firmness of their faith and the fulness of their hope. In short, the Gospel proves itself amongst the poor, down-trodden Aborigines of Australia to be the power of God to their salvation.

But the time has arrived when this great work in Australia must be enlarged. The tribes in the far interior are still unreached. And, worse than that, they are really perishing by the vices and cruelties of Europeans. And, poor creatures, they would gladly accept of the Gospel if we could only take it to them. They have heard of the benefits which have come to those tribes with which we have been brought into contact as missionaries, and they are anxiously stretching out their hands to us for help. But at present we can do nothing to reach them. The fields are white to harvest, but we have no labourers to send. Several years ago I founded the Warangesda Mission on the Murrumbidgee, which is 400 miles from the coast, and from the success God has given us there, I long to convey the message of peace and love to the tens of thousands who are still without it.

Our great need is efficient workers. Very few in Australia are willing to devote themselves to such a life. An increase to our staff must come from England. And for those young men and young women whose hearts God may touch for such service, we must have a training college, where they may get an insight into the manners and customs of the people, as well as an initiation into real pioneering missionary work. If I could only establish such an institution at Warangesda on my return, I feel confident that young men and young women would be forthcoming; already three young persons have offered themselves as candidates.

Will Christians in England, who may read this appeal, help me in the matter? I have recently arrived from Australia, having been ordered home by my medical advisers, but I hope to return to my much-loved blacks in December. If I could leave England with the means to found such an institution, unspeakable blessing would result to thousands of the heathen of my adopted land.—Yours, in Christ's service,

John B. Gribble, Missionary.

A COUNTRY MISSION.

MISSIONS in towns are so frequent now, and their results have been so satisfactory, that they have little need of advocacy, at any rate with those who believe in definite spiritual work. But what about our country parishes? May we hope that this agency, if largely employed, would be equally successful there? What prospect is there of considerable spiritual results in sparsely-populated rural localities? Believing as I do that this is a matter of the gravest importance, I may, perhaps, be allowed to say something about my experiences in a country Mission which I am just now closing, held in a village not seven miles from my own home.

The venerable rector was appointed to office there two years before I was born, and during that long period has continued faithfully to preach the Gospel. But when people have been listening to the same voice for forty-five years, surely it is time that the work of the parish presbyter, however excellent in itself, should be occasionally supplemented from without. So the missioner was welcomed heartily, and considerable efforts were made to excite an interest amongst the 600 inhabitants of the parish. A pouring wet Sunday was not a very favourable commencement of our Mission, for "divers of them came from far," but the congregations went on steadily growing from day to day, till by Friday every available seat was occupied, and on the second Sunday we had a cram. It was evident from the first that the people were interested, but, oh! how shy they were. "You musn't be surprised at their not staying to speak to you," said the rector; "for I am sure, knowing them as I do, they'll never come to that, they are far too shy and timid." And, indeed, so it seemed the first three or four nights.

Meanwhile, the Mission preacher was learning some lessons. He had made a special effort, as he thought, to be very simple from the first, but it was instructive to hear that the men were saying, "We can understand a good bit here and there of what the gentleman says, but there's a deal that we don't know nothing about!" I am persuaded a little country work would be most wholesome in this respect to many of us. Mission preachers who are frequently working amongst the educated classes, for how apt we are to lose sight of the power that there is in simplicity.

At length the ice began to melt. In this fine old church the chancel is completely cut off from the nave by the introduction of the tower between them, there being no transepts and side chapels. Accordingly, it occurred to me to utilise the chancel, which was only faintly lighted from the church, for our inquirers, if we could get any. This chancel was approached by a side-door from without, and there my lady helper and I had to lie in ambush for the people as they left the first after-meeting, and, pouncing upon those who seemed impressed, walk them off to the chancel to receive whatever personal help we could offer. Then the work began in earnest, and night after night we were kept hard at it. And most interesting it was. There is a quaint naïveté about some of these country folks that I greatly relish. "I don't mean to say," remarked one woman, "that I never knew all this before, or that I never felt the force of it on Sundays when the preaching was going forward; but when Monday came, Sunday thoughts would pass away, and before the week's end they was all gone, but now it's all the one thing, Sunday and Monday and all the week through, and I don't feel as I can hold out against it no more."

On Monday night last week I met a prominent artisan of the village on his way to the church with a most resolute air. "You hit me very hard yesterday afternoon, sir; I felt I'd been what you said, a coward all my days. But I don't care for any one now—I've got a great burden on my heart, and I want to get it off me." So the work went on. By the Friday of the first week I felt we must go on for another, and though this was thought scarcely prudent—there would be a falling off and a dwindling, for people really couldn't afford the time for a second week—we found, on the contrary, that the second week's services were much better attended than the first, and the work became intensely interesting and most encouraging. I have often seen a smaller number of apparent conversions when the congregations have been two or three times as large as those this little country village could muster.

The following practical conclusions suggest themselves to my mind about Country Missions:—

(1) Let the speaker labour to be as simple and conversational as possible.

(2) Let him secure the assistance of a lady or two skilled in the work, who will hold "after-meetings" in the people's cottages; without this I think we should not have had half the results.

(3) Let the Missioner be patient and not push things too much at first, and let him try and get acquainted with the people, perhaps by standing outside the door at the close of the first after-meeting and saying a cheery word or two to them, or in any other way that may suggest itself.

(4) I think if a room of any kind can be obtained near the church, or a large vestry, or a separate portion of the church (such as this most useful chancel) can be utilised, country people are more likely to meet one there than to remain in church to be inspected by their departing neighbours.

(5) Much may be done, especially in country places, by sending Andrew to find Peter, and Philip for Nathaniel; we have had any number of happy examples of this during this Mission.

Our hearts are filled with gratitude to God, not only for this particular Mission, but for the encouragement it gives to the hope that country Missions all over our land may be productive of similarly blessed results.

EVANGELISTIC WORK, FINSBURY PARK.

(By a Correspondent.)

THE Finsbury Park Branch of the Y.M.C.A. has just entered on a new phase of work, which seems likely to make it an important factor in the evangelical labours of North London. The Committee has secured for a term of years (for Sundays only) the Finsbury Park Hall, which has accommodation for about a thousand visitors. A slight sketch of the use to which it is put may be interesting to your many readers, who take a lively interest in real soul-saving work for the Master. Our dear friend Mr. Geo. Williams, the treasurer and founder of the parent association, has become one of the trustees, whilst Mr. R. C. Morgan has kindly consented to become President of the Branch.

A meeting for special prayer is held from 9.30 to 10.30 every Sunday morning (conducted by the Secretary) to which all Christians are invited. The number of requests sent in for special cases testify to the general and warm interest taken in it, whilst the requests for praise for answered prayer are becoming wonderfully refreshing. The Bible-class recently held in the rooms of the Association has been transferred to the hall, and is held at 3.15, conducted by Mr. Holme with largely increased attendance and blessing. Popular services for the people take the place of the Bible-class on the first Sunday in each month, conducted by the leading ministers of the district. Those already held have been conducted by the Rev. J. R. Wood (President-elect of the Baptist Union), and the Rev. Ossian Davies, the deservedly-popular minister of New Court Congregational Chapel. The next will (D.V.) be conducted by the Rev. Geo. Stringer Rowe (Wesleyan). An excellent choir has been formed, including some gifted and thoroughly consecrated voices for solo singing; this has proved most attractive and helpful, especially for the evening services for the people.

Upon these services the most strenuous efforts of our young friends are exerted. The doors are thrown open at 6.30, the choir being in attendance to lead the singing, which is conducted in the heartiest manner by Mr. Lake, for half an hour before the service commences, and prepares the way for the Gospel message. In the meantime, bands of our young men are outside tapping the living stream flowing past the entrance at this hour in ever-increasing volume, to hear the band of the Sunday League in the park close by. Numbers have been laid hold of and often literally compelled to come in, until the hall gets sometimes crowded in every part; we praise God that the power of the Lord has been present to heal at every service. Twenty-three were found seeking salvation at the first service, conducted by our dear and honoured friend, Ned Wright, and every subsequent service has seen remarkable cases of conversion.

One instance was that of a young man to whom the writer's attention was called by a worker in the after-meeting, as one who declared he did not care whether he went to heaven or hell. One glance at the troubled eye was sufficient to see the surging billows of conviction within. We took him by the hand and asked him if the assertion made was true. Proudly and defiantly he answered, Yes, he cared for nothing! Kindly, yet earnestly, we pressed him to go into the inquiry-room, and almost eagerly he assented. A few words of loving sympathy seemed to open the very floodgates of his soul, and that strong, athletic form bent down in one of the most terrible bursts of anguish and despair it has ever been our lot to witness. His whole frame quivered and trembled under its awful power, and the cry which came from the depths of his broken heart was that of utter hopelessness and helplessness. "Don't tell me that such a wretch as I can be saved; you do not know me, you cannot realise what sin I have committed." Do not mock me, he seemed to say, with holding out any hope; throwing himself on the table he sobbed and wept like a little child. How our very soul yearned over that lost one "coming to himself!" Yet we could but rejoice with trembling as he poured out of his heart confession of sin of the most appalling kind. But the loving Spirit of God was preparing him for the message of mercy, and as he realised the truth of that passage—"The Lord hath laid on Him the iniquity of us all," light seemed to break upon the dark night of his soul, and in a low, earnest voice, he said, "Oh, I thank God for this." The night was gone; the day-star had risen on his soul; and soon he was rejoicing and praising God.

Outside the inquiry-room we found a young lady waiting for him. It was a sister, who had just decided to confess Christ openly, though she had found Him secretly a fortnight before; and waiting for both was a dear Christian father, who told us with tears of joy that the prayers of years were answered then. What a night for that family—never to be forgotten through all eternity. To God be all the glory!

One result of this extended and extending work has been that numbers of young men have applied for admission to the Branch, for whom no adequate accommodation can be provided. The Committee are in a strait. Go back they cannot—go forward they must! As the seats in the hall when taken were found to be insufficient for the numbers flocking in, an additional expense of £40 for chairs was at once thrown upon them. The new work has thrown their finances behind about £120. It is necessary at once to build additional accommodation at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A., 1A, Coleridge-road, Finsbury-park, N. The estimated cost is £850. The Treasurer, Mr. Robert Porter, has headed the subscription with £100. Who will follow so good a lead? The Secretary, Mr. C. Cotching, will be glad to supply all information.

TEXT CARDS FOR GERMANY.—Miss Von Mielecka, who is well known to our readers as interested in evangelistic work in Germany is shortly returning thither, and would be glad if friends would provide her with a supply of Mrs. Grimké's text cards in German for distribution. Her address is Shugborough, Stafford.

Letters to the Editor.

HOLIDAY WORK.

Dear Sir,—I and another Christian young man having a fortnight's holidays about the beginning of August, are desirous of passing it in Gospel work. We have had fair experience in addressing meetings, &c., and have agreed to join together in a short Mission if the Lord be pleased to use us and open a door for us. He may be pleased to lay it on the hearts of some of your readers to give us an invitation. We ask no remuneration.

We shall be happy to give as referees the names of Christian clergymen and others. One of us can play the harmonium and lead singing.

Address—53, Great Charles-street, Dublin.—Yours in Christ Jesus, F. T. P.

A DAY IN THE COUNTRY.

Sir,—Some of your readers, who are proposing to take their schools, mothers' meetings, Temperance societies, &c , for a day into the country, may be glad to know of an excursion which from experience I can strongly recommend. Shirley Common is distant about two miles from Norwood Junction Station, which can be easily reached from Victoria, London-bridge, Willesden, or Broad-street.

The Common is a beautiful spot, on a high table-land, covered with heather and patches of firwood, close to the Archbishop's Palace at Addington. A most enjoyable day may be spent there by taking lunch, and returning in the afternoon to the Coffee Palace next door to Norwood Junction, where tea will be provided at a very moderate cost in the large hall adjoining, where, if desired, a Gospel or Temperance meeting can be held.

A tramway now runs half-way from the Junction to Shirley Common, or vans for the whole distance can be engaged by the manager (care of Mr. A. C. P. Coote, Coffee Palace, Norwood Junction, S.E.), to whom all communications should be addressed.—Yours truly, C. Gurney.

THE GOSPEL AND SOCIAL IMPROVEMENT.

Sir,—That the Gospel is mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds of sin and Satan, and quickening society with the breath of spiritual life, and that it is the only instrument capable of doing this, is what all experience teaches. The civilisation of Christendom, its religion, arts, sciences, and letters are in a great degree the monuments of its power. And that the same agency is equal to every demand in this direction which the future may make on it, we have no reason to doubt. And the reason is obvious. All our social evils spring more or less directly from the existence of sin, and there is no power that can or does directly or successfully grapple with sin but the Gospel.

We have no reason to suppose that the modern missionary or evangelist needs anything more for success than the same Gospel and Divine grace which gave his predecessors in the early Christian ages their career of victory. But it should be noted by those who concur in this, that the Gospel necessarily raises up, in every community it evangelises, Christian labourers who are neither missionaries nor evangelists, but social reformers, who in the interest of the Gospel itself, or as the direct outcome of its teachings, aim at the extirpation of all the evils that injure society. Here we have a new phase of activity. These men, whether Christian ministers or not, are dealing directly with the complex social problems which all communities, and especially advanced ones, necessarily suggest. They deal with the machinery of society itself—with the relations of classes, and their action and reaction on each other. How shall any man intelligently do this without a knowledge of the things he deals with? And how can he gain this but by an intelligent acquaintance with the sciences which teach it? Amongst these social sciences political economy stands out as one of the most advanced, and so far as it reveals the internal physiology of society, it has especial claims on the attention of all social workers. I fail altogether to realise any resemblance between the science itself and the representations of it given occasionally by some of your correspondents. These fail, in fact, to understand the nature, not of political economy only, but even of natural science itself.

No science of nature issues commands or gives advice. The simple function of natural science is to teach the actual nature and relations of natural things. Nothing more. "Every man for himself, and let the weak go to the wall," which we were told in your last issue is a law of political economy, is not a law at all in the proper sense of that word in natural science. A law of nature is not a command, or enactment, or advice, but a simple statement of what is invariably found to be a fact in nature. The indicative mood is the only one it uses. The use men make of these laws, the rules men deduce from them, the enactments and observances which men justify by them, are no parts of natural science, and for these it is not responsible. I think it is these things, and not the science itself, that your correspondents really mean to object to.

THE COMING CRISIS.

Sir,—In view of the attention now directed to the condition of the poor, every contribution to the discussion of the question is useful. We have, by many descriptions, been familiarised with the misery of the "outcast" population of our great cities, and many eloquent pleas have been uttered on their behalf. But the bulk of these have dealt in vague generalities about the adaptability of the Gospel to human needs, without showing at what point it touches the social state of the people. Others, again, plead for renewed personal Mission effort from house to house; this would doubtless alleviate the suffering, but cannot cure the disease. It is disappointing, under these circumstances, to be told of the failure of practical experiments to improve the condition of the poor, albeit so many of them are so miserably underpaid for their labour.

Clearly, God is not glorified in this seething mass of poverty. We turn with great yearning to a time when it will cease, and the man who will point out the cause and remedy will be highly esteemed. A bold and clever man has lately written two bold and comprehensive books on the subject — the one "Progress and Poverty," the other "Social Problems." He ascribes poverty to private property in land, and draws most enchanting pictures of what would result from the nationalisation of the soil. Whether his remedy be approved or not, one cannot but admire his wide grasp of the subject, and his clear presentation of his position. But even suppose his remedy to be right, it could not be applied, in this country at least, without a revolution. His haven can only be reached by a sea of blood, and therefore men of peace, even if convinced by his reason, hesitate to identify themselves with his cause. That his settlement, if amicably arrived at, would be an immense gain, no one can doubt, but how to apply it? that is the question.

Let an extract from "Social Problems," pp. 37, 38, lead the way to an answer, which, though Mr. George does not give it, is suggested by what he says.

"Nearly nineteen hundred years ago, when another civilisation was developing monstrous inequalities, when the masses everywhere were being ground into hopeless slavery, there arose in a Jewish village an unlearned carpenter, who, scorning the orthodoxies and ritualisms of the time, preached to labourers and fishermen the Gospel of the Fatherhood of God, of the equality and brotherhood of men, who taught his disciples to pray for the coming of the Kingdom of Heaven on earth. The college professors sneered at him, the orthodox preachers denounced him. He was reviled as a dreamer, as a disturber, as a 'Communist'; and, finally, organised society took the alarm, and He was crucified between two thieves. But the word went forth, and, spread by fugitives and slaves, made its way against power and against persecution till it revolutionised the world, and out of the rotting old civilisation brought the germ of the new. Then the privileged classes rallied again, carved the effigy of the man of the people in the courts and on the tombs of the kings; in his name consecrated inequality, and wrested his Gospel to the defence of social injustice. But again the same great ideas of a common Fatherhood, of a common brotherhood, of a social state in which none shall be overworked, and none shall want, begin to quicken in common thought.

"When a mighty wind meets a strong current it does not portend a smooth sea. And whoever will think of the opposing tendencies beginning to develop will appreciate the gravity of the social problems the world must soon meet. He will also understand the meaning of Christ's words when He said: 'Think not that I am come to send peace on earth; I am come not to send peace, but a sword.'"

The writer of these paragraphs does not profess to know the Gospel, and therefore we may let his inaccurate description of it pass without criticism; but he does profess to understand the social problem, and most people who have observed it will admit he is right when he speaks of the strong wind opposing the strong current, with a storm as the result. No doubt a storm is coming; tribulation that has not been known since the world began; an overturning of all things; a gigantic upheaval. But how, when, by whom, for what purpose?

This heterodox writer is himself the witness that by his first coming the Man of Nazareth caused a better notion of social life to prevail on earth. He introduced a state when, at least for a time, "they had all things in common." He further admits that the influence of Christ still tends towards righteousness. Only one step more is needed to crown the whole.

If Christ by his first advent introduced a brotherhood amongst his people, it yet remains for that same Christ, by his second advent, to consummate his work, by forming into a brotherhood all men that dwell upon the earth.

Let social reformers, then, and Christian philanthropists carry out their proposals. We bid them God-speed, for here is shown the spirit of the Master who went about doing good. But the full and final remedy is to be found, we believe, neither from one nor the other, but in the coming of that Governor who will sway all hearts, and bring in eternal righteousness.

If men, non-Christian, admit that the Lord Jesus began the social reformation, let it be for men who are Christians to expect and hasten the day when the same Lord from heaven will come again and complete the work He began. "The Bitter Cry" reaches to the throne of the King. He will soon come to deliver.

Notes from the North of France.

LENS.

Pastor Romain writes:—"On a recent Sabbath our place of worship here was full, and we received into the church five men.' The confession of their faith and the recital of their conversion caused many tears to flow. It was very touching to see about fifty persons draw around the Lord's Table, the great majority men. Only a few years ago there was no Christian worship in Lens. The next day I went to twenty-five miles further on. I had sent a despatch, which had not arrived at the proper time, but there was a fair number p esent, as the friends had gone out on all sides to bring in the people. The work here is very encouraging, and the singing is beautiful; it is remarkable that the people, until recently all Romanists, should so soon have become efficient in the part-singing of Gospel hymns. From Auchel I went the same day to about four miles. Upon my arrival, I went to see a young woman dying from pulmonary disease. Years ago she heard the Gospel, but did not follow it. On her sick-bed she remembered it, cried to God, and found peace. But her position is a sad one, for her unbelieving husband, although he provides for all her wants, leaves her completely. Some Christians visit her and a few days ago the Roman Catholic sisters of mercy went to offer her help and service, but only on condition that she would send for the priest and confess to him. Her reply was, "I have my Saviour; that is the essential thing."

From the sick one we went to the place of worship, in the house of a miner, and soon the room was full. It is difficult to meet in miners' houses where their families are numerous, so they have decided to build a hall for worship. One benevolent friend, though a Catholic, has given 500 francs, and others have agreed to put by a portion of their fortnightly wages.

Fund in aid of the Erection of Union Chapel and Schools, NORTHAMPTON.

THE reputation of our town has suffered grievously from its connection with Mr. C. Bradlaugh. Many at a distance, who are unacquainted with the actual state of parties, imagine that we are all atheists and sceptics or he would not have been elected to represent the town. We must admit there are many such amongst us, as in most large towns; but it ought to be known that many who had no sympathy with his atheism supported him for political reasons, and many more opposed him from the first and will ever oppose him from conscientious convictions. These feel the disgrace their town suffers, and grieve over the discord and debate, the moral and spiritual corruption which they consider his presence and the publication of immoral and anti-christian works have created. From this point of view it is a great calamity to the town, for it has alienated friends, divided families, disturbed every social relation, and weakened all the agencies of the churches. The servants of God are troubled by its presence on every side, but they do not despair of deliverance.

A few weeks since the Rev. H. Bradford, the Baptist Minister of Prince's-street Chapel, preached a sermon on "The duty of Christians to separate themselves from all unbelievers." This was prior to the last election, and understood by the supporters of Mr. Bradlaugh in the congregation to be specially intended for them. Their opposition was aroused, and they soon secured an adverse vote which led to his resignation and withdrawal. But a large proportion of the people who approved of his faithfulness and were attached to his ministry followed him, and in compliance with their earnest entreaties not to leave them, he consented to remain in the town and form a new church on Union principles. This will require the erection of a chapel and schools, where they can worship God and educate the young apart from all supporters and sympathisers with Mr. Bradlaugh.

We, as members of other Christian communities, lamenting the evils which a vain attempt to unite the service of God with the support of his declared enemies has brought upon our town, have witnessed with admiration and thankfulness Mr. Bradford's moral courage and faithfulness in this trying conflict. We sympathise with him in his present position and wish him success. His people are neither wealthy nor influential, but thoroughly in earnest. They will do their utmost, but they must look to their brethren throughout the land, who approve of their conduct, for liberal contributions to enable them to achieve their objects. Northampton needs the presence of such a pastor and people. Their example has already done good, for it has confirmed the undecided and strengthened the hands of those who are labouring for the emancipation of the town. On these grounds we unitedly and earnestly appeal to the Christians of all Denominations to do their part in this good work.

An unsectarian Committee of the undersigned has been formed to assist Mr. Bradford, of which J. Blackwell, Esq., is Treasurer, and Mr. David Sherwell, 9, St. George's-terrace, Hon. Secretary.

All the moneys received will be handed over to the Committee of the new church, to be applied by them to the erection of the chapel and schools.

Kindly cross cheques Northamptonshire Union Bank Limited, or Northamptonshire Banking Company Limited, payable to J. Blackwell, Esq., Walton Villa, Billing-road. Small donations in postal orders. All remittances will be acknowledged by Treasurer's printed receipt.

JUBILEE OF THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

President—
THE DOWAGER MARCHIONESS OF CHOLMONDELEY.
Treasurer—
SIR W. R. FARQUHAR, BART., 16, St. James's-street, S.W.

Half a century has now elapsed since a few ladies, moved by pity for their unhappy sisters in Eastern lands, met to form themselves into a Committee and to consider how best to "proclaim liberty" to the captives in Zenanas and in Harems. While waiting, as they had to do, for the gradual opening of these prison-doors, they took up the work that was ready for them, and gathered the little ones into Schools and Orphanages. To India and China, the countries which were selected as those in which to begin their efforts, the Committee have been permitted to add Japan, Ceylon, Mauritius, South and West Africa, Egypt, the Levant, and, lastly, Persia; but there remains yet much land to be possessed, and in this, their Jubilee year, the Committee are anxious for special help to enable them to lengthen their cords and strengthen their stakes.

The following sums are needed at once, for the cases are pressing and the emergency is great:—£2,000 for their work in Japan, in response to an urgent appeal from the Church Missionary Conference, for its extension and permanent establishment; £2,000 for the same purpose at two of their Stations in China; £1,000 to enable them to enter into a very important Station in North India where nothing has yet been done for Female Education; £400 to complete their Bethlehem Building Fund; and at least £1,000 for the general funds, that the work in many other existing Stations may be extended and strengthened. Surely there are many of the Lord's stewards who could meet one, if not more, of these pressing calls.

Contributions to any of the funds mentioned above will be thankfully received by the following:—

A Whitsun Conference in Ireland.

A SERIES of very interesting meetings has just concluded at Rathdrum, in the county Wicklow. For the tenth time the annual Mission and Conference has been held at Whitsuntide. This was formerly a season of races and revelry; now, thank God! it is changed to one of Christian joy and revival. Every year the interest and spiritual benefit have increased.

Every evening a large congregation gathered in the old-fashioned church This year Rev. Joseph Simpson, of the Church of England Parochial Mission, assisted the rector, Rev. Wyndham Guinness.

On Thursday and Friday afternoons in Whitsun week a large number assembled from the country round, either in a large marquee or in the church, where special subjects, such as "Conversion," "Confession," and "Consecration," were considered. All those who came from a distance were invited to tea, either in the rectory or in the grounds, where, drinking in the charming views of the surrounding country, both body and mind were refreshed.

After the conclusion of the Mission and Conference, two most profitable meeetings were held by Mr. H. Grattan Guinness, brother of the rector, who, after earnest, practical exhortations, gave a comprehensive account of the great missionary work in which he is engaged, and in the prosecution of which he is about shortly to visit the East Indies.

THE PAN PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL.—Many of the pulpits of the Presbyterian churches in Belfast were filled last Sunday by delegates who have arrived in Belfast to attend the Pan Presbyterian Council which opened on Tuesday.

FRANCE.—Mr. C. E. Faithfull, of Marseilles, is now in England, and until the end of July will be happy to hold drawing-room meetings, and give information respecting the Strangers' Rests in that city. Address, care of Dr. Clapton, 105, Cheapside, London, E.C.

RAILWAY TRAVELLERS during the holiday season, who wish to do good as they have opportunity, may be glad to be reminded of the fact that literature specially suited for distribution along the lines of rail may be had on favourable terms from the office of the Railway Mission, 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C. A copy of the organ of the Mission, The Railway Signal, which is issued monthly (price one penny), would prove a very useful gift to many a railway servant; its news on railway matters will interest him, while he may be caught by some Gospel home-thrust that will change the whole course of his life.

THE LATE DR. MOFFAT.—SIR,—Will you allow me space in your columns to prefer a request relating to the late Dr. Robert Moffat, the African missionary and traveller? His memoirs are now being prepared by his only surviving son—Mr. John Smith Moffat, of Grahamstown, South Africa—and I am instructed by this gentleman to solicit on his behalf the loan of any letters or other papers relating to his father or mother which your readers may possess, and which they may be able to place at his disposal for this purpose. All such documents will be treated with the utmost care and returned in due course. They should be addressed under cover, to myself, at 26, Paternoster-square, E.C.—Yours obediently,

T. FISHER UNWIN.

A HOLIDAY HOME FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—A Home was recently opened at Ryde, Isle of Wight, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. "Garfield House" offers to young women engaged in business a most desirable house of rest on strictly moderate terms. The domestic arrangements are presided over by a Christian lady admirably adapted for the position. Of the religious privileges it is hardly possible to speak too highly. The scenic beauties of the island are too well known to be expatiated on here. Having derived great benefit from my visit here myself, I feel it to be a duty to make known its advantages for the good of others. A VISITOR.

[As it is found that infidels and others send tracts to the persons whose names are inserted here, it is most important that all books and papers received should be carefully read before being given away. All applicants must send us the name of one or more responsible referees.]

Subscriptions received by Messrs. Morgan & Scott to Saturday Morning, June 21, 1884.

 Donations should be sent by Cheque or P.O. Orders, not by stamps. Cheques to be drawn in favour of Morgan and Scott, and crossed City Bank; P.O.O.'s payable to Morgan and Scott, at G.P.O.

 Will donors oblige us by giving explicitly and fully the titles of the Missions to which they wish their donations to be applied? Mistakes which sometimes arise will thus be obviated. Will they also bear in mind that our Donation List is made up for the Printer on Saturday Morning? Any amounts received afterwards will be acknowledged in the subsequent week's number.

Dr. Barnardo's Homes for Destitute Children—Eric, 10s.

MANCHESTER.—Three addresses by Mr. John H. L. Christien, Organising Secretary of the Midnight Meeting Movement, have been given in different parts of Manchester to considerable audiences. The subject was: "Somebody's Daughters and Sisters." The men everywhere appeared to be anxious for information, and manifested considerable sympathy with the innocent and betrayed.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

THE ANCHORAGE HOUSE, Regent's Park, N.W. THE MISSION HALL, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster.

Committee—GEORGE HANBURY, Esq.; Rev. H. E. FOX; Colonel STUART WORTLEY.

GOSPEL MISSION AND PREVENTIVE WORK.

In addition to the Sunday and Week-day Services, Sunday Schools, Mothers' Meetings, &c., in the Mission Hall, Classes are now held for the instruction of young girls of various ages in the truths of the Gospel, and for teaching them sewing, cutting out, mending, and other such things as may be useful to them in their various positions in life.

Bible Classes for domestic servants, young women in houses of business, and others, are being arranged. All classes are conducted by Ladies.

RESCUE WORK.

The Anchorage House meets a great and acknowledged want, in sheltering respectable young women who have been led astray. Many and many a poor creature, now sunk in the sinful life of our great cities, might have been saved had such an opportunity come before her in the early days of her sin.

Special Mission Services are held from time to time for women living in sin.

The whole work of the Mission is directed towards producing a clear and definite change of heart, through simple belief and trust in the Atoning Blood of the Lord Jesus Christ. The work accomplished during past years shows that the blessing of GOD rests on what is done with that view only.

A SALE of many very interesting things will be held in the MISSION HALL, Queen Anne's Gate (close to St. James's Park Station), on the 2nd, 3rd, and 4th of JULY, from 11 a.m. to 9 p.m., in aid of the above work. Friends who cannot attend the Sale, may send any sum they may desire to spend to MRS. H. STUART WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W., who will lay it out to the best advantage. Any subscriptions in aid of the funds may be sent to Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

SAVE THE LADS!

OUR POSITION.

The London Homes are full (230 boys).

50 situations secured with leading farmers in Manitoba, &c.

Well-trained, healthy lads ready for me to take early next month (in time for the harvest season); to fill up these openings and make room for more rescued boys to follow.

OUR NEED.

£700 to settle outstanding claims.

£500 to defray expenses of passage and outfit for the 50 boys.

£1,250 required by 8th July.

£10 will settle a lad comfortably, and give him the best possible prospects in life.

The smallest help thankfully received.

Mr. G. T. Congreve's New Work

ON

CONSUMPTION

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

AND ALL

OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

Containing ONE HUNDRED and THIRTY-THREE SELECTED CASES. May be had from ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER-ROW, E.C., or from Mr. Congreve (the Author), COOMBE LODGE, PECKHAM, S.E.

TENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of BRONCHO-PHTHISIS—WILLIAM HOPKINS, ALVEDISTON, SALISBURY.

This patient, in requesting me to publish his case for the good of others, says: "Anyone doubting the fact of my recovery, and of my sister,* can apply to me with stamped addressed envelope."

Eighteen months, or thereabouts, before writing the above, W. H. came to Coombe Lodge. Examined by Dr. Brown in my absence. "Upper lobe of right lung diseased, the left weak."

He had been ill for nine months, bronchitis first, with subsequent relapses. Had been under four doctors previous to this. The disease had now begun to affect the structure of the lungs.

After six months' correspondence (once or twice per month), and following my advice during that time, he came again. "Much better in condition of the lungs. Cough gone; much stronger. Had gained 14 pounds in flesh."

In the letter quoted above, W. H. adds: "For the last three months I have been as well as I ever have been, or wish to be. When I came to you I was only a frame of what I had been. My warmest thanks to you and Dr. Brown for your most kind attention to my case, which has been the means of preserving my life."

* N.B.—The sister of this patient (to whom he alludes) was affected similarly, but to a less degree, and speedily recovered.

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

JUST PUBLISHED.

Neatly printed on tinted paper, suitable for enclosing in letters, or for general distribution.

Price 1s. per dozen; 7s. per 100.

NUTS TO CRACK.

For Infidels and Freethinkers.

By AN OLD DEIST.

Extracts.

2. I cannot gainsay the fact that human nature is bad, and as bad as the old book makes it. Of course it is not the duty of deists and freethinkers to admit this; because, having no remedy for it, why should they tell that the old fortress is rotten at the foundation? But let us admit it; it is too hard to be cracked.—Page 5.

* * * * * *

10. We are also asked to explain, on the ground of Evolution, whether the bird laying eggs came first without eggs, or the eggs without fowls. If we say eggs first, where did the egg come from? Or if we say the fowl first, then did the fowl not come from an egg? It would puzzle the natural philosopher to say how it could possibly come without an egg.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

ANOTHER HALF-YEAR'S WORK COMPLETED.

From January 1 to June 30 there were no less than 706 applications by and on behalf of Friendless and Fallen Young Women and Girls, representing many on the verge of moral ruin: some in the first stage, and others down in the terrible depths of sin: ALL alike needing Salvation; and "He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

HEBREWS vii. 25.

A HEARTY WELCOME has been given in every possible case to the Homes or "Open-All-Night."

There are now nearly two hundred in the Homes and OPEN-ALL-NIGHT Refuge.

£1,000 in contributions urgently NEEDED to sustain the work during the coming Autumn.

Readers are asked kindly to CONTRIBUTE during July towards the required amount before leaving for their own rest and recreation, that this WORK OF MERCY MAY NOT BE HINDERED EVEN FOR A DAY.

MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, will, as usual, receive contributions.

EDWARD W. THOMAS, SEC.

Office: 200, Euston Road, N.W.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

"The chapters contained in this volume are made up from a series of BIBLE READINGS recently delivered in several places in London, in connection with the Evangelistic Mission just now coming to a close, in the work of which I have had the unspeakable privilege of having a part.

"I am happy in knowing that their extemporaneous delivery has been greatly blessed to many of God's people, who have been by means of them led to make a more perfect consecration of themselves to God, by breaking away from the subtle compromises of half-heartedness and semi-worldliness, and coming 'Out of Egypt.'"

THE CHRISTIAN CHOIR.

A Quarto Volume of Music and Words,

BY

IRA D. SANKEY and J. McGRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

This Volume, which is largely composed of NEW SACRED SONGS, DUETS, CHORUSES and ANTHEMS, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

"DR. BARNARDO'S HOMES."

ANNUAL THANKSGIVING FÊTE,

IN COMMEMORATION OF

THE OPENING OF THE BOYS' HOME (Fourteen Years Ago),

WILL BE HELD (D.V.)

On TUESDAY, the 8th JULY, 1884, in the Enlarged Buildings and Grounds of the BOYS' HOME in Stepney Causeway, E.

At Three o'clock p.m. the doors of the Home will be opened, from which hour until nine p.m. the boys can be seen—

On Parade at Drill,
At Work in the different Workshops,
In the Lower School-room at Lessons,
On the Orchestra, Singing,
In the Gymnasium at Athletic Sports,
In the Tea-room at the Evening Meal,
In the Swimming Bath, and Later on in Bed, "tucked in" for the night.

The sick children can be seen during the afternoon in their LITTLE HOSPITAL opposite the Boys' Home.

During the course of the day the following Meetings will be held :—

At Five o'clock.

The HON. A. F. KINNAIRD will preside, and the DIRECTOR will give a brief account of the Home during the past twelve months. Addresses will also be given by the Rev. Dr. MCAUSLANE, Mr. S. G. SHEPPARD, and other gentlemen.

At Half past Six.

Ample REFRESHMENTS will be provided for all at the EDINBORO' CASTLE, a few minutes' walk from the Boys' Home, at very reasonable charges.

At Eight o'clock.

A MASS MEETING will be held in the large newly erected Hall of the EDINBORO' CASTLE, brilliantly illuminated with the Electric Light. This meeting will be presided over by S. GURNEY SHEPPARD, Esq., the Chairman of the Homes, who will be supported by the Rev. E. PAXTON HOOD, the Rev. Dr. MCAUSLANE, Hon. A. F. KINNAIRD, the DIRECTOR, and several other friends of the Institutions.

700 CHILDREN from the "Homes" will sing (under the direction of Mr. JOSEPH PROUDMAN) a selection of pieces.

130 little girls who are to leave for Canada the next day will also be present at the meeting.

THE HAND-BELL RINGERS OF THE LITTLE BOYS' HOME will play.

It is designed that the first and chief note of the day's proceedings shall be one of PRAISE, praise to that All-gracious God and Heavenly Father Who has guided the whole undertaking until now, and who has graciously given the seal of His approval to an enterprise which would otherwise have been fruitless.

It has been suggested that as on former occasions COLLECTIONS or GIFTS in aid of the "Homes" might very suitably be tendered to the DIRECTOR on this day by the Visitors; but although the condition of the funds would make such a course exceedingly desirable and helpful, the Director proposes to leave it altogether to the kind feeling of his Visitors. It would, he feels, be a great pity if anyone who may not just now be prepared to give, should for that reason be kept from the "Homes." Rather let ALL friends of the work who are in London come, with gifts or without them, as they are able. A warm shake of the hands, a hearty welcome, and the exhibition of a pleasant sight to remain long in the memory, will certainly await each and all.

LET NO ONE FORGET THE HOUR, THE DAY, AND THE DATE—

TUESDAY, JULY 8, 1884,

BEGINNING WITH BOYS' PARADE AT THREE O'CLOCK.

Trains from Fenchurch Street, and all stations on the North London Line, will carry passengers every fifteen minutes to Stepney Station, which is only a few minutes' walk from the HOME. The Blackwall omnibus from Charing Cross and the Bank sets down at the very corner of Stepney Causeway. Visitors who come by the Underground line from the far West to Aldgate Station, Whitechapel, should take the Poplar tram-car, which also sets down at the corner of Stepney Causeway.

A charge of 6d. per head will be made for admission, to defray the special expenses of the day.

All postal communications should be addressed to

MAGNETISM IN RELATION TO THE TREATMENT OF PARALYSIS.

To such as almost despair of human skill, a door of hope yet remains open, because health has been regained in many instances, although patient and medical adviser had agreed in the verdict "incurable"—often a true verdict in reference to the means previously tried, as we too well know; but since we now understand what a superhuman power or influence may effect in the treatment of chronic diseases, a new phase of argument and treatment becomes possible, because there are means which, while essentially superhuman, are not supernatural, and which, though superhuman in their origin because not man-invented, are, nevertheless, man-controlled; and where is the chronic sufferer who, on reflection, does not perceive for himself the peculiar adaptation of the superhuman force or influence of Electricity to his requirements, especially as Nature and Art now combine to supply it? Life seems languishing, the ailment seems to gain strength for lack of such an energiser as the Odic influence of Magneto-Electricity has proved itself to be. The natural adaptation of this life-giving element, so unique in its simplicity and effectiveness, quickly aids the flagging energies of an invalid, and ensures such aid as is within the limits of the possible.

From C. W. BARNETT, Esq., Nottinghill, Belfast.

"I have much pleasure in testifying to the great good I have experienced from Magnetic Treatment. Your appliances have completely cured me from threatened total paralysis of lower limbs, which sad fate was plainly stated would be my lot by one of the most eminent medical men in Belfast, and this opinion was shared by many other first-class doctors, who told me that in my lower limbs I would be eventually thoroughly paralysed. I can unhesitatingly assert that I have been thoroughly cured by your various Magnetic appliances, and by them alone. Both brain and body are in a more healthy condition than ever before. I am truly thankful for this more than restored health, and never more cheerfully did I draw a cheque as enclosed."

Having spent many years of patient, laborious, and continued study in adapting his treatment to some of the most obscure and intractable affections, Mr. Garratt now claims, as the result of his professional career, to have attained a success unparalleled in the healing art. Those who desire further information on his method of treatment should peruse his essays, explaining the radical effect of Magnetism upon the human organism in health and disease. It is Mr. Garratt's careful study to adapt the remedy to the requirements of each case—a practice based upon the principles laid down in his published essays, which can be obtained post free on application. He will always be happy to confer with any scientific or medical gentlemen, either personally or by letter, upon any phase of the subject, or any case for treatment, and will send a private list of 950 names as referees to any address.—B. Copson Garratt, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

NEW BOOKS.

SUNFLOWERS. A Story of To-day. By G. C. Gedge. With Four Illustrations. Crown 8vo., 3s. 6d. cloth boards.

This is the first of a series of books intended for adults rather than children. Large numbers of young people, as well as readers of older growth, give up much of their time to fiction. In this series an attempt will be made to supply books which shall not only interest as well-written stories that afford studies of character and descriptions of events and scenes likely to rivet the attention, but which shall also stimulate the serious thought, and develop the better nature of those into whose hands they fall. Other volumes will soon be published.

CAROLA. By Hesba Stretton, Author of "Bede's Charity," "Cobwebs and Cables," "Jessica's First Prayer," &c. With Four Illustrations. Crown 8vo., 3s. 6d. cloth boards.

A story exhibiting all the well-known characteristics of this popular writer. It sets forth very powerfully the influence of the New Testament upon a fresh and vigorous mind, wholly unacquainted with the facts of our Lord's Life. It forms a companion volume to "Sunflowers."

SHADOWS. Scenes in the Life of an Old Arm-Chair. By Mrs. O. F. Walton, Author of "Peep Behind the Scenes," "Saved at Sea," "Christie's Old Organ," &c. Illustrated. Imperial 16mo. 4s cloth boards, gilt edges.

A new story by this widely-known writer. The pathos of the story is very tender and powerful, and the incidents are worked out in a masterly way.

THE WYCLIFFE QUINCENTENARY.

WYCLIFFE ANECDOTES. Compiled by the Rev. S. G. Green, D.D. Uniform with the "Luther Anecdotes." With views of Wycliffe Church and of the River Swift at Lutterworth. 16mo., 1s. 6d., cloth boards.

LIFE AND TIMES OF WYCLIFFE. New Edition of "The Morning Star of the Reformation, with Portrait, Illustrations, and fac-simile of Wycliffe's Bible. Crown 8vo. 2s. 6d. cloth, boards, gilt edges.

The Christian.

HOLD FAST! HOLD FORTH!

By Rev. J. J. LUCE.

"WHAT shall we do when Mr. Moody is gone?" is the echo of a cry which has been heard very often in London recently. We can hardly wonder at such lamentation. So much joyous enthusiasm has been kindled during this happy Mission, so much blessing has been received, that, now it has come to a close, it is very natural, especially for the converts and workers, to feel sore and desolate. And this feeling calls for more than respect; it deserves our warm Christian sympathy.

There is, however, a danger against which we must be prepared. It is the danger of losing our first faith and our first love—of departing from the living God. After such a time of blessing as we have had, we can hardly fail to hear of "reactions." And this reaction may prove a very serious temptation and difficulty to many souls, as much may depend upon the way in which we meet such seasons of trial.

Immediately after his baptism, our Blessed Lord was led by the Spirit into the wilderness, to be tempted of the devil. This was the first event after his glorious "sealing" by God the Father. After blessing came testing. But what followed? Testimony for God in the power of the Spirit. "Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit." The testing-time is always meant to be a stepping-stone to higher blessing. It is not enough to have received the Holy Spirit; we must also know the power of the Spirit. It is through the pathway of temptation we are led to the knowledge of his mighty power. And so we are fitted for a life of service in fellowship with Christ. Christians! put that down as the Divine order for your growth in grace—Blessing, Testing, Power, Service.

HOLD FAST YOUR FIRST FAITH.

Do not give way to discouragement. Remember that all discouragement comes from the devil. Fling it back to him. God rebukes, corrects, chastens, but never discourages. Oh, settle that well in your hearts. Flee from the temptation to discouragement as you would flee from the old serpent. To trust our God is a duty, it is not only a privilege. We are commanded to trust Him, and should be very careful not to disobey the command. And to trust God is a very easy thing. Who, like Him, is worthy of our confidence? He loves to be trusted, and is grieved when his people do not trust Him. It was unbelief that kept Israel of old out of Canaan. It is unbelief that keeps Christians now from the enjoyment of "the land of corn and wine." May you never know what it is to live in the wilderness. "I will trust and not be afraid." Let that be your fixed determination. Again.—

HOLD FAST YOUR FIRST LOVE.

"Keep close to Jesus," said a Christian brother to me many years ago, as he grasped my hand at parting. Those words have been ringing in my ears, and fastened upon my heart, ever since. Why was it, do you suppose, that the Lord sent such a message as this from heaven to the Church of Ephesus: "I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love"? Why should He make so much of that? Because He values very highly, that first love. He wants that love to be deepened and increased, it is true; but it must always be the same first love. It must never fail. There must be no break. There is something so fresh, so real, so natural, so true in the first love. It is the love of a contrite heart. It is the love of a believing heart. It is the love of a true heart. Hold it fast. Do not let it go. Do not let the devil rob you of it. You know how he beguiled Eve. He injected into her mind a doubt concerning God's Word, and a suspicion concerning God's love, and she was taken in. He will take you in, if you will let him. Watch against the first suggestion of mistrust of God's love. He always loves his people, whether they realise it or not.

Then, as we hold fast, we should also hold forth.

HOLD FORTH THE WORD.

Be a lighthouse for Jesus. There are souls in danger all around you, tossed on the waves of this troublesome world. Tell them what you know. Do not wait until you know everything. One reason why there are Christians with bad digestion is this: they are always feeding upon the Word, but never giving out to others. They do not work. If we have the light, we must let it shine for the benefit of others. The tiny glow-worm is out of sight, hidden in the grass of the hedge; but its little light shines brightly, and cheers and guides the pilgrim in the night. Let it be so with us. We must be out of sight, but we must shine for Jesus. And we can do that well by "holding forth the Word of Life."

But there are two ways of holding forth the Word, both of which should be exhibited in our lives. One is the testimony of our walk, and the other the testimony of our talk. Jesus said to the demoniac of Gadara, after he was saved, "Go and tell" (Mark v. 19); and He also said, "Show" (Luke viii. 39) "how great things God hath done unto thee." The two must go together. Let all see you practising what you preach. It is a living Word you are to hold forth. Oh, let it be a living reality in your heart and conduct! And then let it be the Word itself that you hold forth, not your views and opinions, or feelings about it. Have full confidence in the Word of God. Do not try to defend it. It can well look after itself. Let it speak for itself; let it tell its own tale. Hold it forth fearlessly, with the confidence of one who knows that it is "the Sword of the Spirit."

Christian, "let no man take thy crown!" It is there, it is there for thee. But oh, beware, lest the spoilers rob thee of it! Hold fast; hold forth, "till the Lord come!"

THE MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

"DO not prophesy until you know," is a shrewd American axiom which has often been justified by experience. For example: At a meeting preliminary to the recent Mission on the Thames Embankment, a clergyman, whose familiarity with the crowded centre of London gave weight to his opinion, prognosticated immense overflows; but the result proved that there were smaller overflows on the Embankment than there had been in some of the suburban districts. In like manner, a contemporary ventured last week a prediction as to the Mildmay Conference, that "this year, coming as it does at the close of Mr. Moody's most successful campaign, the Conference is certain to assemble larger and more interested congregations than at any period in its past history." The event proved that the numbers were smaller than last year; and as many who were frequently at the Temple Gardens Hall were not at Mildmay, it is not unreasonable to conclude that the circumstance which was relied upon as likely to crowd the Conference had, in fact, a contrary effect. Of course it is easy to be wise after the event, but it now seems quite intelligible that after the vigorous and incessant meetings of the past eight months, with their absorbing interest, the gatherings at Mildmay, following them so closely as scarcely to afford breathing time between, should have been somewhat less crowded than in the previous year. The Hall was well filled on each occasion, but there were no overflow meetings, as in 1883.

Now that another, the twenty-eighth, of these annual assemblages has come and gone, we have once more been reminded that our life is even a vapour, which appeareth for a little time and then vanisheth away. For where are those with whom we used to go up to this house of God in company? The fathers, where are they? and the prophets, do they live for ever? William Pennefather, and Turner, of Malvern, and Charles Hargrove, and Mrs. Daniell, of Aldershot, and Lord Farnham, and Henry Bewley, and Thomas Smithies, and many another whose voice or face was familiar at Barnet and at Mildmay, have entered into rest. And those who still are found there, how changed and changing are we! And as we see the once strong men bow themselves, and the grinders cease because they are few, and the almond tree flourish, and the children grow up to take the parents' places, how we learn to know our frame, and to remember that we are dust.

This year, in addition to the knowledge of ourselves thus annually forced upon us, we have been called to consider that deepest and farthest-reaching of all subjects, The Knowledge of God. If the Mildmay Conference should continue to the end of this century, or even of the next, and were to have no other subject brought before it, all that would have been said would only have touched the hem of its garment, but never without virtue flowing out; for "this is life eternal, to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent."

No other subject is worth considering, for the knowledge of God includes all knowledge and all wisdom. The loss of this knowledge was the penalty which man paid for eating, at the bidding of the tempter, of "the tree of the knowledge of good and evil." This was Jehovah's controversy with Israel—that there was no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land. This was the covering cast over all people, and the veil spread over all nations, which the only-begotten Son of God removed by revealing the Father, swallowing up death in victory, and wiping away tears from off all faces of those who receive the knowledge of God in Him. This, as the Chairman well pointed out, was Israel's "offence:" that they rejected the knowledge of God; this is Israel's hope: that they shall look on Him whom they pierced, and cry, "My God, we know Thee!" This was the curse of the ancient world: that "they did not like to retain God in their knowledge;" this is the promise and the hope of the coming age: "They shall not teach every man his neighbour and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord! for all shall know Me, from the least to the greatest; for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea."

Much precious truth, as our readers will perceive, was well and wisely spoken. May we all, as the result, grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, filled with the knowledge of his will in all wisdom and spiritual understanding, that we may walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being fruitful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God. To Him be glory, both now and for ever. Amen.

Mr. Arnot in Central Africa.

MANY of your readers who feel interested in the Dark Continent will be glad to hear that letters have again been received from my son, F. S. Arnot, up to Christmas, 1883. He was in better health, though still subject to repeated attacks of fever, and was living in a better house with more comfort. He writes:—

"You will be surprised to hear that the King has declared that Sunday is to be kept among his people: no work is to be done but all must listen to me that day, or rather, answer to my call. I never once proposed such a thing to him, dreading lest I should be building up a false religion of law and form, with no Christ as the root and foundation of all. He, however, knew I spent that day quietly, and a good deal alone, so a short time ago he asked about it. I told him that it was the Lord's day, and that his people did not work on that day, but sought to spend it for the Lord. He then said he and his people would have to do the same!! Oh, how easy it is for the natural heart of man to fall into forms, keeping of days, saying of prayers (the king and many here pray to the one God), anything and everything but submission to the lowly and rejected One."—Yours faithfully,

W. Arnot.

A TALE OF THE JAFFA MISSION.

By Miss WALKER ARNOTT.

THOSE who have read my little account of Hunneh Wakeely will perhaps be interested in hearing of another Hunneh, the niece of the former, who has also we trust gone home to be with Jesus. It is just sixteen years since the elder Hunneh died. It was she who brought her little niece to me and said she hoped she would grow up a true Christian, and meet her in heaven.

Little Hunneh was six when her aunt died. She continued to come to the day-school, though irregularly, as her attendance depended entirely on her father's whims. He had always been a hard, selfish man, who cared little for his wife and children except in so far as they promoted his own selfish ends. Poor Hunneh as she grew older was becoming more and more the household drudge, though there was no necessity for it. At last her visits to the school almost ceased.

When she found I was beginning to receive a few children as boarders, she set her heart on being one of them, and after a good deal of difficulty and much persuasion gained her father's consent. I think I see her still as she came to tell me of her success. I was standing in the court of the old house in the town when I saw a little figure come tripping upstairs carrying a bed on her head. She threw her burden down at my feet, and began capering about scarcely able to speak for joy. When I asked the meaning of this strange performance, she informed me with great glee that her father had at last consented to her coming, that she had brought her bed, and in a few days her clothes would be ready, and she would come. "But the contract," I said; "I cannot take you unless your father agrees to sign that." "Oh, he will do it," she cried; "I will persuade him." After demurring a little he did sign the contract, and Hunneh to her great joy was admitted.

She was then ten years old. Poor girl, as she grew older, she showed unmistakable symptoms of the same heart affection and consumptive tendency from which her aunt had suffered. Indeed, her resemblance to her in features, figure, and other respects, was very striking. We thought we should have lost her in the spring of 1876, when she was about fifteen; but, through careful nursing, she rallied, though she was never afterwards the same, and often suffered a good deal.

She continued with us till the summer of 1881, when her father would not allow her to remain any longer in the school, and, besides, she had to take care of her mother, who was ill for a long time. A few months later the father insisted that Hunneh should marry, and made a pretence of asking my consent. Of course I said all I could to persuade him to leave her in peace, but I might as well have talked to a stone, for he either could not or would not believe how ill she was, and was only bent on carrying out his own selfish plans. All I gained was a promise that he would wait for a few months, hoping that by that time something would make him change his mind. Being obliged to leave for Europe, on account of health, it was not in my power to do more, and poor Hunneh was at last forced to yield to her father's wishes.

Her husband was very kind to her at first, but six months ago he went off and left her, when he saw how ill and suffering she was, and from that time she was with her parents. All last winter she was getting worse, and often expressed a great longing to come back to us. The day before we closed school for the Easter holidays a message came begging me to go at once, as Hunneh was dying, and wished to see me. When I went I found her very low, but ill and weak though she was she pleaded piteously to be taken to the school.

Her aunt Regina, who is a Protestant, had been sitting with her all the morning, and from her I learnt that Hunneh had had a most trying time. When the neighbours heard how much worse she was, they came flocking in, and, oh, how they teased her, wishing her to have a priest, uncovering her feet to see how they were swollen, pulling her about, shaking their heads, and talking about her till she got quite frightened, and once, when she fainted, they began screaming and wailing, thinking she was dead. It is the custom here when anyone is ill for every body to flock to see them, and instead of the poor patient getting peace and quiet and a chance to recover, these people fill up the room, all talking and making the sick one talk, and when you ask "Why do the near relatives let them in? the answer is "Oh, it is a shame to refuse them; and if you do, they say most unkind things." I believe the end of many a sick person is hastened through this foolish custom, and the wonder is that anyone recovers at all.

Regina used all her influence to keep the people out and make them quiet, and at last sent for me. It went to my heart to hear poor Hunneh's piteous cry, "Do take me from amongst these people; let me come and die in the school." I was afraid lest she should die on the way to it, and feared to have her moved, but she revived a good deal while I was sitting beside her, and I promised that if she could reach the school I would certainly receive her and take care of her. The next morning she was brought to us, after having had a better night, and it seemed as if supernatural strength was given to her to make this effort to escape from her most painful and trying surroundings. We prepared for her our outer schoolroom close to the house, and her mother was with her at night, whilst some of us looked after her during the day. Oh, how happy she was to find herself amongst us, and how full of gratitude. It seemed as if she could not thank us enough for every little thing done for her, and how delighted she was to hear the Bible read, and to have us pray with her—she appeared to drink in every word greedily.

The change did her good, and for two or three days she rallied, but on the evening of the fourth day, Easter Sunday, we noticed she was not so well, and very restless and breathless. At her request the girls sang one hymn after another to her, but the one which she especially liked was: "There is rest for the weary," in Arabic. The hymns seemed to have a very soothing effect on her, and they did sound so sweet in that sick room. I then read Rev. vii. 9 to the end, and I was struck with the eager way in which she drank in every word. She had no wish to recover, just longed to go away and rest with Jesus.

She expressed a great wish to commemorate once more her Saviour's dying love. Last summer she, with four of the girls, became members of our Protestant Church, but since that occasion ill-health had prevented her attending the services. I made known her request to Mr. Hall, and on Monday afternoon he came, and several of us joined with her in that holy ordinance. It was a very sweet and solemn time, for we felt we were on the threshold of the unseen world, and that one of our number was about to pass away from our sight into the presence of Jesus. After it was over she looked up with such a bright, happy face, her eyes shining with the joy in them, and soon after she said: "I don't want anything more in this world; I just want to go away to Jesus. Do ask Him to come and take me soon." As the day wore on it was evident that the end was drawing nigh, and at intervals her sufferings were great; but she was perfectly conscious to the last. Several times that last evening she said to me, imploringly: "Do you think it will be long now? Do ask Jesus to come soon." And once she stretched out both hands towards the door, saying: "Come, oh, Jesus, come!" I felt very unwilling to leave her, but she and the others were distressed at my sitting up, so towards midnight I yielded to Hunneh's oft-repeated entreaty: "Enough, Muahinty; you have done enough for me. Go and rest now."

My sister, who had taken some rest, remained with her after I left (the other two ladies were in Jerusalem at the time), and one of the girls especially was a great comfort to her that night. It was Freedy, the infant-school teacher. To her it was especially given to accompany her friend and companion, as it were, hand in hand to the very borders of the dark river; cheering her, praying with her, and repeating to her the verses and hymns which she so loved to hear. She had never seen death before, and when all was over, she looked up to my sister, who was at her side, and said: "Is this death? Oh, how beautiful to die!" Freedy's account of these last hours was very touching. Often as she grew weaker they could not make out what she said, could only catch the name of Jesus, and sometimes she murmured something about "the white robes" and "the crown of life." Once she said, "Put them aside for a little, I shall soon want them." Another time she said, "I am well now; I have no more pain; I am very happy." And again, "It is near, I am going to heaven." She urged her mother to put all her trust in Christ, and said, "We shall see each other again; try to come after me." At the last she asked again for the hymn, "There is Rest for the Weary." Freedy steadied her voice, and sang two verses, and my sister said the words rang out very clearly and sweetly through the sick-room. At the end of the second chorus Hunneh took up the words and repeated, "Rest for me; yes, I am rested now," and soon a smile passed over her face, and she looked upwards and said, "I am going to heaven," and she was gone.

It was just about the dawn when her spirit passed away, and the last notes of the hymn sung on earth were exchanged for the song of the redeemed in glory. That was a very wonderful day. At first I thought there might be a demand for her to be buried in the Greek cemetery, and if so I should have made no opposition; but during the night she herself had expressed a wish to lie in the Protestant cemetery near the school, and her parents said it must be according to her wish. A great many people came that day when they heard of her death, especially women, and the room where she lay was quite full, but everything was so quiet. The usual custom is a great outburst of wailing at every fresh arrival, and we had dreaded it; but instead of this there was a hush over all, and the girls went in and out, and whenever there was any loud outburst of sorrow they sang hymns, and all was again quiet. Again and again the women asked for another hymn, and then the girls told them what Hunneh had said, and repeated the verses which had comforted her. There they were, quietly listening, many of them with the tears running down their cheeks. I went into the room several times, and as I looked at the strange scene I could not but feel that the Great Teacher Himself was there, and earnestly I hoped that many present would never forget the lessons taught that day. I think some were a good deal impressed. Not a few I am sure had come out of curiosity "to see what the Protestants did." And one or more said afterwards: "When my time comes, I wish I might come here and die as Hunneh died."

She was laid in the grave at five o'clock that afternoon, April 15, and at the service the hymn which she had last heard was sung. Afterwards at the grave the girls sang in English, "Peacefully lay her down to rest," &c., one of the hymns in our service of song, Eva. They had often sung the words before, but they never had to them the reality which they had that day as they sang with low, subdued voices by the open grave of their friend and companion. We thought they sounded particularly sweet and touching, especially the refrain: "Peacefully sleep, peacefully sleep, sleep till that morning, peacefully sleep."

Orphans at Walthamstow.

IN the face of the terrible facts revealed by the daily papers, deeds committed by children and young girls which might only be expected from those grown old in crime, we cannot overstate the importance of taking hold of the children while yet of tender years, and implanting as early as may be the principles of God's truth and love as their guide hereafter.

This is the work we are doing in our Orphan Home at Walthamstow. Thank God, He has sealed it with his best of blessings—the salvation of many souls. It cheers our hearts wonderfully in the midst of work to see the fruits of the new life, in softened temper and subdued will, and to hear in the little prayer-meetings confession and testimony from the babes in Christ. "Oh, Lord, I thank thee That I now know all my sins are forgiven, and that I am Thy child, but I could not have said this last year," was the utterance of one who has since gone into service at a distance.

Another, who has been in her first place more than two years, came "Home" to spend her holiday at Easter, maintaining a good character, not only as a servant, but as a Christian. Two more are going out next week, both, I truly believe, saved. I was asked the other day, "And do you find it an encouraging work?" I could only say, "Indeed it is most encouraging; our girls as a rule do well in service, and many souls have been saved."

Our Home is full, and our children in health with the exception of one or two weakly ones. I am sorry to say we are urgently in need of money to meet our many current expenses; beside this, the premises sorely need some cleansing and "doing up" to maintain the healthy condition of the children. Will you, dear friends, become "partners" in this work? We want about £100 to clear our way and go forward.—Yours in Christ's service,

M. A. Parsons.

KILBURN HOUSE OF REST.—Before your kind notice about the £250 appeared in The Christian, another gentleman had offered the second £250 to make up the last instalment. So the matter stands thus—one friend offers £250 towards the first instalment of £500, and another friend £250 towards the last instalment. If these two "extremes" can be made to "meet" in special donations to the amount of £500, the whole of the mortgage will be paid off. Speedy help in this matter would remove a burden from the heart of yours very truly, Charlotte Mason.

Teachers in the Southern States.

Friends may be interested in the following extracts from a letter of Alida Clark, who with her husband has been so long devoting time and energies for the training of coloured teachers in the Southern States. The undersigned would be very pleased to receive any contributions for this object.—James Clark, Street, Somerset.

OUR school has been very large, over 300 enrolled, and 82 boarders; of these 35 belong to the normal class, and four students graduate in the normal course at the close of the term, June 15. Had it not been for the fund received from your side none of these could have remained in the school to become so thorough, for they are half orphans (one girl is both fatherless and motherless), and promise the greatest efficiency.

These people for whom we are labouring are the poorest of earth's poor, a despised race; and now this day their old masters and owners are as bitterly opposed to the elevation of the negro, and even more so than ever before. Only three white women of this Southern land have ever given me a friendly shake of the hand, or an invitation to their homes, or noticed me.

I want a place to gather these young people together, in family capacity, for instruction and teaching on common things and duties of life; when we go to the school or meeting-room for this purpose they lose their family character. But we can only proceed as we get the money. I am distressed about the girls' old plank barrack quarters, leaking and rotting down, and we have not money enough to build yet.

Pumphrey Hall is just nice, and we need such a one for the girls. For all this we greatly need money help. My dear husband and self give ourselves, our time, energies, and some money in the field; yet without the generous contributions of the friends of our cause, and of the race, very small results will appear.

Our series of meetings, in which I was engaged twenty-seven nights, were greatly blessed in every way. Souls were born unto Christ's Kingdom, and at Hickory Ridge we opened our rebuilt meeting-house; and in two weeks' time 91 souls were blessed.

The Effect of a Word.

A FEW months ago a prominent member of the community of Motherwell N.B) was at a conference in Edinburgh; while there he heard Miss McLean speak on the privilege and duty of entire consecration to Christ's service. He was convinced, and returned home with new ideas of his position as a Christian and with a desire to make known to others the cause of his new-found joy. He spoke to those with whom he came in contact, a spirit of inquiry sprang up, and Miss McLean was invited to visit the town. She came, stayed for two weeks, and the Master used her wonderfully; many who had been living cold and indifferent were quickened and led to give themselves up wholly to Christ. As a natural consequence, there came the determination to do something for the outcasts. A series of meetings was arranged, Mr. Dunn, evangelist, came and took the lead; for a month he addressed large audiences every night. The meetings were specially good on Sabbath nights, when over 1200 people were gathered together in the largest hall in the town.

The results of the work will never be known; many were converted, many professed conversion, and many were quickened into more active life. Through domestic affliction Mr. Dunn was forced to leave, the work dropped for a little, but has just been taken up again by Mr. Mitchell, evangelist. The workers ask for the prayers of the Lord's people on these meetings.

THE CHURCH ARMY.—Stations of the Church Army have just been opened at Kendal, Newcastle, Lambeth, Bermondsey, Forest Gate, and Barnsley. Many others are only waiting a sufficient supply of suitable officers to commence.

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—July 6, 2 Sam. vii. 1—17; July 7, 2 Sam. vii. 18—29; July 8, 2 Sam. ix. 1—13; July 9, 2 Sam. xii. 1—14; July 10, 2 Sam. xii. 15—23; July 11, 2 Sam. xiii. 37—39; July 11, 2 Sam. xiv. 1—11; July 12, 2 Sam. xiv. 12—24.

Notes and Comments.

THE name of Wiclif it appears has been spelt in more than fifty different ways in the many MSS. and records which exist relating to his history. Dr. Buddensieg, of Dresden, helps to solve the mystery as to which way is right, by calling attention to the fact that in the two oldest authorities extant, Wiclif is the form adopted. One of these is the Royal mandate of July 26, 1374, appointing him one of the Bruges Embassy delegated to confer with the Pope. The other is an extract from the official registers of Oxford University, dated 1363-4.

Tunbridge Wells has just been the scene of sad and disgraceful proceedings in connection with a Secularist propaganda. An open-air meeting was convened on the Sunday afternoon by the local Secular Society, to be addressed by Mr. Ramsey, of the Freethinker, and others, on the blasphemy laws and kindred topics. Thousands of people were gathered together, and scenes of disorder and tumult soon presented themselves. A spirit of sturdy opposition to the abominable doctrines of Secularism widely manifested itself. Fighting and wild disorder generally prevailed. One of the speakers declared that the writings of Huxley, the researches of Darwin, and the speculations of Tyndall, had done more for them in the last twenty-five years than had been done in a century before. It is a fact of ominous significance that the spirit of lawlessness, prompted by infidelity, should thus assert itself in our land as well as abroad.

"How much is a man better than a sheep?" was a question once raised by our Lord, and is one some people might still consider with advantage to themselves and others. At the Eckington Petty Sessions, recently, a farmer was charged with beating a lad in his employ until he was "covered with enormous weals all over," his right arm being so injured that he has been unable to use it since. The superintendent of police, in giving evidence, is reported to have said: "Had the victim been a horse or a cow I should certainly have taken action against the defendant for cruelty; it was the grossest case of the kind I have ever known." As it was, the farmer must be congratulated that it was only a boy. Had it been an animal his punishment would have been severe. Although the medical evidence, and all the circumstances, proved it a most brutal case, the farmer was let off with a fine of ten shillings. English law is only too often proving itself to be anything but synonymous with righteousness.

Such a case as the above, which is but one of many instances of strange license given to brutality in the treatment of youthful offenders, makes the increase of Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children a cause for rejoicing. One is about to be formed for London, where there is a fearful amount of child-misery through harsh and unjust treatment. Miss Hesba Stretton and other influential workers have espoused this good cause, which is to be pleaded at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, on July 8. Similar societies exist in Liverpool, as well as in many towns of the United States. There is ample ground for encouraging their spread in all parts of our own land.

The Liverpool Society has in the past six months found ample scope for its operations. It has dealt with 211 complaints of cruelty, involving the welfare of 378 children. By these we learn that 50 had suffered from beating; 106 had been cruelly neglected or starved; while 57 had been sent out begging by day and 100 at night. Among other facts elicited were these, that parents earning twenty-five shillings a week were sending out their children to beg: and able-bodied men and women were neglecting all work and compelling their children to support them. By so much as London is larger than Liverpool, will similar work be found in abundance for a Metropolitan Society.

M. Norza, a distinguished Italian barrister, has just written a pamphlet of great interest, entitled, "The Progress of International Arbitration in Italy." It shows that that kingdom has done much to uphold and advance the principle of Arbitration versus War, the faithful, eloquent, and persevering efforts of Signor Maricini having been very productive of good in that direction. Treaties have been negotiated by him as Foreign Minister with Greece, Switzerland, Roumania, Montenegro, the Republics of San Domingo and Uruguay, &c., in all which a clause is inserted to the effect that in case of any dispute arising no recourse shall be had to the use of arms until the matter has been submitted to the judgment of some friendly and neutral nation whose decision shall be obligatory.

Everything which facilitates the study of the Bible is to be accepted with thankfulness. Among the latest additions to the numerous aids now furnished, is "The Courier Bible Aid and Reading Marker," published by Messrs. Unwin Brothers, Ludgate-hill. The compiler is the Rev. C. Neil, M.A., of Poplar, who purposes to complete a series of these really valuable helps to intelligent study of Holy Writ. The first deals with the Books of Kings and Chronicles, and treats most efficiently the many chronological and historical difficulties they present. Printed neatly on card, the tables of dates, events, and references are so arranged as to furnish ready information at a glance. Sunday-school teachers and Bible students generally will be thankful for such a simple and comprehensive guide.

The British Association for the Advancement of Science will meet in Montreal during the month of August. More than a thousand members have signified their intention to be present. Among the subjects to be discussed are—The Native Races of America, American Civilisation before Columbus, Archæology of North America, European Colonisation and its Effects on the Native Tribes of America, Economic Science, Emigration, Distribution of Wealth, Condition of the Poor, &c.

The Court of Queen's Bench, by its decision in the Park Club case, has given a decided blow to public gambling. It is now declared to be illegal for clubs to be formed for the purpose of playing cards and other games for stakes, Mr. Justice Hawkins alleging that all such institutions can be indicted at common law as a nuisance. The more widely this is understood and acted upon the better for all classes of society. Too much publicity cannot be given to the fact that the laws of England prohibit the practice of gaming or betting in public, whether through social institutions called clubs or in any other way.

One of the crying evils of the times is the system of gambling in business, which extensively obtains in commercial circles. Old habits of business life are exchanged for fast and reckless speculations, which have no foundation in truth or righteous regard to the welfare of others. The consequences are not only the deadening of moral sensibilities in the individual, but the destruction of social confidence. Making haste to be rich is a sin from which all may well pray to be delivered, inasmuch as it lies at the root of innumerable evils, and drowns men in destruction and perdition.

The story of the Florence Night Mission of New York is one of deep interest. It originated in the efforts of Mr. Smith Allen, who has consecrated his life to its objects, and been the means of rescuing hundreds of girls from unutterable misery, as well as of pointing more than a hundred others on a dying bed to Christ. A rich man in the city had a beautiful child named Florence, who died when only three years old. He resolved that the fortune which would have been spent on her should be devoted to Mr. Allen's noble work, and so leased a large building, and furnished it as a Rescue Home. The first month sixteen were saved from the streets, and last year there were registered 7,793 attendances of young women at religious meetings in connection with the institution, many of whom were saved. At one end of the room used for services is a portrait of little Florence, which has touched many a heart, and led some to repentance. So much has Mr. Allen been blessed in New York, that he is now engaged in starting a similar work in Chicago.

The appointment of a Royal Commission, or some competent body, to inquire into the modes of instruction, training, and employment of the blind, which are now in force, is, in the face of existing facts, eminently desirable. That out of 30,000 blind members of our population only about 800 should be actually at work is a serious evil; the more so as it is clearly shown by Dr. Campbell's admirable experiments in the Royal Normal College at Norwood that the blind are as capable of developing the qualities requisite for self-support as others are. Mr. Fawcett, M.P., speaking on this subject at Grosvenor House last week, said that no greater kindness could be shown the blind than to provide them with means of self-help. The truest charity is that which lifts its objects out of the sphere in which they need charity. The best help is that which enables men to help themselves.

Convalescent Homes for the deserving poor who have suffered from sickness, are worthy of warmest support. Helpful as they are, the small amount required to obtain their advantages is far beyond the means of thousands of sufferers. Many to whom God has given means to enjoy summer recreation and change of air, would find it add zest to their enjoyment if they first sought out opportunities to help some of the poor and needy who pine for change and relief.

"The quality of mercy is not strained—
It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blessed—
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes."

An appeal has reached us on behalf of the City-road Convalescent Fund. The treasurer is Mr. J. J. Yeo, 79, Upper-street, Islington, N., by whom donations will be thankfully received.

"Napoleon began this century; who will finish it? A king, or the government of the multitude?" So queried Père Hyacinthe when speaking the other day at the International Peace Association. The question to students of prophecy is of deep and stirring interest, and the answer laden with issues at once momentous and comprehensive. That Europe is rapidly drifting in the direction of government by the multitude is evident; the iron is manifestly mixed with miry clay, and the ruling powers are mingling themselves with the seed of men. That the ultimatum will be the establishment of the Kingdom of God in the earth none can doubt.

The third annual meeting of the International Arbitration and Peace Association has just been held, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury. Among the speakers who advocated the cause were Professor Thorold Rogers, M.P., the Marquis of Bristol, Dr. Fraser, Père Hyacinthe, and others. The next International Conference of the Association is to be held at Berne on August 4, and five following days. Two allied societies have been formed in Paris—one for the middle classes and the other for operatives. It was stated that steps are being taken by the committee to bring about a conference between Englishmen and Frenchmen as to the course which should be adopted in reference to Egyptian difficulties.

A somewhat novel title for a Mission organisation is that of the Plenty of Work Society. This is, however, the name of an association started in connection with Collier's-rents in the Borough. The object is to induce and assist the poor of the neighbourhood to emigrate to spheres where profitable employment may easily be found, and the helplessly indigent made self-supporting and independent. Such societies, in the hands of wise and philanthropic managers, may be of immense worth in promoting social reform. Just now, when emigration is so extensively advocated and desired, counsel is greatly needed by many as to where to go, and what to do when the destination is reached.

In a recent number we referred to the outbreak of fever in Dr. Barnardo's Village Homes, and commended him and his work to the prayerful sympathy of our readers. We deeply regret to learn that a similar trial has come to our beloved friend, Mr. George Muller, in the Orphanages at Ashley Down. For the severe strain which such circumstances occasion, our brethren require abounding grace and strength from God to sustain and direct them. Let us bear them on our hearts before God, that he may graciously uphold them and deliver them from the trouble which has come to them.

Dr. Barnardo purposes sailing for Canada on the 17th inst., in order to extend and perfect the arrangements for his emigration of young people to the Dominion. We append the particulars of various meetings he will hold previous to his departure:—

Monday, July 7.—A band of 130 girls about to sail for Canada will attend the Noon Prayer Meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street.

Wednesday, July 9.—Assembly of friends at Euston station to see the party leave for Liverpool. Tickets of admission to departure platform may be had from Dr. Barnardo, 18, Stepney-causeway, E.

Friday, July 11.—Meeting at Mansion House, 3 p.m. Addresses by Lord Mayor, Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., Bishop of Bedford, Sir Charles Tupper, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, &c.

We hope many friends of the orphans will accept Miss Mittendorff's invitation to her praise-meeting at Epsom next Wednesday, notified under "Forthcoming Meetings."

We have received copies of an address delivered at Ipswich by Mr. John Slater, of Stansfield, as President of the Suffolk Congregational Union. It gives a layman's view of some things needing attention in our churches. Among others Mr. Slater emphasises the necessity for increased attention to itinerant preaching in the villages, by leading ministers and pastors, as well as by evangelists. But a great difficulty in the way of this is found in the stiffness and formality which removes many of our modern divines from the sphere of the common people, and unfits them for going forth, as the Master did, to seek after the lost and straying. It would be well if in all our colleges attention was given to qualifying students for the ministry, for such work. Evangelistic effort, whether in the open-air or village barn, is not beneath anyone who claims to be the servant of Christ.

Mr. Slater also pleads for a wider recognition of the gifts bestowed by Christ on his Church, and specially advocates the appointment of able and experienced men to the work of visiting the churches periodically, for the purpose of counselling and encouraging them. He strikes at the root of a real evil, and suggests a practical remedy worth careful consideration when he says:—

"It is my most matured and strong conviction, confirmed by many experienced men, that, perfect as our isolated Congregational churches may be in theory, in practice they are often weak and ineffective for aggressive Christian work. They need linking together, as the primitive churches were, by 'Overseers,' 'Angels,' or 'Messengers' of the churches, and 'Evangelists.'"

The recent failure of the Benefit Penny Bank has resulted in distress to many hundreds of poor deserving people who had become depositors. Branches had been formed in Stratford, Newington, Battersea, and other places, so that the loss of hard-earned pittances which some had thriftily and with much self-denial managed to lay by, has fallen heavily on many. A protection committee has been formed, and a fund started for their relief, to which the National Thrift Society has contributed £100. It is gratifying to find that many of the sufferers have already been relieved, and we may hope the £500 still needed to reimburse the losses sustained will be provided, as the public become acquainted with the circumstances of the case.

No more needy locality supplied a contingent to the meetings on the Embankment than Drury-lane and its neighbourhood. We are glad to see that our indefatigable brother, George Hatton, has invited Richard Weaver to follow up this work among his people by a fortnight's Mission at Little Wild-street Chapel. He will be thankful for the presence of any real Christian helpers.

Our readers will learn with thankfulness to God the opinion of the eminent oculists who have been consulted, that the failure of sight from which Mrs. Evered Poole is suffering is attributable solely to an over-taxation of the nervous system, and that as strength is recovered the sight will be regained. Meanwhile, absolute rest and quiet are enjoined for months to come; and any return to the laborious work of the platform is strictly forbidden. Major Evered Poole is vigorously prosecuting his Gospel Temperance work; at present he is at Ledbury, in Herefordshire.

May we once more remind our readers of the movement for giving to the pale, drooping plants of our city population, the benefit of one "Day in the Country"? The glorious summer weather we are now enjoying is beckoning the dwellers in the town out into the green fields and shady groves; but many cannot go without the kind and thoughtful help of others more happily circumstanced. The longest day is past, and what is to be done needs to be done speedily, if it be well done.

While lords, ladies, and gentlemen have been listening to the sweet singing of Mr. Sankey, Mr. Stebbins, or Mr. McGranahan, or to the teachings of Mr. Moody or Dr. Pentecost, their splendid horses, with a few exceptions, have stood outside champing their bits, and vainly seeking relief from the torture of the bearing rein. It is the same at all places of worship, as well as all places of amusement. We should rejoice to see the élite of Christian society ceasing to illustrate the truth that "evil is wrought by want of thought, as well as want of heart." Pet dogs and pet cats are often cared for as fondly as children, while noble horses are tormented in a way that must be very grieving to the Spirit of Him whose tender mercies are over all his works.

The foregoing note was written for insertion last week, but was in some way omitted. The fact to which it alluded has been observed by others. The Christian World has the following reference to the subject in its last issue:—

"A High Barnet correspondent, who has been attending some of Mr. Moody's meetings on the Embankment, writes to us to call attention to the deplorable fact that a very large number of carriages, which had brought ladies to the meeting on Friday afternoon, were horsed by beautiful animals that were allowed to suffer for hours under the 'torture of the bearing rein.' He wonders whether the owners of these horses could be aware of this cruelty. At all events, it is urged that professing Christians are very inconsistent if they permit this suffering for the sake of appearances."

The formation in Northampton, the headquarters of the notorious infidel leader, of a Church pledged to maintain the principles of loyalty to Christ, in opposition to those of time-serving policy, is a step worthy of support. Our advertising columns last week called attention to the movement, which we rejoice to know is not a mere denominational split, but a separation of believers on the ground of sacred truth, one which has the elements of spiritual vitality, unsectarian and catholic in its spirit, evangelical and evangelistic in its methods, and prayerfully dependent on God for its success. Such stands for principle are none too common, although, if we mistake not, the signs of the times indicate that they will soon have to be made by many who at present shrink from the action which conscience increasingly urges upon them.

The Rev. H. Bradford, for whom the new chapel is being built, to which reference is made above, has lately published and redelivered by request the sermon on "Christian Separation from the World" which gave offence, and caused his retirement from the pastorate of the Princess-street Church at Northampton. It is a faithful exposition of Christian duty, and, as calculated to form right opinions on important subjects, deserves wide circulation.

SOME THINGS I SAW in CENTRAL AFRICA.

By Professor HENRY DRUMMOND.

AN ADDRESS AT MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

I HAVE not the honour of being a returned missionary. I can only tell you a few facts about one of our most important Mission fields. My object in going to Central Africa was a purely scientific one, but, of course, one cannot go anywhere now throughout the wide world without coming upon traces of God's work. I was not long, even in the most remote part of the Continent, without finding that the missionary had been there before, and had been trying to bring the people to a knowledge of God and of Christ.

Perhaps the most useful thing I could do, first of all, would be to try and sketch, for a moment, the look of the country where our Central African Mission work is carried on. One great difficulty we have about Mission work is a difficulty of imagination and of realisation—of having in our minds a living picture of the thing itself. Central Africa is one enormous forest—thousands and thousands of miles of forest, sometimes thrown into great mountains, but still covered with forest, and sometimes into long sweeping valleys. In some places there are lakes in these valleys in which England might lie. Lake Nyassa is 350 miles long. That is the region occupied by our Scotch Mission work. This forest is not a dense, dark umbrageous forest, like those in northern Europe or in America; nor is it a tangled jungle like the forests of India. It is a thin forest of small-sized trees, thin branched and thin leaved. If you try to picture that in your mind you have Central Africa as it is to-day. Thousands and thousands of miles of forest—shadeless, because the trees are too thin to keep out the rays of the tropical sun; voiceless, because the animals that inhabit it are night animals; all day long it is as silent as the grave.

Hidden away like birds' nests in a wood there are little native villages, and in these native villages you find man in his primal simplicity, without any knowledge of the great world outside, without any Sabbath, without any Bible, without any God; without any substitute for God at present. For in that part of the world they have not yet got the length of having idols. Till within the last few years they have never seen a white man. There they live like wild beasts, or like children of nature, with no care for the morrow or the future.

Three kind hands have been stretched out from my country to save that land. The first, whose name I suppose has never before been ever mentioned in a missionary meeting, is THE AFRICAN LAKES Co. That company is not composed of missionaries; it is composed of wealthy merchants. These men have their hearts in Africa. They said to themselves: "We have watched civilisation mysteriously spreading over the world, and we have noticed that wherever it has gone it has carried with it the vices of Europe. Here is a great stretch of forest land, where no white man has ever yet been. We will try to keep it pure; we will go into it ourselves; we will buy ivory from the people, and sell them cloth; we will send kind, picked men to lead them to a knowledge of God; we will keep out brandy, and gunpowder, and guns." (Applause.) They are setting themselves to do this. They have picked men wandering about those forests trying to teach the natives to trade. In some cases these men have established little Sunday-schools, and are helping the people to know about God and salvation. It is as yet a little work, but it is one worthy of honourable mention in any missionary meeting. That work is going to extend. They want to get more such picked men—men without any college training, who will go out simply as Christian business men, and show the natives what honest trading is. At present they have a monopoly; no other traders have ever set foot as yet in those regions. I believe there is a great future before this African Lakes Company, and that it is linked with the destinies of Africa.

The second hand that has been stretched out to Africa is the Mission of the ESTABLISHED CHURCH OF SCOTLAND. It has gone away up the River Zambesi, past the grave of Livingstone; up the River Shire, past the grave of Bishop Mackenzie, and planted a station a little beyond the place where the Universities Mission had to beat a retreat a few years ago. That Universities Mission I need not speak of; you all know the noble work it is doing. The Scotch Established Church has planted the Mission Station well known as Blantyre. There it has begun a useful and important work. It is only beginning, but it is on the right lines, and those who know it are watching it with much interest, hope, and prayer.

The third agency at work of which I have to speak is the Mission of the FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND. It has gone still further into the interior—away far into the Livingstone land. On the shores of Lake Nyassa it planted a station with a name that you have all heard—Livingstonia. It has placed upon the waters of Lake Nyassa a little missionary steamboat called The Ilala, after the place where David Livingstone died, as a symbol that that little steamer was to take up his work where he left it. (Applause.)

I shall never forget the Saturday afternoon when I ran into the little harbour of Livingstonia. I saw a lovely white beach rising above the waters of the lake. Upon it were planted six or seven beautiful little cottages, trim and clean; behind all there rose a vast range of granite mountains. I landed upon the strand, walked up to the largest house, and went in. There was no white man about. I looked around the place, found the furniture all there, the dishes in the cupboard, and the medicine chest in its place; but there was no inhabitant. That was the pastoral residence of Livingstonia. I went to the next house; it was a blacksmith's shop. There were the forge, the anvil, the bellows; but there was no blacksmith. The next house was the schoolroom. There were the benches and the blackboard; but there were no children, and there was no teacher. I went to house after house. They were all spotlessly clean; the doors were all open; but there was no human life there. I crossed a little valley and there, under the granite mountains, I found five graves. These were the last resting-places of the missionaries of Livingstonia. "The pestilence that walketh in darkness" had claimed its first sacrifices from our Free Church Mission. Now that station has had to be given up.

I stayed some days in the empty manse. I saw the poor natives walking about as sheep without a shepherd. I must confess it was with feelings of shame, and much doubt as to what was one's duty, that I sailed away from that plague-stricken bay on the shores of Lake Nyassa. If anyone feels it to be his duty to go there, he can walk into that empty manse, he can take up the work that has ceased in that empty schoolroom; he can go into that blacksmith's shop and teach the natives the handicraft. There is the village, and there is the open door for anyone. I doubt not the Free Church of Scotland would be rejoiced to hear of anyone who will volunteer to go and pick up the dropped threads of that work.

The missionaries went a couple of hundred miles further up to find another Livingstonia. They have succeeded in planting a station a little more healthy. The latest letters tell that a little school has been started, and a little church erected, where every Sunday 200 to 300 naked natives listen to the preaching of the Gospel in their own language. There, three or four men are at work. It is only a beginning. We must not think our missionaries have done much for that great region. As yet there are only these few men at one spot upon the whole of the western side of that enormous lake, 350 miles in length.

Before I stop I want to give a traveller's testimony to the spiritual work that is being done by these Missions. It is almost too soon to look for much result; I scarcely looked for any. But I will tell you what I found. After I went to the new Livingstonia station, whither the missionaries proceeded when they were driven from the first by the pestilence, I said to the missionary, Dr. Laws, I would like if he would give me one of his best natives. I was going for a long and lonely tour on the plateau, between Lakes Nyassa and Tanganyika, and I wanted a reliable man. There was no such person to be found outside of the Mission stations. Dr. Laws had some seven young natives who had been baptized, and he said, "You see, we are just struggling to get a foothold in this great country, and I can hardly spare one of my men. But I will give you the worst and one of the least of my youths, and you can see what missionary work in Africa has done." He gave me about the most commonplace-looking native I have ever seen. He could neither read nor write, nor speak a word of English. Dr. Laws said, "You can trust him." So he was put at the head of my little army, and away we started over the great Tanganyika plateau.

I remember the first night we pitched our tents, some dozen or fifteen miles from the shore of Lake Nyassa. The sun had gone down, and I had turned in for the night, when I was startled by hearing a peculiar sound at some little distance. It was lovely moonlight. As I drew the curtain of my tent and looked out, I saw a little group on bended knees, and in the centre of it was James, my young native convert, holding family worship. Every night on our march, no matter how far we had gone, no matter how tired we were, James gathered the little company who could understand his language, and poured out his heart in prayer to God. I have heard many prayers that have moved me, but I have never heard anything more touching than the prayers of James. He never closed without praying for the whole known world, as it was known to his simple heart. It consisted of five places. He asked God to bless Blantyre, Livingstonia, Bandawe, Tanganyika, and his native village. I have no time to tell you more about James, but I will say this of him, simply as a traveller—we know that travellers have said unkind and unjust things about missionaries—during all the time we wandered together through those forests, although he had control of everything that I had, although he could have taken many things, day by day, without my knowing it, I never knew him even to take a bead belonging to me. I never found him out in one single thing that I could have called a mistake, much less a sin.

All these things I have told you are simply beginnings. But we can go away from this meeting and this Conference believing that one day we shall hear of greater things; and as each Conference comes round we shall hear of still greater things.

A Mission Tour in Connemara.

SOME of your readers, I know, are interested in this wild district of Ireland, stained, alas! with so much blood during the past few years. It has been my privilege to take a Mission tour all through it, speaking at the Irish Church Mission stations in the following places: Oughterard, Ballinahinch, Roundstone, Moyrus, Errismore, Clifden, Ballinahill, Fellina, Cleggan, Renvyl, Aasleagh, Castlekirk, Spiddal, and Casleh-Bay. God was indeed with us, and we had quite a revival.

Not only Protestants but Roman Catholics came. I found the latter were easily reached through Mr. Sankey's hymns. At one of our meetings a Roman Catholic farmer sang "There were ninety and nine," all through, and at another wild district they came round to listen, while we sat in the open air and sang. They readily caught up the choruses, and between each verse a few pointed words were spoken, presenting a free salvation. I would ask the prayers of your readers for those who professed conversion. I hope to be able to go there again during my coming holiday.

W. SPENCER WALTON.

MILDMAY PARK CONFERENCE, 1884.

JUNE 25, 26, 27.

Subject: THE KNOWLEDGE OF GOD.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 25.

SOME time before eleven o'clock, the hour for opening the Conference, the large hall was crowded with an interested and expectant congregation. Mr. S. A. BLACKWOOD, according to the custom of past years, presided at all the morning and evening assemblies. When the clock had struck the hour, he called for a season of silent prayer; then the company joined with heart and voice in the invocation—

"Jesus, stand among us,
In thy risen power."

Rev. DANIEL WILSON, the venerable Vicar of Islington, offered the opening prayer, as he has done on many like occasions.

Mr. BLACKWOOD: A friend gave me a text this morning, which we may well take as the key-note for our Conference: "I will be a wall of fire round about them, and the glory in the midst of them." We cannot do without the protecting wall. May each individual keep within it. "Keep yourselves in the love of God," which is the wall of fire, the tender, jealous, watchful, knowledge-passing love of God. If each heart here is determined to make Him and his glory its object, then we shall realise the second promise: "I will be the glory in the midst of them." May God Himself be the glory of this Conference, and the glory of every heart here.

CHAIRMAN'S OPENING ADDRESS.

After further singing, the Chairman read Exodus vi., beginning at verse 2. Commenting upon the passage, he said—

Seven "I wills,"—I will bring you out, I will rid you of bondage, I will redeem you, I will take you to me, I will be to you a God, I will bring you in, and I will give you the land. "But they hearkened not for anguish of spirit and for cruel bondage." We trust that that is not the attitude or the spirit of the Mildmay Conference this morning. As those who know the redeeming love and liberty of the power of Christ, what shall we say? We will hearken; we will hear what God the Lord will speak. If we cannot take in or comprehend all the fulness of blessing contained in these seven "I wills," we will take as much as our poor hearts can receive to-day, and ask Him to teach us more as we are able to bear it.

In reliance on our Father's faithfulness, in confidence in his illimitable resources, and in obedience to what we distinctly believe to be his will, we have again invited you to seek Him with us at the Mildmay Conference. We believe that our expectation in doing so, and yours in coming together, will not be disappointed. His riches are unsearchable. That bank can never break. That treasury can never be emptied. "The river of the water of life, which proceedeth out of the throne of God and of the Lamb," can never run dry. Though the Mildmay Conference were multiplied a million and a million times again, there would still be bread enough in our Father's house and to spare,

I think I may say to you as the first Gentile convert said to the Apostle Peter, "Thou hast well done that thou art come" (Acts x. 38). Then I think we may go on to say, in the next words that he uttered, and let us do it with a deep sense of the solemnity involved, "We are all here present before God to hear all things that are commanded thee of God." Let us unite in saying it. (The congregation here repeated the words, and the Chairman proceeded:) Without intruding upon the province of those who will immediately speak to us in their Master's name, and only saying a few words, let me remind you of the vastness of the subject we have before us these three days. It is so vast that it will take nothing short of eternity to comprehend it—TO KNOW GOD. Let us occupy ourselves not so much with the knowledge as with the God. It is not the process of knowing, but the Glorious One whom we seek to know, and Whom it is his gracious purpose that we should know. In one sense it is impossible to know God here fully. In that sense we may say that we are agnostics, for we cannot know Him fully. But, blessed be his name, He is able to reveal to us, as we are able to bear it, just those glorious features of his person and character that we, each one of us, stand in need of.

But where must we be to know Him? I remember many years ago a learned Jewish Rabbi, still in London, with whom I then had a good deal to do, telling me one morning, as he came to the class, that he had been present the night before at a very solemn scene: it was the death-bed of a very aged Israelite, a man of wealth, and a man with a large family of sons, all of them old men almost themselves, standing around his bed. The Rabbi said he could picture to himself the departing Jacob with his sons around him. He told these sons of a strange dream he had had the night before, which had filled him with anxiety and made him very sad. He dreamt that he was about to enter upon the unknown world, and that one of the heavenly ones came to him, holding out a garment, with which he must invest himself ere he could enter, but he tried in vain to put it on. He could not undo the fastenings with which it was fastened, and he saw that on each successive fastening there was an inscription. On the first was written, "Know God;" on the next was written, "Who can know God?" on the third was written, "None but God can know God." But he could not unfasten it. No, poor Hebrew, he had not the key of David. He did not know God in the face of Jesus Christ. His sons were unable to help him; and thus he passed away. The Rabbi said truly, for he was unable himself to unlock the fastening, "It was a sad scene." "None but God can know God." You must be in God before you can know Him. Therefore, He makes us partakers of the Divine nature; gives us his holy Spirit that we may know Him. Blessed position, glorious science in which to advance! How He teaches us if we are willing to learn and obediently to follow his precepts. How wondrous are the classes through which He leads us—sometimes the sunshine of prosperity, and at others the darkness of disappointment and suffering; but each and all with that one great object so near his gracious heart—that his children should know Him.

The Bible may be taken as the epitome of our subject. In the Book of Ezekiel, the very key-note to it, seventy-one times repeated, is, "That ye may know that I am the Lord." It is not the expositions of our brethren, however fertile, however suggestive, however scriptural, that can lead one soul here into the knowledge of God. We may know the theory; it is the practice that enables us to know the Lord. Therefore, while we are listening to what our friends may bring forth out of the treasury of God's Word, God grant that we may have a deep yearning desire to turn all into practice, and then, by obedience to our Father's will and realising fellowship with Him, know Him in spirit and in truth. Then, and then only, will the Mildmay Conference of 1884 be a truly blessed one to us. I tremble to think, lest any should have come merely because it has been their habit to come, merely because they have been asked to come, merely because it is one of the religious gatherings of the year from which they do not like to be absent. Oh! friends, have you come to seek God? Have I? If we have not come with meekness to receive the engrafted word which is able to save our souls, then I believe the Mildmay Conference, with all its wondrous privileges and its blessed means of grace, will be amongst those witnesses that shall rise up against us and condemn us out of our own mouth. God forbid that we should be here merely in the spirit of religious excitement, or interest in the external things of religion, even though it be the letter of the Word. God give us all the spirit of grace and of supplication, of liberty and of love, and then we shall indeed learn to know Him, whom to know is life eternal.

Rev. C. A. FOX offered a remarkably searching and soul-uplifting prayer.

What it is to know God.

BY REV. H. W. WEBB-PEPLOE.

If a sense of awe, in any degree proportionate to the vastness of the subject we have to dwell upon during these days of Conference, is now upon all that are gathered in God's sight, it must be an exceeding blessed condition of soul. We have never entered upon so vast a subject here before. We have never sought to touch upon one so great, so solemn, or so all-influential as that which we have now before us—"to know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." "I know more of Jesus Christ than of any human being on earth," said an aged Christian when asked for the reason of the hope that was in him. And we have in that one sentence the expression of a true theology, the expression of a faith upon which a man can live and die; and it surely would be a very beautiful thing for us to-day to be able to say that we know more of God's blessed Son than we know of the human being that is nearest and dearest to us upon earth. "No man hath seen God at any time. The only-begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father; He hath declared Him," we are told; it is in order that "the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ" might be known by us, and might be passed on by us, that God has granted unto us the blessed Gospel.

When we turn to those words of our Lord Jesus Christ to his disciples, when they were inquiring for the fulness of the way of blessing, and attainment to eternal life and glory, we observe that He says to them in John xiv. 7, "If ye had known Me ye should have known my Father also, and from henceforth ye know Him and have seen Him." Then in verse 17 of the same chapter we read, concerning the Holy Spirit, "Even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth Him not, neither knoweth Him; but ye know Him, for He dwelleth with you, and shall be in you." Thus we have a manifestation, or knowledge of the three Persons in the Trinity.

God is one; but God is the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost; and while by experimental knowledge we may know the Holy Ghost because He dwelleth in us, and is evermore to be a part of our very being and life, the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ becomes manifested to us, is ever traced out for us, by God the Holy Ghost, ever revealed to us more and more by that all-instructing and all-guiding Spirit; and the knowledge of the Father can only be had by the declaration of the Son in the power of the Holy Ghost. Now while we are still in the mortal flesh, there are limitations which God has established to every possible enjoyment of knowledge. While we seek to know as we are known, and cannot forget that by the promise of God "then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord"—we must not forget also that we are limited in our expectations of enjoyment here. We are looking on to that day when we shall see Him and be like Him, and when we shall know, even as we are known, in all perfection. Our aspirations, therefore, so far as may be given to men upon earth, must be to have the experimental knowledge of God; that is, by the Holy Ghost, in the face of Jesus Christ, to be able to understand that God is revealing Himself as the Father, and never to forget that no religion is in consonance with God's Holy Word that contents itself with a Holy Ghost manifestation; and more especially I might say to many Christians of to-day, that no religion is in consonance with God's Holy Word that satisfies itself with the knowledge of Jesus. It is blessed to think of the Holy Ghost's power, and there are many who can testify to a Holy Ghost manifestation of the very life that they believe to be in accordance with God's Word. There are many more, perhaps, who in these days will speak about their delightsome knowledge of the Lord Jesus as a personal Saviour through the precious blood; as a mighty Keeper through the power of the Spirit. But if they be asked what they know of God, if they have ever aspired to God, to whom Jesus Christ proposes to bring us, there they become, alas! dumb saints. They cannot speak of the knowledge of God.

It is, as I understand the thesis committed to us this day, that we should rise by the grace of God, so far as the Spirit will enable us, to the noblest and highest aspirations that God has entitled man to yield himself to—that we may know God, the great God. We are not even to be contented with Jesus the blessed Saviour, and certainly not to be contented with Him who commences the work of God in our souls and carries it on until we reach the final perfection—that mighty Spirit of power, of love, and of a sound mind. We are to rise in the Spirit by Jesus unto God the Father Himself in heaven, and to this I pray you may now aspire.

Now, in entering upon the subject committed to us this day, I observe that the syllabus does not at the outset declare to us what is intended by this knowledge of God. As the one commissioned, I trust, by the Lord, and certainly commissioned by man, to stand before you and open the subject, I feel at liberty to dwell, in somewhat general terms, upon the nature of this wonderful knowledge to which we are called to aspire evermore. Unquestionably, no subject pervades the Holy Word so constantly, so mightily, as this knowledge of God. At the outset of man's history we read of the tree of Knowledge which God planted in the garden of Eden. That, I suppose, was intended not only to be a test of man's obedience to the will of his God as a creature, but also it was purposed, I suppose, by God that that tree should be the final reward of his obedience. Had he submitted to the test which God imposed upon his childlike obedience, he would doubtless have been permitted to enter into the full enjoyment of that wonderful knowledge of "good," from which God had kept him back for a time, to see if the creature were qualified for the enjoyment. And there are preliminary stages with ourselves as well as with Adam, before we can enter into this wonderful knowledge of God, which God alone can communicate.

This knowledge is not in any sense like the mental attainment to which we aspire on earth. The two aspirations are totally distinct; and we must emphasise this, however much it may seem like a platitude to assert it; because there is no one subject on which there is such a danger of error, in our day, as this particular subject of the knowledge of God. Turn where we will, in whatever society we may be, we find that the knowledge of the Divine, if there be a Divine, is the aspiration of almost every intelligent person. There are two divergent and very peculiar errors, which, I fear, are exceedingly prevalent, and to which each and all are liable. For this reason I am specially thankful that this subject has been brought before us for consideration. There is first that aspiration or attempt by bold speculative study to attain to a mental knowledge of God, and by mere sense, by the effort of the brain, to find out that which has hitherto been unknown. There never was a day when knowledge was so worshipped, when men aspired more earnestly than now to enter into the reasons—the deep, real meaning of everything brought before them. While with all gratitude and thankfulness to God we acknowledge that there is a wonderful devotion on the part of men, who either philosophically or scientifically are seeking to attain to the real definite understanding of every problem that is in the world, what I ask you this morning to realise is that that knowledge is not the knowledge which alone can make us wise unto salvation. It is altogether a contradiction of the truth to speak of this, whether it be speculative or scientific, as the knowledge which God would desire his creatures to attain to. It may collaterally help the soul. Everything that God gives us to study is unquestionably intended for our edification. But this great study that men are making now, first of the science of God, and then seeking to attain to the knowledge of God if He exist, is altogether beside the question for those gathered in God's sight here to-day.

But there is another error, and one perhaps more dangerous to ourselves; an error into which so many are falling, by reason of the great and frequent gatherings of those who are desiring spiritually to know more of the Lord. We rejoice in these gatherings, but there is a constant danger of seeking an emotional enjoyment, a subjective knowledge of the delights of consecration, a feeling of God, as it were, in the soul, and of placing this experimental enjoyment before themselves as a high aspiration for the Christian. Multitudes in the present day are yielding all their being to these emotional delights, craving for them more and more, and alas! attempting to satisfy themselves with that which is but one of the sweet fruits which God gives in connection with that knowledge. This is not to know God. However earnestly a man may feel the presence and enjoyment of God, this is but one of the collateral branches of the great subject that is now before us. Neither with the brain nor with the feelings can any man know God, as God would have us know Him.

The point we are to attain to is a knowledge altogether distinct from this. A subject that God has deigned to trace from Genesis to Revelation must be one of infinite and vital importance. None but those who have taken the subject in hand can be aware how constantly through all parts of God's Word we find that the one and only thing that God requires is that we should know Him in the deep sense of the word. We cannot fail to discover in the best of God's saints how utterly futile were the attempts to come at anything like the real knowledge of God until we come to the Gospel Revelation. Look at Zophar's words to the Patriarch Job in the 11th chapter of his book: "Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection? It is as high as heaven; what canst thou do? deeper than hell; what canst thou know?" And yet the Lord Jesus Christ declares that to know God, and his Son, is life eternal.

There was a remarkable statement made by one of those who, in the days preceding our Lord, were more or less inspired, but not like the scriptural writers—I allude to the writers of the Apocrypha. In the Wisdom of Solomon (xv. 3) we are told that "to know Thee is perfect righteousness; yea! to know Thy power is the root of immortality." What a glorious sentence from one who cannot claim the direct inspiration of God! I believe that, subject to God's teaching, such a word as that may be most helpful to many of us when we aspire to understand this glorious knowledge.

Now, so vastly important is the matter that we find in one Epistle alone (1 Cor.) that there is brought before us 25 times the knowledge of observation; 27 times the knowledge of reflection, and four times the knowledge of deep experimental enjoyment, which are of course represented by different words in the Greek. So that 56 times we have this wonderful subject of knowledge brought before us by one Apostle in one Epistle. To take another example, in the first Epistle of John, with its five little chapters, you have no fewer than 25 times the knowledge of observation, 15 times the knowledge of reflection—40 times in that one short Epistle. Who can attempt, then, in a few minutes, to do justice to this subject?

If we ask, But what is meant by the knowledge of God? we may reply that it is a knowledge which implies unity of nature, community of goods, similarity of taste, and constant yearning after the same ends. Have we fully entered into this?—that to have anything whatsoever of this knowledge of God, there must be an actual unity of nature, because "if a man be not born of the Spirit (as our Lord says) he cannot see the kingdom of God." How many there are who deceive themselves with the idea that this knowledge is attained by constant study, whereas we are to receive this knowledge by God's gift. "The gift of God is eternal life." The Spirit it is that quickeneth into life. Let the Holy Spirit enter into the soul, and the man becomes in a position to commence the study of this God, the knowledge of whom is, through all eternity, to be the one aspiration of his soul. But never, till we have been made partakers of the Divine nature, can we even hope to commence this glorious study, or to have the very rudimentary elements of this knowledge of God. If there is one therefore, in this assembly conscious in his own soul that he has not been made a partaker of the very life of God, let that man know that he knows nothing yet as he ought to know. "For," says St. Paul, "what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the Spirit of God," &c. (1 Cor. ii. 11—14).

We must be made partakers of the Divine nature, being begotten of God (1 John v. 18), and we must have a deep sense of reality of this glorious union with God in Christ. This is no presumption. It is the condescension of God that brings us into our proper place when we realise that God has given to us an enjoyment of the very life of God, a suitable link to eternity itself that cannot break, but that will only bind us closer and closer to Him who is the infinitely and absolutely Unknowable. Nor are we only to realise the unity of nature, but there must also be the knowledge of the community of goods (1 Cor. iii. 21—23). We have seen that it is impossible for any man to know who is not placed in sympathy with the one whom he seeks to know. This truth has been traced by theologians in language hardly becoming to a gathering like this, but one yearns to give some expression to that which one believes to be the great manifestation of this truth of God, and all can apprehend the thought that for a man to know the Divine he must have the Divine: for a man to know another he must be so united to the other as to have a sense of perfect community of interest, &c., in all that belongs to that other whom he would know. There must be sympathy, and there must be realisation of oneness in taste, habit, desire, property (Rev. xxi. 7), and prospect. If a man has not entered into the realisation of the gifts of God (1 Cor. ii. 12), it is vain for him to speak of himself as knowing God. But let there be this realisation, this giving out of one's trust to God's work of love, and the begining of this enjoyment of all things in Christ; hen we are placed in a position wherein we may ommence the further study of our God.

I might now proceed (according to our syllaus) to show that God has granted to us this in he person of our Lord Jesus Christ, by the comunicating power of the Holy Ghost; but upon hose two points I do not propose to enter at ngth (as other brethren will speak to them), it rather to indicate the conditions on which one this knowledge can be obtained, and the ature of the knowledge we may hope to gain hen the conditions are fulfilled. The condions of this knowledge I have dared to define unity of nature, community of goods, simirity of taste, and constancy of aspiration wards the same end. And you will readily e how that unless we are one with God in the gher sphere of the spirit-life it is wholly mpossible for us to commence the study of God! od is a Spirit. How can we know God until e are partakers of the Divine Spirit? Again, od is in heaven; and how many there are who, hile they profess the faith of a Christian, have ver believed in the doctrinal statement of the postle Paul to the Ephesians, that we have been aced far above all principalities and powers in e heavenly places, in Christ Jesus, and that od hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings the heavenlies in Christ Jesus. Surely the one ck of the Church of to-day is simple belief in od's Holy Word, as God Himself has put it efore us.

Ten years ago, when I had first the privilege speaking here (I believe) I was staying at the ouse of your late superintendent Captain Morean. He asked me to go and visit a dying girl in our hospital. When I asked him if I could help r, he said: "No; she will help you." To make e story short, I inquired of him in what way e would really help me. He had seen her, as thought, for the last time, and in her dying ords she said: "I love to be alone in this room w; for I have Him now all to myself, and He so real to me; is He not to you?" I never rgot those words, I trust I never may. We ust be really with a REAL God to know God. e must be in heaven with Christ, really sitting here Christ is in the heavenlies, in order that e may begin to have any knowledge of God. rther, there must be the similarity of taste hich God the Holy Ghost implants; and how plants? When a man has entered by faith to the death and resurrection of Christ, and elds himself to God as one who is alive from e dead, then he begins to have this knowdge of God, because the Holy Ghost implants e Divine instincts, the Divine tastes, the ivine habits.

We will do well to study John's Epistle, with l he tells us about this wondrous knowledge of od. We find it summed up in that one exession: "Beloved, let us love one another, for ve is of God. He that loveth dwelleth in God, d God in Him. We know that we have passed om death unto life, because we love the brethn." Now God is Love, and it is the similarity character with God that alone can make us ter upon the real enjoyment of this wonderful bject.

But love (as God revealed it in Christ) is self-crifice. We must be prepared, therefore, for lf-sacrifice, and if there are here any who have me to obtain mere emotional enjoyment at the ildmay Conference, to engage in the mere buzz holy talk with Christians with whom they ppen to sympathise in feeling, that is t the way to enter upon the solemn subject mmitted to us these three days. The knowdge of God is through self-sacrifice, as Christ vealed God. As God is love, as God is a fire, God is a Spirit, He came to pour out Himself love, that He might consume the wickedness the world through the holy fire, and then at He might make us realise that the Spirit-e is love, and that men must love as God ves in order to realise it aright, and then comunicate it to the world. That is the privilege which God is calling us.

Now turn to another branch of the subject. ive we ever thought over those "knows" of mans vi.? I take this passage as a mere ection; you will study others at your leisure. e Romans vi. 3, 6, 9, 10, and vii. 1, &c.

The knowledge of God is only for those who have by faith a true conformity to the death of Christ, and have entered into union with Him in his Resurrection-life. By the Spirit we are united with the Divine in heaven, and thus we pass into the realisation of God, then we begin to live the Resurrection-life, and then we begin to know God, and "this is life eternal."

I close by asking whether we have indeed fulfilled these conditions on which alone we can enter upon the knowledge of God. I leave the after developments to those who will follow, but, as the one who opens the subject, I want to place you in the position in which it alone becomes possible for you to enjoy this blessing. I will ask you to test yourselves, and to say whether you know that you have passed from death unto life. All can answer to God's inquiries, I suppose, without doubt? Look at Gal. iv. 9: "After ye have known God, or rather, are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage?"

The knowledge of God is not religiousness; it is not the binding of ourselves by legality; it is not the attempt to set up ceremonial; it is not the attempt to exalt the Church of God above God Himself, but it is to be "free from the law, oh! blessed condition," and to enter into Christ and live in the liberty of God's dear children, with the Spirit of God shed abroad in our hearts. Again, look at 1 John ii. 3, 4: "And hereby we do know that we know Him, if we keep his commandments. He that saith, I know Him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar." Surely this is a solemn word, that unless we give ourselves to the obedience of God's holy will, unless we keep that command of God that we are to believe in his Son and love one another (1 John iii. 23), we have not even entered upon the sphere in which alone the knowledge of God can be obtained.

Can we subject ourselves to these tests and answer to them that we have passed from the beggarly elements of the world, and are at liberty; that we are by God's grace keeping his holy commandments; that we have love to the brethren; that the Spirit of God is seen in our lives? Then our religion stands upon an immutable, unchangeable revelation, upon the rock that nothing can touch. Let devils and worlds combine, they cannot hurt our souls. This is to start in the knowledge of God, to go on, and on, and on, so that while it shall be true, to the very utmost of our capacity, that we know Him even now, there shall be the perpetual increase of knowledge. "Growing in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ" upon earth, we shall go on as long as God Himself shall last, increasing in the knowledge of Him who is infinite; never having done because the finite can never actually grasp the infinite. So God calls us this morning to consider whether we are born of God, whether we are in the Holy Spirit and the Holy Spirit in us, whether we are one with God and God with us, and whether we have therefore started upon the glorious journey of attaining to the knowledge of the infinite. If we have, then we may pray that this wonderful privilege of the Conference at Mildmay, for three days' continued study of one subject, would lead to a life the like of which has not been seen since the days when the power of the Holy Ghost first seized upon the churches; a life in which 3500 saints of God at least would go out into the world with this blessed conviction—I pray God that it may seize upon each one here—"God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, hath shined in our hearts to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

At last we shall be able to say, and say boldly in the world, "I know whom I have believed; I am not ashamed." Brethren, in God's name, be not ashamed of the Lord who has bought you, of the Christ who has redeemed you, of the Spirit who has taken you to love Him during this life. When men wish to know what our religion is, there is one thing they ought to be compelled to say of every man of us—"God is with Him of a truth." That will only be when, born of the Spirit, elevated to Heaven, sanctified in God's presence, we are enabled to yield up spirit, soul, and body unto God, as those who are alive from the dead through Jesus Christ our Lord.

Mr. Denham Smith offered prayer, and "special requests" were read out by Mr. Mathieson. Rev. B. D. Hankin also offered prayer.

How to Attain the Knowledge of God.

BY REV. DR. MONRO GIBSON.

It is, of course, understood and admitted, as our leader has already said, and properly said, in the opening of this subject, that there can be no absolute knowledge of God. So far, our agnostic friends are right; but though this is true, it is not new. In one of the oldest books of the Bible, we have it quite fairly expressed in a passage already quoted—"Canst thou by searching find out God? canst thou find out the Almighty unto perfection?" But is not the same thing true on a small scale in regard to our fellow-men, as was beautifully suggested in the opening of Mr. Webb-Peploe's address? This is true, even though your friend may be below you in spiritual attainments, and it is still more so if he be above you. Our knowledge of one another is in every case limited by two things—capability of expression on the one hand, power of comprehension on the other. There may be much in the soul of my friend that is never expressed—in look or in attitude, or in word or in deed. There may be much in him that cannot be expressed; there may be much that he would not express, though he could, or could not though he would. On the other hand, there may be very much of what is expressed that I cannot understand or catch.

To illustrate this further, for it seems to me of great importance in reference to the subject of the knowledge of God, let us consider what means we have of gaining some knowledge of such a one as Michael Angelo. There are fragments of revelation of the spirit of Michael Angelo scattered far and wide in our art galleries and elsewhere in casts and copies, so that almost everybody has an opportunity of knowing something about him. Then there are poems of his which give a further revelation of the man to those who have on opportunity of reading them. These are all expressions of his spirit, utterances of the man, and we might, without abuse of language, put them all together, and call them the word of Michael Angelo. But it is quite evident that the extent of my knowledge of him will depend not only on my opportunities of seeing these works of his, and studying them, but also, and even more, upon the degree with which my spirit is kindred with his; the degree in which I can understand that which is expressed in his works.

Then suppose that from the study of his works we have learned something of the reality which lurks behind the great name of Michael Angelo, and we wish to know still more about him, what do we do? We take up his life and read it. How much more knowledge have we of the great artist now? This, again, will depend first upon what his biographer has been able to catch and set down of that which he has uttered or expressed; and, secondly, what I am able to take in of that which is set down. Or, again, if I look at his portrait the additional knowledge that I have from looking on his portrait will depend in the first place upon what the painter has been able to set down on the canvas, and, secondly, what I am able to see of that which is set down. Still further, the case would not be altered in principle, even if we could have lived in his time, and lived with him, so as to see him every day, and be in his company almost constantly. We should in that case have a far better opportunity of knowing him, but even then our knowledge of him would be subject to the same twofold limitation; first it would depend upon how much of the spirit within him ever uttered itself in his face, or gesture, or word, or deed, and second upon our ability to comprehend and catch that which was thus uttered.

The point of view we have now reached is a favourable one for seeing of what immeasurable importance this second condition is; for is it not manifest that it would be quite possible for the artist's valet de chambre, for his own personal attendant, to know less of him, less of the true Michael Angelo, than a man of kindred soul, who had never seen, and had not even read his life, and had paid just one visit to the Sistine Chapel?

From all this, is it not abundantly evident that our knowledge of our fellow-men, even under the most favourable circumstances, must be partial and inadequate? Why, then, should we expect to have full and adequate knowledge of God? But, then, even the imperfect knowledge we can have of each other is sufficient for the purposes of life; why, then, may not our knowledge of God, however imperfect and inadequate in an absolute sense, not only be really knowledge so far as it goes, but be amply sufficient for all purposes of life? It all depends upon the question whether God has expressed himself at all, and whether our spirits are kindred enough with his Spirit to appreciate that which He has expressed.

Thus our subject opens up two great questions. First. Has God revealed Himself? Second. Can we enter into the revelation so as to make out what is revealed of Him? The Scriptural answer to the first question is the Word. The Scriptural answer to the second question is the Spirit. The Word is the whole utterance of God in Nature, in Providence, in Grace. God has spoken "at sundry times and in divers manners." "In the beginning was the Word." God uttered Himself in creation, just as the artist utters himself in his works. He has uttered Himself in the whole history of the world. Then He has spoken to the fathers by the prophets. All these are parts of the revelation, the "divers operations," as we have it in the Hebrews.

These are all different utterances of the Word, but they are scattered and fragmentary, like the scattered works of a great artist; and the question still comes, Is it not possible to get nearer to Himself? Has no one ever looked upon a face that had all the light of the Lord upon it? Is there no personal revelation? Has no one ever listened to a voice, the tones of which have thrilled with the very love of God Himself? Is there no way of passing from the outer circle of his works, which are but the hem of his garment, to his very seat, to his very life and soul and heart? Yes, there is! "The Word was made flesh and dwelt among us, and we beheld his glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." There is the central point of the revelation of God. "He that hath seen Me hath seen the Father." The rest are the scattered rays of the Divine glory. Here is the central Sun; here in the face of Jesus is the knowledge of the glory of God.

So much for the Word—the utterances, the expressions of God. But that is not enough. There must also be a soul to comprehend it. We have seen that it is quite possible for a man not only to look at Michael Angelo's works, but even to live in his house and see him every day, and yet know nothing but the mere shell of him; have no such knowledge of him as to be any the better for even having looked at him. What is wanted in such a case is the spirit of the artist, not in all its vastness necessarily—for who, then, could hope for such an advantage—but a share of it, as much of it as the smaller capacity will admit of—enough, at all events, to ensure sympathy, appreciation, delight in the artist, and in his works.

So, too, it is necessary not only that God should utter Himself before us, but that he should give us of his Spirit, that we may understand what He has spoken. We cannot have the Spirit without measure as had Christ, but, up to the measure of our capacity, we may be filled with the Spirit. And however small, comparatively, our capacity may be, it will be enough to ensure sympathy, appreciation, delight in Christ, and all that is his. And so the promise shall be fulfilled, "He shall take of mine, and shall show it unto you." Thus it is that the two natural difficulties which stand in the way of knowing God are met in God's revelation of Himself, first in his Son, who is appropriately spoken of as the Word, and second by the Holy Spirit. The one is the needed revelation without; the other the needed revelation within. The two are present in one view in that magnificent utterance of the Gospel, "God who commanded a light to shine out of darkness hath shined into our hearts," &c. The two together give us every facility for knowing our Father in heaven which it is possible to have. Even at the best our knowledge will still remain partial and inadequate. It will be far from absolute knowledge.

It will be wholly relative. It will be trustworthy as the light, which, of all material things without, comes nearest to the expression of the Divine nature; and it will be blessed, blessed as love, which of all that is within us is the most akin to God. The light of the glory of God in the face of Christ without. The love of God shed abroad by the Holy Ghost in our hearts within. These are what are needed to give us that knowledge, which, however partial it may be at the best, is yet life eternal, and these—the light without and the love within—these are all that are needed; for God is Light and God is Love.

It remains to be noticed that the meeting point of all is Christ. It is my duty to turn attention as much as possible to the revelation in the Son; later on attention will be directed to the revelation by the Holy Ghost, so that now I call attention to this—that the meeting point of all is in Christ. We have seen already that in the Incarnate Word the scattered rays of the glory of God, which had been revealed in a fragmentary way before, were gathered together, concentrated in the Son of man, in his face; and just as in your intercourse with your friend you keep looking into his face, and yet you do not quite lose sight of his form or even, it may be, of his garment's hem, so, in order to acquaintance with God, we should keep looking at Jesus, who is his face, while we do not quite lose sight of anything that helps us to set Him more fully before us.

But, besides this, the other need of which we have spoken is met in Christ. Not only does He reveal God to us, but it is He who gives us of his Spirit that we may understand the revelation. He promises to give the Spirit to all who come to Him, so that it is not merely the half but the whole of what is needed for the knowledge of God that is provided in Christ. We are complete in Him, and hence He said, "All things are delivered unto Me of the Father, and no man knoweth the Father save the Son, and he to whom the Son will reveal Him." "Come unto Me." Long after, the beloved disciple, having found it all true, expresses it thus, "The Son of God is come"—there is revelation without, and He passes on to the revelation within—"and has given us all understanding that we may know Him that is true."

From all this it follows that those who would know God must seek Him in Christ. "I am the Way." "No man cometh unto the Father but by Me." Need we wonder, then, that those who turn away from Christ never can find God? Need we wonder that so many even of our most learned and patient searchers after truth never attain to the knowledge of God? It is not that they are dishonest. It is that they will not look in the right direction. Why will they not learn that it is not by searching that even the most learned can find out God? It is not by the use of those faculties which are the glory of the learned and the great. It is not by any process of induction or triumph of logic. No; but it is simply by the lifting up of our souls to our living Father—the eye, the ear, the heart of faith, all open to hear his voice and welcome his love. Oh! that our learned people would only give up dealing with propositions and abstract principles, and seek the Lord. If anyone is minded to wrestle with questions he can find a million to do it with. But, alas! such wrestling will lead to nothing, and there will be no Peniel to keep it in memory. If, instead of wrestling with questions and problems, they would, like poor, weak Jacob, wrestle with God, then the day would dawn upon them, their darkness would be dispelled, light would stream upon them, and then would they understand how it is that men in all ages who have walked with God, have learned to know in whom they have believed, however little they m have been able to expound fully or justi wholly what they believe.

"When Thou saidst, Seek ye my face, my hea said unto thee, Thy face, O Lord, will I seek It is all there in that simple passage. T philosophy of it, the simplicity of it, are all ther It is not the absolute science of deity we are seek; it is his face. It is not elaborate searc ing; it is simply seeking. A wise man m search, and discover nothing, but even the chi that seeks will surely find Him, because it is matter, not of the intellect, but of the heart. we would only all put heart and will into it, th even those of us that may not have very lar heads could know the Lord.

Perhaps a difficulty may occur to someone he who remembers that it is an Old Testament pa sage we are quoting, and that at that time G had not been revealed in Christ. Had He no Let us not forget that "In the beginning was t Word," that it was the Son of God all throu who revealed the Father. "No man hath se God at any time; the only begotten Son who in the bosom of the Father, He hath declare Him." The Incarnation is a great help realise the personality of God; but it must nev be forgotten that personality does not consist body but in spirit. Even in the days of o Redeemer's flesh a spiritual manifestation w necessary to know Him. Do not you rememb when Peter gave the right answer to the que tion, "Whom do ye say that I am?" o Saviour said, "Blessed art thou, Simon Barjon flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee So in the same way a spiritual manifestati was possible before the Incarnation, just as is still our privilege after it. You rememb how the question was put and answered wh Christ was still on earth, "Lord, how is it th thou wilt show thyself unto us, and not unto t world?" Jesus answered and said, "If a m love Me he will keep my word, and my Fath will love him, and We will come and make o abode with him."

The essential point is: we must seek person acquaintance with God and seek his face. The should be an outgoing of our souls to o Father in heaven as He is manifested unto u Even in the Old Testament time it was alwa in this way that God became known. Hence t prominence given to the conception, to the Nar of God. What was the Name of God? It i cluded all of God that had been exposed to vie It was all his face that they had seen could then see. We can see more of it no We have "the light of the knowledge of t glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ," w is the image of the invisible God, the expre image of his person. Our attitude must be t same. There must be the lifting up of t heart, the outgoing of the soul, the spiritu act of which this is the simplest expressio "When thou saidst, Seek ye my face, m heart said, Lord, thy face will I seek."

The knowledge of God, as we have see begins by looking unto Jesus. It grows b abiding in his presence and keeping up con munion with Him. As soon as we come to Hi we receive something of his Spirit, and are ab to understand a little. As we stay with Hi and walk with Him we receive more and mo of his Spirit, and are able to understand mo and more; for the two processes go on hand hand. The more we see of the divine in Hi the more we receive of the divine in ourselves and, conversely, the more we receive of the divi in ourselves the more we see of the divine Him. By equal steps, step by step, no one ca tell which is the first.

Blessed knowledge of God revealed in h Son our Saviour. He commanded the ligh to shine in our hearts to give us the light the knowledge of the glory of God in the face Jesus! Oh! Thou who art love, dwell in ou hearts and teach us to know what love is, enter into the mystery of his cross and passio and so begin to "comprehend with all sain what is the length and breadth and depth an height, and to know the love of Christ whic passeth knowledge, that we may be filled wit all the fulness of God." Then, and not till the shall we fully understand the depth of meanin of those blessed words of our Lord to his Fath heaven, "This is life eternal, that they y know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus rist whom Thou hast sent."

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

The meeting was opened with the singing of e 22nd Hymn, after which Rev. A. M. W. ristopher, of Oxford, offered prayer. A porn of 1 Cor. ii. was read by Mr. Blackwood, lowed by singing and prayer.

Christ the Revelation of God.

BY MR. W. P. LOCKHART.

The subject to be considered by this Conference so vast that I am thankful those who invited to speak ask me specially to confine myself to e part of the subject. The portion of the bject on the programme to which I invite your ention is more especially the knowledge of God revealed in his Son. There is one passage of ipture to which I would invite your attention the outset. "God, who at sundry times l in divers manners spake in time past unto e fathers by the prophets, hath in these last ys spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath pointed heir of all things, by whom also he de the worlds; who being the brightness of glory, and the express image of his person, l upholding all things by the word of his wer, when he had by himself purged our sins, down on the right hand of the Majesty on h:" (Heb. i 1—3). The Epistle of which se words form the opening sentence, is ematically an epistle of contrast. To a large ent the argument of the epistle is a contrast wn between the typical or Levitical economy l the anti-typical or Christian economy in ich we now live. There is also a contrast wn at the beginning of the epistle between position and the testimony of angels and position and testimony of the Lord Jesus.
the words I have just now read, a very strikcontrast is drawn between the revelation t God has given of Himself through the phets, and the revelation He has given of mself in his Son.

I take it that there is more in these words n the mere statement that the revelation of d in his Son is subsequent to, and corroative of, the revelation given by the prophets.
ere seems to me not only to be a difference in ree, but almost what one might term a ference in kind between the two. God forbid t we should speak in disparagement of the phets! They were holy men of God and they ke as they were moved by the Holy Ghost;
they were only media of communication. So are told that they were found "searching at, or what manner of time, the Spirit of rist which was in them did signify, when it tified beforehand the sufferings of Christ, and glory that should follow." We are told ewise that unto them it was revealed "that unto themselves, but unto us they did inister the things, which are now reported o you by them that have preached the Gospel
o you with the Holy Ghost sent down from ven."

Thus far the prophets. But notice the won-ful fulness and richness of the terms that are e employed to set forth the Lord Jesus. He he appointed Heir of all things, and by Him l made the worlds. The first moment of time the last moment of time are united in the son of the Lord Jesus. It was He who ned time by his creative work, and it is He o will close time when He assumes that in-tance which is his right. He is stated to be brightness, or the effulgence, or the shining h of the radiance of God's glory, and "the ress image of his person"—words which have n rendered to mean an exact representation of very being. I know no terms that could e fully set forth the manifestation of God.

Further, we are told that He "upholds all things by the word of his power." The destinies of the universe are in his hand, and the thread of life of every man and woman in this hall is held by the word of his power. Further, that "He by Himself purged our sins." He loved the Church, and gave Himself for it. He has put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. Having thus done, He sat down at the right hand of the Majesty on high, and He is there to-night; "from henceforth expecting, till his enemies be made his footstool." We read also, in John i. 18: "No man hath seen God at any time; the only-begotten Son, who is in the bosom of the Father—he hath declared Him." He not merely speaks of Him, not merely bears witness of Him; more than that, He is Himself the exponent of the Father; He is Himself God manifest. Therefore, in his own person, and mission, and work, He is the One who reveals and brings to us the knowledge of God.

Although illustrations are but poor things at the best, I cannot help remembering that in Bruce's work of his travels in Abyssinia he relates that at a certain eastern court the king himself is never seen. When the decrees have to be promulgated, he sits on a throne behind a lattice window, which is heavily curtained, and on the steps of the throne there stands one of high rank, who is called the "voice," or the "word," through whom the king speaks, and he makes the proclamation. A poor illustration at the best, as I have said, but one which in some measure may help us to understand how the Lord Jesus is truly God manifest in the flesh, and is Himself the exposition or the exponent of God.

From all this I gather that the incarnation is the central point of God's revelation of Himself. While we are thankful for all the testimony borne, thankful for all the blessed announcements made, still the central point of God's revelation of Himself is the incarnation of the Deity in the person of Jesus Christ our Lord. And the central point in the incarnation is what? The Cross. It seems to me that on that cross, therefore, more than anywhere else, we have the knowledge of God revealed in and through Christ Jesus. And what do we find in the cross? Not only an exposition of the love of God, not only a setting forth of the forbearance and the tender mercy and the longsuffering of God—a manifestation also of the righteousness of God, of the justice of God, in that He showed Himself there to be just as well as the Justifier of Him who believeth in Jesus. At the Cross we see not one side of the character of God only but we see the whole of the character of God; or what may be termed his holiness displayed in its fulness. God was there manifesting his love towards those for whom He had a purpose of mercy from eternity; but God was upholding the dignity of his own character, as the moral Ruler of the universe. Therefore Christ must suffer.

We are in danger of running into one or other extreme concerning the character of our God. Like the pendulum swinging, it is almost always at one end or at the other. I suppose that in the Puritan times people took rather a severe view of God's character, thinking more exclusively of his righteousness and of his justice than of his tenderness and of his love. Is it not possible that in the present day there is a tendency to think of Him almost exclusively as very forbearing, very longsuffering, very gentle, very compassionate? May we not be in danger of losing sight of some aspects of the character of God which go to make up the completeness of that character as revealed in the Cross of the Lord Jesus Christ? I think I might venture to go further than this, and say there are some people who are, perhaps, a little apt to worship a god of their own fancy. Not actually with a pair of scissors, but just as truly as if they did it thus—they cut out certain portions of the Scripture and never read them. They read almost entirely certain lines revealed in God's Word; they make up a God of their own imagination, and they seek to know Him. What is the remedy for this? Is not the remedy the reading of the whole Scripture, the entire testimony borne by God to Himself in his Word? Shall we not find there that from age to age in dealing sometimes with nations, sometimes with individuals, and ultimately at the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, He showed Himself a God of Righteousness, a God of Justice, a God who loved the sinner with a tenderness, and a compassion, and a fulness of love which utterly transcends human thought? Yet is He most jealous of his own honour as the Moral Ruler of the Universe, and therefore punishing sin with a severity that cannot possibly exceed human imagination. In other words, we must, according to the words of the Apostle Paul in Rom. xi., "Remember the goodness and the severity of God."

There are some people who speak in these days as if there were two Gods revealed in Scripture, one in the Old Testament, with a rather severe character of judgment; the other in the New Testament, with an altogether different character—that of love and compassion. There is but one God. The God who destroyed the Antediluvians is our God still; the God who caused fire to fall upon the Cities of the Plain is our God still; the God who destroyed the Egyptians is our God still; the God of Sinai who gave that law, never abrogated and never to be abrogated, is our God still; the God who dealt with the Jewish nation in such terrible judgment, ultimately causing it to come under the severe yoke of his displeasure, is our God still. The same character for tenderness, love, and compassion for the sinner, but righteousness, justice, judgment toward the sinner, has been manifested at the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, where we have the fulness of the display of the character of God.

May I venture to say further, that these truths seem to me to bear very much upon the children of God? You say, "Ah! but He is a Father." Yes, very true. We think that the young man of the period does not show very great respect for his parent when he calls him the "governor." I have no wish to defend slang, but we may possibly forget that our God is our Governor. Fatherhood does not consist in allowing the children to have their own way; Fatherhood does not consist in ignoring righteousness; Fatherhood consists in government—good, healthy government. Therefore I submit that our Father shows to us day by day, and hour by hour, in our lives here below, the same fulness of character that He has displayed all through his dealings with men, and that he has emphatically displayed at the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ. He governs, He rules; and He governs and rules in righteousness. Our Chairman spoke to us this morning about the Book of Ezekiel. Seventy-one times, I think he said, we find the expression, "That ye may know that I am the Lord." I do not know whether he has counted, as I have, though I cannot give you the result, the number of times in which that expression is used in reference to God's judgment, and not in reference to the manifestations of his love. We must remember that our God is a holy God, and we must seek to walk before Him as those who know Him seek to walk before him, in holiness and in righteousness.

There seems to be this thought as following upon these others, and it is the connection between communion and obedience. You will find at the beginning of the first Epistle of John the words about having fellowship with the Father and with his Son Jesus Christ. What is it to have fellowship with God? Are we not rather apt to suppose that fellowship is a matter of feeling, or emotion, or experience, or sentiment? Are we not apt in these days to get into the idea that communion is a sort of dream-like, ethereal frame of mind, into which we strive to keep ourselves by a vast number of agencies, some of which are, to say the least of it, questionable? I will tell you what I think communion is. In the second chapter we read: "He that saith I know Him and keepeth not his commandments is a liar." John was the Apostle of love, very tender, very full of compassion, but these are his words. I have to do with the business of this life, and I have met some Christians who talk a great deal about communion, but I could not trust to their speaking the truth when I had transactions with them. I have known some Christians who could speak a great deal about advanced experience, and matters of that sort, and who have thought they have acquired wondrous knowledge of God; but their transactions would not bear inspection, and their testimony to the world was anything but worthy. What is communion? Doing everything so that we may have fellowship with God about it, so that we may take Him into partnership, into consultation. Fellowship in business? Yes, of course; so that all the transactions of daily life may be such as He can inspect and look upon with approval. Fellowship in all the surroundings of life—amusements if you will, recreation if you will, in so far as you can ask his blessing and seek and secure his smile. Fellowship in work, so that there be no tricks; nothing that is not straightforward, that is not honourable, that won't bear inspection — all before Him, so that we may take Him into consultation, and into partnership. That is communion.

There is no way of communion but by obedience. I am not speaking of salvation through works; I believe in salvation through grace as much as any man here, but I am speaking of the child of God. The way to communion is through obedience; and if there is a child of God here this evening who has brought to his or her mind now by the Spirit of God that there is something that he does not fully obey, you will get a great blessing and you will increase mightily in the knowledge of God if through the prompting of God's Spirit in this meeting you immediately cast aside your disobedience and do that which you believe the Lord Jesus commands you to do. Are there persons here who are not quite sure about their position or about their practices, or about what they hold, or about their associations, but they say, "I cannot take this step; I do not see my way to that." Brother, are you sure that you are in the way of the Lord's teaching? Have you a "Thus saith the Lord" for it? Can you put your finger upon—I do not say the particular passage, but upon the general tenour and testimony, and say "I am not acting contrary to that, I am walking clearly in obedience to the teachings of my Lord." What a wondrous work there would be wrought, what a great change would be effected, what a marvellous increase in the knowledge of God, if every brother and sister were brought this night to search as before God as to where there is disobedience, and be led to prompt, unhesitating, unswerving obedience to everything that is taught in the Word of the living God.

It is twenty years since I was at a Mildmay Conference, but my recollection goes back to the old times at Barnet, and I remember hearing Chas. Hargrove once holding up his Bible, and it was a mighty lesson for me as a young man. He said: "You will never find yourself in any position in life where you won't find a principle in God's Word which will give you guidance and direction." He said: "Mind, I do not say a text, but a principle. And if you will read the whole Bible, and read it in its fulness and know these principles, you will never be in any position in life in which you will not find a principle that will guide and direct you so as to honour and glorify God." It is better to be beggars upon a dunghill, confident that we are walking according to the light, and according to the teaching of God's Word, than to have all the wealth of the world, and make a compromise. The curse of the present day is compromise—compromise about doctrine, compromise about sin, compromise about almost anything. If we would be clear before our God when we stand before Him, remember that we shall have to answer for all these things. We must have done with this compromise, and we must say, "No, if I say that I know Him, and do not keep his commandments, I am a liar. He has told me so, and, therefore, I must say, 'Am I clear about this matter, or about such and such another matter? What is the teaching of the Word of God about that? I have been a little in doubt about certain things. There is no doubt now—there is the principle in God's Word.'" If we honestly deal with the matter in this way we shall increase mightily in the knowledge of God.

Rev. Grattan Guinness then offered prayer.

Power Revealed by the Holy Ghost.

BY REV. C. A. FOX.

I am to speak on the question of imparting the knowledge of God; but, children of God, are you ready for this great knowledge of God to be imparted by the Holy Ghost? That is really the first and most important question of all: Are you ready to know this God in the power of his resurrection and the fellowship of his sufferings? Are you willing to be made conformable to his death? Is this the tone of every heart in this room? You remember that Abraham had a revelation of God. God revealed what a great people he should be the father of. That very same night there was a horror of great darkness that fell upon him, and in the midst of the very promises of God he seemed to see in this great darkness of his spirit a burning lamp passing through the operation of the sacrifice. It is so, brethren, that when God gives us any great gift or promise, there is always the burning lamp of the Holy Ghost passing between the portions of our being, searching out and discovering and consuming. Are we ready for this?

Are we ready for that which Job found to be indeed a blessed goal which God was leading him to? "I have heard of Thee with the hearing of the ear, but now mine eye seeth Thee, wherefore I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes." Are we willing for that? I find that in Holy Scripture those men who saw God nearest, were those of God's people upon earth who were the holiest of men, were the simplest of men. They were the most utterly broken, as well as the best of men. Take the case of Joshua. There is no fault to be found in that man—at least, recorded in Scripture; and yet, when he went forward to acquire the promised land, he was actually confronted with a mysterious stranger, who declared himself to be the "Captain of the Lord's host." If Joshua was anything, he was captain of the Lord's host. He must be a disciple if he is to do anything for God, and that man who lives nearest God is the man who is most willing to be displaced by the very presence of the living God Himself. It was so when Daniel had those wonderful visions—he was humbled to the dust. He fell in the dust, and God had to put out his hand and touch him and strengthen him, that he might receive those great visions of the glory of God. It was so also with Isaiah when the great glory of God came out of the Temple, and the prophet of God beheld his glory and his train filling the Temple. Are you willing, like Paul, "to know Him and the power of his resurrection"? Yes, you say, you want to know the power; but are you willing to be conformed to his death—the fellowship of his death? Are you willing to be like a John, and lean on the very bosom of Jesus, and to speak with Him, and to have such intimacy with Him that you are beyond all other of his Apostles; and when Christ shall appear to you face to face, as He appeared to John, will you, as he did, fall as dead at his feet? I believe many of us are not aware what we are doing when we ask to know God. Is this great company of God's people willing to know Him and willing to take the consequences, willing to pay the price and willing to be wholly given to the Lord, to be his disciples by the Holy Ghost, and to be indeed abased in the presence of God, but yet to see Him and live?

You know the first word of command God utters in Holy Scripture is "Let there be light." It seems to me the very keynote of the whole Bible is the great desire of God to impart light. There were three commands which took in the whole creation—"Let there be light," "Let there be life," "Let there be love," and the image of God stood forth actually in man in his own likeness, so that he could respond in love to a loving Father. At the new creation, there is given forth again the command, "Let there be light," and there was the incarnation of light. Again went forth the command, "Let there be love," and there was the atonement of Jesus. The very body of Jesus was broken to pieces with the love of God. That precious alabaster box of his was broken, and the odour of the love of Christ filled heaven and earth with its sweet savour. But at the resurrection a new command went forth, "Let there be liberty," and Christ arose. He said, "I am He that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore." He went up to heaven by that liberty which God had given Him, because there is an access now for every child of God even to the heavenly places in Christ Jesus.

But I think there was something more wanting, and God gave a new commandment. "Let there be power." The Holy Ghost fell at Pentecost on the children of God, and the trembling saints that dared not even pray Christ to be theirs publicly were then able to stand forth and plead with the very murderers of Jesus, and plead with such force that three thousand of them were convicted and converted by the very first utterance, under the power of Pentecost. There is one command yet to go forth "Let there be glory," and the children of God shall be with Jesus, and they shall reign with Him in his own immediate glory for ever.

Now the great point before us is "Let there be power." You remember when the power did fall at Pentecost it was a power of fire "Our God is a consuming fire." There must be fire either after this life or during this life There must be either fire within us to cleanse us now, or fire hereafter for punishment and destruction from the presence of the Lord Which shall it be? Have you noticed through Scripture how wondrously God hath transformed this most fearful element of fire, and how it has become the means of access to God? The communion food was roasted with fire, and you know how the people were guided by the pillar of fire and defended by the wall of fire, which was the living God round about them and the glory in their midst. Christ is a refiner's fire. Do you know Christ as the refiner's fire? Do not be afraid of the fire of the Lord Jesus. He is a tender, loving Lord, and if the fire burns you it is the burning of love. If there are flames they are the flames of the loving Jesus who hath died to win you. He cannot and could not hurt you, but He is bound to cleanse you. So at Pentecost we have the glorious fulfilment of the great mission of fire; and tongues of fire actually fell on the Church of Christ on that day. We need the fire of God to-day, the purging, purifying, consuming fire. May the Holy Ghost by his fire cleanse and purge the heart of each child of God now before Him May the fire descend! May it burn—may it have free course, and God be glorified!

But you may ask us, why was it that if the Holy Ghost were so necessary, He could not come until Christ went back? Our Lord said "It is expedient that I go away." What is this Divine expediency, which is not like earthly expediency? It is no compromise of principle for selfish advantage. It is only that God is making a greater sacrifice of Himself for the good of his children. Why was it that the Holy Ghost could not be given till Christ returned? For this reason, that until Christ had finished his work the power of God to go forth was not yet granted, even to good men. It is through the full work of Jesus that the gate of communication from heaven to earth is open to us, and it is for this reason also that the Holy Ghost is the Comforter. Christ is the comfort of the Church, and He could not bring or convey this Christ to the Church until Christ had finished his work. The great work was not yet done. The Holy Ghost would not convey half a truth; He must convey a whole truth. He would not convey even an incarnate Lord, a dying Christ, or a crucified Christ, great as these truths were. He would not convey a risen Christ, great as the truth was, but He must convey an ascended Christ, a glorified Christ, a victorious Christ. This is the Gospel which the Holy Ghost bears to the hearts and consciences of men—a Gospel of full deliverance. This is the reason it was expedient that the local and visible presence of Christ should be withdrawn, that the invisible and universal Spirit of the presence of Christ should be revealed to the Church, and to the consciences of all within it.

What is this revelation of the Holy Ghost to e Church? Christ declared, "If I go away I ll send Him unto you." "When He is come e will reprove the world of sin, of righteous-ss, and of judgment." Every believer in the ord Jesus is bound to be a Christ-convicted an. He must be, for the word in the Greek is convicted." "He shall convict the world of , of righteousness, and judgment." When the mforter comes, his first work in comforting is convict. That is why we find it so contrary our expectations. Very often when we ask know more of the Comforter He reveals to us me sin, some defect, something where we have led to please God, and we say that is not mfort from God. Are we convicted of sin—of e sin of unbelief? Unbelief not only is one sin, t includes all sin. It is the foundation and ot of all sin. It comprehends all sin, and hen the Holy Ghost convicts of unbelief it is cause it is the groundwork of all other sin as ell. How often the Church of Christ needs to convicted of the sin of unbelief. How many ristians dare not, will not, believe even the essed promises of the power of God which are vealed to the Church.

Then the Holy Ghost convicts the world of ghteousness; that is, of the righteousness of sus because He is gone to the Father, and we e Him no more. In his perfect righteousness e hath ascended up into heaven and taken his ace by virtue of his own righteousness on the ry throne of God as our representative. Oh at the Church of Christ would believe that e are convicted of the righteousness of Jesus—t only of sin and unbelief, that we should lieve in Jesus; but that, because He is gone the Father, we have access unto the heavenly aces and are there established even to-day on e very throne of God.

Then the Holy Ghost convicts of judgment cause the prince of this world is judged. here are very few people in the Church comratively who believe in this, who have been rice convicted. Many have been once conicted of the sin of unbelief, and many twice nvicted of the righteousness of the law, but w few have been convicted of judgment because e prince of this world is judged? Christ has ndemned him and gained the victory. He says, Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." he Lord might indeed have added "the flesh, d the devil," for He is he victor over them l. Have we been convicted of the judgent, and are we going forth in the power of rist to conquer this world, condemn Satan, d thus defeat the prince of darkness?

What is it, besides, that God the Holy Ghost parts to the Church in the way of the knowdge of God? Not only doth He show us God be a Justifier, but God to be a Sanctifier. omans viii. is the wondrous chapter of the Holy ost—the fullest chapter in the whole Bible of e Holy Ghost—every verse teeming with the wers and virtues of the Holy Ghost. The apter begins with "no condemnation," and ds with "no separation," and what is tween? The believers walk in the Holy ost. Not only does this chapter begin with no condemnation," but it ends with "ye are re than conquerors;" that is better even than o separation." This very chapter which is pealed to as the chapter beginning with "no ndemnation," and ending with "no separation," the perfection of the atonement, is the very apter of the Holy Ghost. This "no condemnan" and "no separation" is to those who walk the Spirit, and, therefore, we read in the pen-g verses "the law of the Spirit of life in Christ sus hath made us free from the law of sin and ath." There is the power of the Holy Ghost break with the past, and what more? "That e righteousness of the law might be fulfilled us who walk not after the flesh but after the irit." That is, the law of the Spirit of life ables the man to walk in the law of the ghteousness of God. Not only must we break th the past by the power of the Holy Ghost, t we must walk in new life, do the righteousss of Jesus and fulfil the law of God.

If you trace that chapter through you will find e Holy Ghost is revealed not only as the irit of life and righteousness, but as the sident Keeper, the one who should dwell in you. There must be a resident Keeper of these poor earthly temples of ours. We cannot keep them ourselves. God, the Holy Ghost, is put in to keep them for us. How many people there are, even Christians, who let their houses, and yet when they have let them to others to occupy as tenants retain the use of them themselves. They give up their houses, they say, to God, but they retain the use of every room for themselves. Oh that God may bring this home to each one of us. We must have a resident Keeper and a resident Quickener who shall quicken this mortal body, not only hereafter but now. We must also have a resident Guide, because those only are the sons of God who are led by the Spirit of God. And there must be a resident Intercessor, by whose power we cry "Abba, Father." It is not difficult to pray. You can pray the prayer of the Spirit, "Father." It is the shortest, but most spiritual prayer. By the adoption of the spirit we can cry, "Abba, Father." And so, again, it is the Spirit within us who bears witness with our spirit. We have a resident Intercessor with us, and He bears witness continually with our spirit that we are the sons of God.

But besides all this the Spirit imparts the knowledge of God, not only as Justifier, not only as Sanctifier, but also as an Energiser for service. This impelling of the Holy Ghost within may be increased a thousand-fold at any peculiar juncture. There must be a rising sap in the tree in the spring-time of the year. There must be a flooding of the tidal river of the soul by the incoming tide of the ocean of God. I believe that we ought to look for those flushings and floodings of the Holy Ghost. Let us expect that there should be a new power, an increase of power—a far higher rising of power within us to bear us away. Let us abandon ourselves to this blessed Holy Ghost power. Let us demand it of God as our right according to his own blessed promise, and then be ready to give ourselves away to it and go forth in the power of the Holy Ghost.

What may be called the sign of this Holy Ghost life may first be said to be an inspired life! It is a life beginning with that wondrous Wind of the Spirit that cometh we know not whence and goeth we know not whither. We are between the Divine whence and the Divine—the immortal—whither. We are inspired by the Holy Breath of God, and just as we recognise that we lead inspired lives we shall look for the inspiration of God. According to the prayer in the liturgy, we may say "that God may pour upon us the inspiration of the Holy Ghost that we may perfectly know and worthily magnify his holy name." Oh, that we may live inspired lives.

And then the Holy Ghost life is a fruitful One. The fruit of the Spirit is love. Is there love in your life? Does it overcome everything else? Is love the first thing, the last thing? Do men see and feel that yours is a life of love? Oh that we were more earnest for this first-fruit—the spirit of Love. Love is the sweetness of the fruit; then the colour of the fruit is joy; the ripeness of the fruit is peace. Have you noticed that joy is the second fruit of the Spirit, and that it is carried between love and peace? You cannot keep joy unless you have love and peace bearing it on either side. Like the Eshcol grapes it must be borne by the Caleb and the Joshua, the love and the peace. Many people are anxious to retain joy; keep, I pray you, the love and the peace.

And besides, what is the life of the Holy Ghost? It is a symbolic life. All the symbols of the Holy Ghost in Scripture must be seen in this life of the Holy Ghost in each believer. This is what God expects. Is the Holy Ghost compared to wind? So every child of God should have the fresh air of heaven about him. Have you not noticed that there is a great difference between Christians? Some Christians seem to generate moral oxygen wherever they go. They breathe the fresh air of heaven about them. Oh, that we had more of this blessed, vital breath of the Holy Ghost, and that we had done with our own self-breath, breathing only the Holy Ghost breath! The Holy Ghost is compared to oil. Oh, for the consecrating oil! I know it was first the leper who was consecrated with oil, and I remember with joy that it was when we were washed from our leprosy and sin, and the blood touched each point of our extremity, that then was the holy consecrating oil put upon each one of us. And so, too, there must be the water of life. Oh! that every Christian might speak as though his voice were the voice of many waters—the waters of the river of life. Oh! that he might have life wherever he goes, that the river of life might follow him, that thus we might lead the symbolic life, and that the dews of the Holy Ghost might rest upon us. Are there not many Christians who want dew, and who have nothing of the tender spirit of the living Christ about them, nothing of the gentleness and blessedness hidden in the dew of the Holy Ghost? Oh! to be buried in the dew of the Holy Ghost like the early morning flower, to be hidden in the dew—every leaf and every blossom hidden in the dew. Let it ever be so with us.

Then the Holy Ghost life is also a transfigured life. Wherever you look you see Jesus. It is a transfiguration all day long. That is what Pentecost was. If you look to heaven, like Stephen, even amidst a shower of stones, you shall see the glory of God and Jesus standing. It is a transfigured face. If you look into your own inner life, you shall say, "It is not I who live, but Christ who liveth in me." It is a transfigured life there, and the outward life will be transfigured also. When some one said to Michael Angelo, who was finishing one of his statues, "You are only putting trifling touches here and there," he said, "These trifles make perfection, but perfection is no trifle." Children of God, it is the little things that make up the life and the dignity of life. Be faithful in that which is least, and you shall be faithful in that which is greatest. Live like Christ, for thirty years doing little things, and you shall be able for three years to do glorious work for the Master. Oh, that we might see the dignity of little things!

A child was sent by her mother to buy something on a Sunday, and she said, "Mother, it is Sunday." The mother said, "Take a shawl with you and cover it when you come away from the shop." And the little child answered, "But is it not Sunday under the shawl?" What we want is to consecrate the least to God. We want that the little things shall be transfigured, and then the creation shall become transfigured.

What else is transfigured? The Bible is transfigured. I remember when God revealed Himself to me. I read the Bible again, and it was as though an angel were standing over me—it was so luminous with the light of heaven. It became a new book to me. It is still a new book. Every page is full of Jesus. Wherever you look you see the image of Jesus breaking out in the sacred page. Every prospect now becomes dear, because Jesus leads us on. "The cup which my Father hath given me," He says. You see the arms of heaven on every cup of sorrow, and you press it to your lips and drink to the glory of God.

So with the promises of God. They are transfigured. Oh! that Christians knew the power of the promises. Oh! that they were as bundles of spiritual matches that we could strike against any calamity, and the wood of any cross, and make a light for God which should shine upon our way, that we might know more of this transfigured life.

May I not add this, that this wondrous Holy Ghost life is a thrice-baptized life. There is the baptism with water unto repentance. You pass through that, but there is the baptism of the death of self; have you passed through that? There is the baptism of the fire of the Holy Ghost; have you passed through that? God is crying out through the Church for

> Pitchers for the lamps of God:
> Let the cry go forth abroad,
> Christ, the flaming Altar,'s here,
> Soiled souls and lips draw near:
> Crown our penitential brow,
> Fire of God,—come now, come now.

This Holy Ghost life is a crowned life. It is a life which has a crown in it. Do you know you have a crown on your head now, children of God? Oh, not only are you going to be crowned, you are crowned. If you hold up the penny postage stamp and look through it with the gaslight, you will see a crown in it. So in every communication of life there is a crown hidden, the crown which is yet to be revealed. Have you noticed the contrast between Abraham and Lot? Have you noticed how that Abraham outside Sodom had more power in that city than Lot, his own near relative, in it? Have you noticed that Abraham was able to save one at least out of Sodom, but Lot could not save anybody, and when the angel said "Hast thou here any beside?" his other relatives only mocked at him. The reason of that was that there was no word of God abiding in him. There was no living power, and "where the word of a king is there is power." Even Lot was saved out of Sodom in answer to Abraham's prayer, and not his own.

How may we keep this blessed Holy Ghost and increase this baptism of the Spirit? This first: Resist not the Holy Ghost. If God is moving you onwards do not resist the desires and impulses within you. Again, grieve not the Holy Ghost; quench not the holy aspiration. Cling to the Master and claim his blessed power and presence. Claim his promises. Dare to step out upon those promises, and find them to be a blessed reality in your soul. This is what we want, that the children of God should be thus inspired to go forward and should indeed claim to the full that which God has so bountifully provided for us.

THURSDAY MORNING, JUNE 26.

The meeting was opened with prayer by the Rev. J. B. Figgis. After a hymn had been sung, Hosea v. 15—vi. 3 was read.

CHAIRMAN'S ADDRESS.

I will call attention to a few passages in this book of Hosea, which deals clearly with our subject of the knowledge of God. We often seem to think of seeking the knowledge of God as a privilege rather than a duty, and hence we are apt to regard the absence or want of growth in the knowledge of God, not really as a sin, but as a loss to ourselves. Now, I think Hosea shows us very clearly that not to know God, not to grow in the knowledge of God, is not merely a sin, but it is the most grievous hurt that we can inflict upon our loving Father's breast. It is grieving the Holy Spirit of God, whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption. It was this coming short of the knowledge of God that He points to here as their offence, "till they acknowledge their offence,"—not their loss of privilege merely, but their offence. For what is it that our gracious God and Father desires above all things, desires more than all active service, all consecration of goods? Look at the 6th verse, "For I desired mercy, and not sacrifice; and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings." God wants to be known, to be understood, to be sympathised with by his creatures, and especially by his own children. What can grieve the heart of a father or a mother more than to be misunderstood by their own children, and therefore misrepresented? that those children on whom they have spent themselves, should grow up to misunderstand them, not to enter into their purposes, not to sympathise with their deepest feelings, and desires, and plans? and therefore it is that we find our Father in heaven throughout this book, as well as others, pressing upon his children not only the loss of privilege to themselves, but the pain and grief that it is to Him that they do not cultivate his society, live in his sight, and enjoy his presence and his fellowship. Hence it is that He so touchingly said: "They have transgressed against Me: though I have redeemed them, yet they have spoken lies against Me;" "they rebel against Me;" and in the 15th, "they imagine mischief against Me" (vii. 13—15). And in v. 4: "They will not frame their doings to turn unto their God: for the spirit of whoredoms is in the midst of them, and they have not known the Lord." For the same reason in the opening words of Isaiah we find our Father expressing his grief to his people and saying: "Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth: for the Lord hath spoken: I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against Me. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider." They do not know nor consider Me. Can we find any language throughout the Word of God more touchingly expressive of our Father's desire that we should know Him, that we should enter into his society, and understand his character and purposes? It is therefore an offence not to know God. It is a grieving of the Holy Spirit of God.

Now what must be the consequence? Every sin entails chastisement; especially must judgment begin at the House of God, and therefore we find in this very book that this sin which touched God in his most tender point, in his very heart of love, was necessarily visited with chastisement. In Hosea iv. 6 it is clearly pointed out, "My people are destroyed for lack of knowledge"—the knowledge of God. "Because thou hast rejected knowledge"—that is the knowledge of the Most High—"I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to Me; seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children." But this is the chastisement of a loving one; not a judge but a Father and a Saviour; and therefore whilst He is grieved in his heart because of their lack of desire, He does not give them up. "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zeboim? mine heart is turned within Me, my repentings are kindled together." There is the heart of love breaking out for them. "I cannot let you go. I cannot visit you with extermination as I did those guilty cities. You are my loved ones. I have sent chastisement upon you, but it is that you may gauge the offence that has so grieved Me, that you may seek my face again and return." In ii. 14 He says: "Therefore, behold, I will allure her, and bring her into the wilderness, and speak comfortably unto her." And then may manifest the relationship which exists not between a master and servant, but between a husband a wife. He says: "And in that day will I make a covenant for them with the beasts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground: and I will break the bow and the sword and the battle out of the earth, and will make them to lie down safely. And I will betroth thee unto Me for ever: yea, I will betroth thee unto Me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in lovingkindness and in mercies." It is the closer, more intimate, more loving relationship of the bride to the bridegroom. In the 20th verse there is nothing better for ourselves, nothing better in time, nothing higher in eternity, than to know the Lord.

Now come back to the 6th chapter, to the result of it subjectively, experimentally, in those who are the objects of this love, and the subjects of this discipline: "Come and let us return unto the Lord." That blessed Spirit of God has wrought the desire to return. There may be many, some at least, who have come up to the Conference interested perhaps to hear about these things, but not with that one desire to know God better or to increase in knowledge by practically obeying his will. Their hearts have grown cold, and they have got into the world and the wilderness, and as for experimental knowledge of God—they have a bowing acquaintance, but it is little more. Oh! that God may give us all that desire to know Him. It is what we are met for. Let us return unto the Lord, and then mark the results. "Then shall we know if we follow on to know the Lord." Salvation is unconditional, but communion and knowledge are strictly conditional, for we are to follow on like Paul, "counting all things loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord."

This result, this knowledge, is a certainty. There is no uncertainty in this Divine science. "His going forth is prepared as the morning." The word "prepared" is the same as is used in Gen. xli., when Joseph says to Pharaoh, "The thing is established of God." There is something certain, stable, regular about God's way. There is no uncertainty, if we only follow God's way. "His going forth is like the morning." He is not far from every one of us. If there is that honest following after, that conscientious desire to know the Lord—every one of us may know Him better to-day than ever before. As certain as that the sun rose in the east, and will rise in the east to-morrow, if the Lord tarry, so certainly is his going forth prepared and established. At the same time, the break of day is gradual—oh, how gradual! You cannot tell when the first gleam of dawn breaks upon the earth; and so the growth in knowledge of the Lord is a gradual thing. Not that sometimes there may not come moments when, as from behind a cloud, the effulgence of God, in the face of Jesus Christ, shines forth, and we can remember distinct epochs in our spiritual experience when further revelations in that knowledge were vouchsafed to us; but, in the main, it is like the light of the morning, and the clear shining after rain—gradual, as well as established and certain. How ready He is to vouchsafe it to us. Oh, yes, as the father ran to meet the prodigal son, He shall come to us as the rain, gently, softly, bringing fresh life and fertility, and joy and peace to our souls.

I have only here pointed out a few passages of Scripture, which I hope may help us all to follow on and know the Lord, by seeing the sorrow and the grief to the Holy Spirit of God which we inflict by not thus seeking Him, and then to see the blessed way of advancement and growth in that most glorious knowledge. The Lord grant that this may be the result of this and of our whole day's Conference, for Christ's sake.

A Threefold View of Knowledge.

BY REV JOHN H. SHAW.

In absolute knowledge of God, as we heard yesterday, we must admit that we are but as agnostics; though in relative knowledge of God we claim the position and privilege of children. The knowledge of what God is in Himself is beyond our present faculties; it is too wonderful for us, so high that we cannot attain unto it. But with the knowledge of what God is to us, as revealed and related to us in Christ Jesus, it is different. There we may cry, "My God, we know Thee;" there we may "freely know the things that are given us" to know "of God." Our absolute knowledge of God necessarily must be most imperfect, whilst our relative knowledge of God may be most clear, and comforting, soul-satisfying, and soul-saving. The little child of some mighty monarch may know nothing of his great sire's puissant sway, but he may know that sire right well as a loving, tender, compassionate, and forgiving father.

So we, if we have received the spirit of adoption, may know God as Abba, Father, may know Christ as Saviour and Shepherd, may know the Holy Ghost as Comforter, Sanctifier, and Indweller. We may know God, not with a theoretical and speculative knowledge that leads simply to bewilderment, but with a knowledge, personal, practical, and experimental, which leads to those blessed results which are brought before us as our subject for this morning, on the first three of which I have been requested to speak.

The knowledge of God—(1) The Essence of Life; (2) The Ground of Faith; (3) The Source of Peace. For the sake of linking them together allow me to paraphrase them thus:—

1. The knowledge of God imparted to the soul, its Life.
2. The knowledge of God exercised by the soul, its Faith.
3. The knowledge of God rested on in the soul, its Peace.

First, the knowledge of God imparted to, and received by, the soul, is the soul's spiritual life. Christ tells us that in this knowledge consists the very essence of life, spiritual and eternal. "This is life eternal, that they might know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom Thou hast sent" (John xvii. 3). The life eternal of the soul is not merely the continued existence of the soul, nor its endless duration. It is rather the life belonging to eternity. In the knowledge of God consists the life belonging to eternity—the highest state of being of which the creature is capable.

There are depths in this wondrous saying of the Lord Jesus that we with our present faculties are unable to fathom. It need not surprise us. No wonder it is difficult to understand what life spiritual and eternal is, since it is most difficult to understand or define what mere physical and natural life is. We may define life as consisting in the inherent powers of motion and assimilation. Take the very lowest form of life with which we are acquainted—the cell of protoplasm. You find it a little vortex of motion, and of constant growth, by continued assimilation. This is life in its simplest form. A marvellous force, though—one that man with all his ingenuity cannot produce or even explain. "He knoweth not whence it cometh, or whither is goeth." Latest scientific experiments have conclusively established that it is never a self-produced thing—that "life can only come from the touch of life"—no material or physical forces can evolve it. The inert particles of matter are only quickened as they are brought under the spell of an agent already living.

And in life there are various stages and denominations. There is vegetable life, that is the lowest stage. There is animal life, that is a distinct stage higher. There is more of life in a bird than in a tree. The bird is alive to many a thing to which the tree is insensible, and, so to speak, dead. And not only is the circumference of life, as it were, enlarged as we advance in the scale, but another form of life begins to make itself manifest in the animal kingdom—found almost in a startling degree in some of the lower insects, e.g., ants, but which reaches its highest development in man. I mean mental life—a life that consists not in the motions of matter in the body, or the assimilation of matter by the body, but in the motions of thought in the mind, and the assimilation, by the mind, of ideas. We speak of this mental life as intelligence, or the property of knowing and acquiring knowledge.

It is superior to vegetable life; indeed, vegetable life does not seem capable of it, for we do not speak of intelligent plants. It is superior also to mere animal life, and is something superadded to it. In the motions of thought, in the motions of feeling, in the assimilation of ideas, lies the life of the mind, just as in the circulation of the blood, the play of the lungs, the sensations of the nerves, and the assimilation of food, resides the life of the body. The body lives whilst it breathes; the mind lives whilst it thinks.

Let us carry on this process of thought a stage further. Man possesses, in addition to a body and a mind—which are the one altogether, the other at least to some extent, common to him with the lower animals—a soul, distinctively breathed into him by the Divine Being. And in the possession of this soul there lies the possibility of his attaining to a still higher development of life to that which is possible to the mere animal creation. Just as an animal is capable of a higher life than a vegetable, owing to its possession of a brain, so a man is capable of a higher life than a mere animal, owing to his possession of a soul. The endowment of a soul gives him the possibility of attaining to that which is the highest stage of life, viz., spiritual life. And in what does the spiritual life of the soul consist? When does man's soul begin to live, and how is its life maintained?

Mental life begins when the first glimmer of a thought flashes through the newly-formed brain; with the first ray of intelligence begins the thought-life of the mind. So the life of the soul begins, how? To use the very words of inspiration, when God, who commanded the light to shine out of darkness, shines into the heart to give the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. It is the creative act of Omnipotence, quickening into life the soul of man. In the earth's primal chaos the matter previously existing possessed the possibility of being quickened into motion, and thrilled by light waves, though it could never have so quickened and illuminated itself; the brooding Spirit of God must come, the living Agent from above, bending down to inert matter beneath and quickening it into motion, must thrill it with light luminiferous waves. And just so, dear friends, the brooding Spirit of God must quicken man's dead soul, creating the first motion in the soul by the illumination of the soul with the knowledge of God in Christ.

It is a personal thing this; oh, I trust all we here have experienced it. The Holy Ghost must come upon us, and the power of the Highest overshadow us, that so this Divine life may be spiritually conceived in us, and Christ be formed in our hearts the hope of glory. He that so hath the Son "hath life," whilst "he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

And as the life of the soul begins with the conception of God in the soul, or, to word it otherwise, with the reception of the knowledge of God in the person of Jesus Christ by the soul, so the life of the soul is sensibly indicated by the emotion of the soul which that quickening knowledge of God in Christ calls forth—emotions of trust in God, love towards God, hope in God, emotions which the carnal mind of man simply cannot have, and which are just as much beyond him, because his soul is still dead, as thought-life is beyond the plant, because it has no brain wherewith to think.

And then, with the motions of the quickened soul towards God, there also comes the property the soul now has, as a living thing, of acquiring more of God by assimilation, becoming more and more a partaker of the Divine nature, by growing in grace, and in the knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ our Lord.

Thus, then, the knowledge of God imparted to and received by the soul is the soul's spiritual life. Its further assimilation is the soul's spiritual growth; and this is a process of life which, from its very nature, is undying—a process of growth which, from its very nature, is unending, an eternal life—not endless existence merely, but a life that constitutes the life of eternity. "This is life eternal, to know Thee the only true God" (aye, mark that, not some fictitious deity of man's imagining—and oh, what idol divinities even here in England are set up in the chambers of man's mind, but God the only true), and "Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent."

This is a life which is necessarily eternal, to use a biological phrase (which some of you perhaps may be familiar with from its occurrence in a remarkable book* from which I have culled not a few thoughts), because it is "uninterrupted correspondence with a perfect and unchanging environment." The life of the musician is not eternal, he lives only in the sphere of music, whilst the hears; let him become cut off from it, let him become deaf, and his musical life is dead. Let the artist become blind and his artistic life is o'er. But upon no bodily functions, nay, not even upon any mental functions, does the life of the soul consist. The body may die. The brain may perish, but the soul live on, because the life of the soul is to know, not music, or painting, or anything with which it is connected through bodily organisation, but to know God. To know God is to correspond with God, to have communion with God, and so to live in an eternal sphere, which is beyond the reach of the changes of death, dissolution, and decay. A life—oh! glorious thought—that through the ages of eternity shall be an ever-expanding life.

Christ came to impart to us the knowledge of God, that so we might "have life, and have it more abundantly;" here at the best we but see through a glass darkly, and know in part, but then shall we know even as also we are known. And in the ever increasing knowledge of the infinite greatness, and goodness, and glory of God, we have a life capable of infinite expansion, and so capable of ever increasing bliss. Well may we pray, in the words of the old collect, "O, God, mercifully grant that we who know Thee now by faith, may, after this life, have the fruition of thy glorious Godhead, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

But I must pass on, more briefly, and observe that if the knowledge of God imparted by the Spirit to the soul is life, that knowledge exercised by the soul is Faith. This is the first motion of the soul when quickened by the Spirit—that which translates the soul from the sphere of death into that of life—and this motion of the soul is called forth in the soul by the knowledge of God imparted by the Spirit to the soul; and this brings us to the second text before our thoughts this morning—Psalm ix. 10, "They that know thy Name shall put their trust in Thee."

I need not remind you that in the language of antiquity, a name always embodied some description of the persons to whom it belonged emphatically is this the case with the name of God. The name of God is the revelation of the character of God. God Himself proclaims it as such. Moses prays, "Show me now thy way, that I may know Thee." God put Moses in the cleft of the rock, and proclaims the name of the Lord. How? with grandiloquent and sonorous titles, as earthly monarchs are heralded? No, but by a declaration of the character of God. "The Lord, the Lord God, merciful, and gracious, forgiving iniquity, trangression, and sin, and that will by no means clear the guilty. What is the Old Testament but a revelation of the name of God revealed there in pictures, just as He is in the New Testament revealed in person? Look at the different names of God—what do we find in hem but God making by them a revelation of Himself to his people? The Almighty God, the Jah-Jehovah, the self-existent Being, becoming to perishing men Jehovah-Jireh, the Provider of the Ransom; Jehovah-Rophi, the Lord the Healer; Jehovah-Nissi, the Lord the Conqueror; Jehovah-Shalom, the Lord the Peacegiver; Jehovah Tsidkenu, the Lord the Sanctifier; and lastly, Jehovah Shammah, the Indweller.

Now, in the New Testament all these scattered rays are gathered up, and focussed in One, Jehovah-Jesus. "God, who in sundry times and in divers manners spake unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son." And how speaks the Son? "I have declared unto them, O Father, thy Name, and will declare it;" so, "the Son of God is come, and hath given us an understanding that we may know Him that is true."

Now, this knowledge of God's name, that is of God's character as revealed in Christ, will lead to what? "They that know thy name will put their trust in Thee." The knowledge of God's character received into the soul will show itself by the soul's exercise of trust. The foundation of trust, be it ever remembered, is knowledge. Faith is not some extraordinary emotion of the soul that the poor soul has to wriggle itself into. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God," for the "entrance of thy Word giveth light." God's Word is the medium for imparting, through the Spirit, God's knowledge, and that knowledge received by the soul naturally and necessarily leads to faith exercised by the soul. A bank-note is tendered me—it is a promise to pay, but by whom? The Oriental Bank Corporation. I should not have it; that institution has lost its character. I would not trust it. Another note is handed to me; this bears the name of the Bank of England. Ah! that is a different matter. I know that bank has a name for solvency and stability. So, without any hesitation, I take the note just for what it stands. I do not ask for any discount off its amount, as I might if there was a shade of suspicion attaching to its name. I just take it for what it appears on its face to be worth, so confident am I that it will be paid to the full in the sterling coin of the realm. My knowledge of that great institution leads me to place implicit trust in its promises. So a knowledge of the character of God will lead us to be fully persuaded, as was Abraham, "that what He hath promised He will be able also to perform." Take another illustration: A maiden is wooed by one whose character she knows and esteems, and thus in whose word she relies. He tells her of his love. She believes it. He tells her of the future happiness he has in store for her, if she will be his. She trusts him, as she would not a stranger. She gives him her heart, she entrusts her future to his keeping, and commits her all to his charge.

Now the great God condescends to woo us by the revelation of his love to us in Christ. Have we "known and believed the love that He hath to us?" If so we will give Him our hearts, and entrust Him with our all. St. Paul did so. "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed to Him against that day." We see, then, that the knowledge of God received into the soul, when acted on by the soul, is Faith—and when rested in the soul is Peace. This brings us to our third text, Job xxii. 21: "Acquaint now thyself with Him, and be at peace." The knowledge of God, and that God the true God, is the only knowledge that gives peace. The knowledge of things in the world—does that give peace? "He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow," as we see "all the foundation of the earth out of course," "and the whole creation travailing in pain together." The knowledge of things within: can that give peace? The heart knoweth its own bitterness—its own plague; it is like a troubled sea that cannot rest. But the knowledge of God comes and gives peace. For it is the only knowledge that enables us to look, without actual desperation, either on the world without or the world within. So far as the world without goes, it shows us that the present state of things is developing to a glorious consummation—all working together for good. So far as the world within is concerned, it comes and speaks peace to the troubled heart. The soul is disquieted by the consciousness of sin. God makes Himself known as "forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin," and shows us how He can be faithful and just in doing so, since peace has been made by the blood of the Cross. The soul is harassed by cares and anxieties, but it learns that God is a Father, that He knows our every need, that in all our afflictions is afflicted; that He is all powerful, and that His resources can never be limited; that He is all-wise, and therefore can never make a mistake; that He is all love, and therefore can never be unkind or neglect us, or cease to care for us. And so we learn to bend our will to God's will, and know that his way and his will must ever be the best way and the best will for us. And here is the peace of ceasing to struggle against and learning to cling to Omnipotence.

And then the soul longs for an object on which it can settle down and rest, certain that the changes and chances of this mortal life shall not disturb its repose. It cries out for a love that shall never fail it or disappoint it. Where shall it find such a love that shall never fail it or disappoint it, and where shall it find such a life? Only in the unchanging, all-loving God. As saith Augustine of old. "O Lord, Thou hast formed us for Thyself, and so our hearts can find no rest till they find it in Thee."

Do we know what it is to "rest in the Lord"? Is ours this peace that floweth on as a river, deep and calm? Are we increasing in the knowledge of God, and so is "grace and peace multiplied unto us through the knowledge of God and of Jesus Christ our Lord"? Oh, that a knowledge of God, personal, practical, experimental, may be possessed by each one of us here—a knowledge, Life-imparting, Faith-enabling, Peace-affording. No matter what dunces we may be in other things, we ought each one of us to have learnt this in Christ's school. He says, "I know my sheep and am known of mine" Do I know my Jesus? Does He know me as his? How can I tell? An answer I saw written by a young lady, who was going out at her own expense, in connection with the Female Education Society some six years ago, will remain ever imprinted on my mind. The question was put before her—"What reason have you for believing that yours is a soul-saving knowledge of Christ?" This was her reply—"I take the lost sinner's place; I claim the lost sinner's Saviour; and so I have the witness of the Spirit in the Word that Christ is mine and I am his." Ah! dear friends, that is the A B C of the knowledge of God. May none of us go away without having experimentally learnt this soul-saving lesson.

The Chairman, in fulfilling the pleasing duty of stating that the work at Mildmay was constantly in need of funds, related the following: We have received a cheque for 100 guineas as a thank-offering from a young husband and wife, who first met at Mildmay. The gentleman says: "At the last moment we are prevented by illness from being present; and not knowing any department of work at Mildmay which is in special need, we send the cheque to be used at your discretion. Praying the Conference may be as much blessed as in years past," &c. Evidently they found many good things from the Lord, and I trust you may all do so too.

Special requests for prayer were then read out by Mr. Mathieson.

Knowledge is Power.

BY REV. DR. PENTECOST.

That portion of the subject which has been assigned to me to speak upon is the knowledge of God as the secret of power. The text which has been suggested is found in Daniel xi. 32: "And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall he corrupt by flatteries: but the people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits." I think that the first copy that I ever had put before me when a boy at school contained those words, familiar to us all, "Knowledge is power." We have heard this morning that the knowledge of God is the beginning of life, and that the knowledge of God is the secret of peace, but God has called us not only to life and to peace, but to fellowship, which is more than life, and more than peace, and to service in which He has made us his partner. We have heard that the Old Testament is a revelation of God in picture; the New Testament is a revelation of God in person; or, as the Apostle has put it, "In these last days God has spoken, or revealed Himself to us in his Son." All the knowledge of God is headed up in Jesus Christ, so that if we are to apprehend God or come to a knowledge of God, not only for some things, but for all things, we need simply to direct our attention to Jesus Christ. Indeed, there is no hope of knowing God sufficiently for anything apart from Jesus Christ. There are hints of God to be seen in nature. They reveal his eternal power and Godhead. But how insufficient that knowledge is for the soul. There is a fulness of the knowledge of God, the God of all grace and truth, as that knowledge shines out to us in the face of Jesus Christ. David said, "The heavens declare the glory of God;" they show forth in a little measure his power as the Creator, but the glory of God was reserved to be revealed to us in the face of Jesus Christ.

The substance of the revelation of God in Jesus Christ is set forth to us in the Gospel of his Son; the end of the revelation of God was the Gospel so far as the revelation was concerned. Therefore we read that when Jesus was raised from the dead and went back to his Father, He bade his disciples "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," or, in other words, make known God to them in Jesus Christ; go and make disciples or teach men about God by means of the Gospel. We need never go astray from this single commission—preach the Gospel. There is no knowledge of God or man, or heaven, or hell, that is not properly articulated into the Gospel; that may not be understood, as we understand the Gospel. There is no knowledge of sin except in the face of Jesus Christ; there certainly is no knowledge of salvation except in the face of Jesus Christ; there is no knowledge of hell except as we see ourselves delivered from it by Jesus Christ; there is no knowledge of heaven, except as we have the knowledge of heaven in Him, and by Him; there is no knowledge of death except as we find out what it is to be out of Christ; there is no knowledge of life except as we are in Christ. So that towards whatever topic we may direct our attention, the key to all knowledge upon all questions concerning God and man, time and eternity, is found in Jesus Christ; therefore, if we are to know about the knowledge of God for power, we must know it in connection with the Gospel, which is the unfolding of God in Jesus Christ to men and for men.

We may, then, ask ourselves the question, What is the Gospel? There are a great many definitions, or different ways of stating the Gospel in the Scripture, but for substance, I call attention to three passages. Sometimes, we say that the Gospel is the Gospel of Jesus Christ, but I love this passage very much: "And declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead." The Gospel, therefore, is the Gospel of God; the good news from God concerning his Son Jesus Christ. This has been the revelation which God has been making to us from the beginning. In Luke xxiv. we find a brief statement of what the Gospel is. "Thus it is written, and thus it behoved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."

The Gospel, then, is to be found in the fact of the incarnation of Christ; in his death and in his resurrection. From that good news, or out of that great event, there flows to us the forgiveness of sin and all that follows in the train of blessed grace—of reconciliation to God, life in God, life from God, and fellowship with God. In 1 Cor. xv. the Gospel is summarised in a few words: "Moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the Gospel which I preached unto you, which also ye have received, and wherein ye stand; by which also ye are saved, if ye keep in memory what I preached unto you, unless ye have believed in vain." There is the Gospel, Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures. He was buried and raised again the third day, according to the Scriptures. We do not have to travel very far to find the secret of all knowledge.

We do not have to depart from this simple statement of the Gospel to find a door into every department of knowledge. Of course I do not mean to say that we are always to preach on the Atonement, or upon the Resurrection, but these are the great root truths. Now the mere statement of the Gospel is not sufficient. It is quite possible for us to preach the Gospel, as Paul says, "in word only." We are to speak of the knowledge of God with reference to power, and as power is given to us in order that we may preach the Gospel and men may come into the knowledge of it, it behoves us to know what the connection is between the Gospel, as intelligently revealed to intelligent men and women, and the power which is essential to make it not only efficient but sufficient in the hearts and minds of men. Paul says to the Thessalonians—that remarkable church which he gathered in about three weeks, and amongst men in whom, perhaps as much if not more than any other community, the mighty power of God was shown—"Our Gospel was preached with much assurance." We lay this down as a very simple truth, that a supernatural religion must have a supernatural power to propagate it. We have the record of the supernatural religion in this Book, but the record of God in Christ is not sufficient. The bare statement of the truth will not save the world, and God has wisely and beneficently made the power by which the Gospel is to be preached efficiently, to hinge upon another gift which He holds in his own hand, and which He never has committed absolutely to us, but for which we are to wait upon Him, observing conditions upon which He will entrust us with that power.

So we are told that before Christ suffered his disciples to speak one single fact which they knew, and of which they were eye-witnesses, He commanded them to go to Jerusalem and wait until they received power from on high. It is possible for us to preach the Gospel in word only, but if we do so we shall not preach it savingly. That is not power which simply indicates a revelation of God intelligently to the understanding. There are hundreds and thousands of people who have an intelligent knowledge of the Gospel. They are conversant with every truth, and yet are not saved. It is possible for us so to preach the Gospel that men's feelings may be touched and their consciences aroused; men and women may be brought into conditions of great tenderness, and softening, and emotional sympathy with the Gospel; yet there is no power. It is possible for us to frame our address and preach it so rhetorically, in the best sense of the word, that men shall not be able to gainsay or resist our argument; yet they are not converted. Many a sermon that is publicly declared to be powerful is powerless, not because of anything about it that is visible to the intelligence of man, but because of the absence from it of that which is invisible. It is a very common thing to find men whose consciences have been aroused almost to the point of despair under the preaching of the Word of God, and yet there is no power. It is possible so to preach the Gospel that men's lives may be reformed, and they may be ready to give up sin and practise righteousness, and yet there has been no power. If all these things are true, and everyone who has had experience in preaching knows it is, it may be said truly that the Gospel came in word only and not in power, nor in the Holy Ghost, nor in assurance. I know of no truth in connection with the Gospel that is of more importance for us to consider than this, that we may preach it again and again in word only, and not in power.

Turn to two or three passages of Scripture with reference to power. In Luke xxiv. the commission which our Lord gave to his disciples was this, "And, behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you; but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high." In Acts i. 8 we have these words, "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto Me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judæa, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." In Romans i. the Apostle speaks of the Gospel as being the power of God—evidently speaking of it when preaching in connection with the power which God promised, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation;" and so in 1 Cor. i. 18 we read, "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God," and in the 24th verse, "But unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God."

We might multiply these passages very much, but this is enough to bring before our lives and our thoughts this morning, that the knowledge of God is to be had in the face of Jesus Christ; that the revelation is of God's grace to us by means of the Incarnation, the Cross, and the Resurrection. The Gospel thus embodied in Jesus Christ is to go forth into the world, accompanied by the Holy Spirit sent down from God. The Gospel thus preached becomes a cloud, not without rain, but pierced and broken, and the floods of heaven fall upon men. The Gospel, then, is not a well without water, but becomes a well of salvation, out of which we may drink water which, if we drink, we shall never thirst again. It is not only the Sword of the Spirit, but that Sword wielded by an arm which is nerved by the Spirit and made mighty by God.

The first secret of power is to understand that we have no power in ourselves; that there is no power even in the Gospel, but that the power must come from God. The necessity for such power is manifest, not only in the teachings of Scripture, but to everyone who goes forth with the Gospel to testify as the witness of Jesus Christ. What shall we do with a man dead in trespasses and sins unless we have the power of God? What shall we do with a man who is blind, unless we have the power of God to open his eyes? or deaf, unless we have the power of God to unstop his ears? How shall we say to a man, "Rise up and walk," unless we have power from God in connection with his Word to enable the man to rise up and walk? Jesus Christ always accompanied his words by power. When He said to the lame man, "Rise up and go to your own house," where his word was there was power. It was simply the speaking of the word, but there went forth power with Him. There was no power in the man, but the moment the man was commanded with the word of power, he did as he was told. We are constantly met by the inquiry from unbelievers, or men thoughtfully considering the question of their salvation in the light of Scripture, "How can the acceptance of the words of Jesus Christ communicate life to me?" Just because the Word of God without it has no power. Christ's words when preached in power are always full of life. We may receive that seed into our hearts and understandings, and though at the first moment there may seem to be no power, yet as certainly as the Word of God is preached in power, believed, or received, it is sure that out of that Word will spring up the love of Christ, just as the living seed dropped into the ground will spring up and produce after its kind.

All men who have the Holy Ghost have not power. The disciples who saw Jesus going from them into the heavens had the Holy Ghost breathed upon them, and yet had not power. All Christians have the Holy Ghost. Every man who believes on Jesus Christ is indwelt by the Holy Ghost, but every man to whom the Comforter has come for his own personal salvation has not power. We are to receive power from on High, as something in addition or different from the mere possession of the Holy Spirit as the Comforter dwelling in us. I never go deeply into this subject here, because I am not sure that we shall only get confused by attempting to go beyond what is revealed. It is enough for us to know that there is a clear distinction in the Word of God between the Holy Ghost dwelling in us for personal salvation, and the Holy Ghost fitting us for service. I do not know, and I am not curious to ask why, only I am sure that power to work for and with God, and communicate the Gospel, is a power different from the simple in-dwelling of the Holy Ghost. I do not think it of great importance that we should be able to discriminate here as to the direction from which this power comes—only to recognise the fact that we must have it, and that it comes on certain conditions. It has been said that no condition is imposed upon the sinner for the reception of God the Saviour; but many conditions are imposed upon the believer for the possession of power to be "a worker together with God." Multitudes are saved, and will enter heaven, who have never known the high honour and blessing of working for God and with God.

I want to suggest two or three conditions which it seems to me are necessary for us in order to receive this power. The first condition is simply to believe that this power is for us. If I do not believe God has power for me to work for Him I shall surely never receive it. He calls every man to a work, "Ye are my witnesses." When we accept that commission from God we are not only his saved souls but his witnesses, for then we have the command to "tarry for power." That power, I believe, God has for everyone of us. The second condition is that we are to be emptied of self-sufficiency. I do not mean that we are to try and empty ourselves, for that is a hopeless undertaking. If you go to work to do that, you are going backward in order to get power. Emptying yourself of self-sufficiency is, I believe, honestly to recognise the fact that we have no sufficiency. That is the only emptying of ourselves that we can do.

Paul says we have no sufficiency, even so much as to think as we ought to think. One of our difficulties in preaching is that we are weighted with a lurking sense of self. From a thousand sources we get tangled up with self-sufficiency. We may have graduated at all the universities, passed through all the seminaries, and know the Bible from end to end, and yet all that gives no sufficiency. If we lean upon these things as a base of supply, or rather if we depend upon them as a sufficiency of equipment for doing the work of God, we are not only making a tremendous blunder, but dishonouring God the Holy Spirit.

Some years ago, one summer, I was walking through the City of Boston. We had temporarily changed our residence, and were living in a "flat." My wife was without a servant; the summer was unusually hot, even for us, and the task of preparing the meals for the family was a sore and grievous one. Like all good husbands, I had great sympathy with my wife in the matter. I did all I could for her, but I failed in the point of cooking. I saw advertised one of the perfected devices for cooking by means of oil. I examined into it very diligently, and thought it would do very nicely. I strained a point, and bought the stove, and brought it home in triumph. I placed it upon the kitchen table, and I said to my wife, "Now you won't have to roast over that old range any more this summer. You can do everything with this oil-stove." She was a little sceptical about it. I explained it to her, and demonstrated it from a theoretical point of view, and she said she would try it. I went away, and after my wife had been in the kitchen for half an hour I returned to see how the oil stove was working, and found it cooking beautifully; but there was a roaring fire in the range. I said, "What have you this fire for in the range?" She said, "I wanted the old range to fall back upon in case this did not work." If you will allow me to apply that little home illustration—we all recognise the truth of this theory, that if we have not power from on high we cannot work for God. We believe it, and we start out meaning to work upon that line; but at the same time we kindle a roaring fire in the old range, to fall back upon in case we do not get power from on high. We depend more largely upon that than upon God. Unless we just surrender and go about the work of God, deliberately purposing that we will have no fire unless it be fire from heaven, then I think we do not reach the scriptural idea, which means utter dependence upon God for the power we must have if we are to serve Him.

I do believe that God in his grace allows us as much power as He can trust us with. Sometimes we get a little power, when if we would observe the conditions we would be flooded with power. This condition is, to do our work in the eye of the Master only. One of the snares with Christian workers is the snare of the people, the eyes of the people, the good opinion of your fellows. One bitter winter's day I was in the railway station at New York. There was a large crowd of persons desiring to go from New York to Boston, and we all had to pass through a narrow way by the gate-keeper. Everybody had to show his ticket, and, as usual, there were many who could not conveniently find them. They said they had them, but the gate-keeper was inexorable. "You must show your ticket," he said, "if you please." There was both grumbling and swearing on the part of the passengers. After most of them had passed through, a gentleman said to the ticket-collector, "You don't seem to be very popular with this crowd." He just cast his eyes upwards to the ceiling on the floor above, where the superintendent's office was, and said, "I don't care anything about being popular with this crowd; all I care for is to be popular with the man up there." I thought it was a great lesson for us. Sometimes we are deflected in this direction or that, and sometimes we tone down a truth, or adjust it for some particular friend, and sometimes we wait for the good opinion of our friends, and shrink from the criticism of those who are not friendly. We preach, but one great hindrance is that we do our work in the eyes of man. A single eye to the Master up there is one of the fundamental conditions of power, one of the secrets of power.

It follows out of this that we cannot have power, any more than we can have faith, if we are receiving honour one from another. This also has come to be one of the crippling devices of the enemy to break the power of God—the honour which we are according and steadily receiving, or desiring to receive, or are bestowing one upon another. If we go on receiving honour one from another, either courting or giving, we are certain to cut off one of the sources of supply of power. Another practical condition is this, that we are not to desire this power for selfish use. I desire to be a successful minister, and we are all tainted more or less with a personal greed of power like Simon Magus, though we may not desire it to get money. Perhaps we desire it for applause, for position, to build up our church and that our ministry may be successful. I wonder if we work as hard for the Master as we do for our ministry, our parish, our denomination. We must learn carefully to distinguish between a mission for success which is personal and a mission for success which is consecrated before God. It needs a great deal of waiting before God to keep ourselves free from these snares that beset us. If we want to know how to avoid them and get the knowledge of God in the face of Jesus Christ, who never did anything for Himself, we must learn of Him.

Last of all, we want to lay aside every known thing from our lives, habits, and associations that interferes with the single work to which every Christian is, by the very terms of his union with Christ, called. I speak not to ministers but to Christians. So many questions on doubtful points come up. People ask, Do you think it wrong to do this or inconsistent to do that? We ought never to approach such questions with reference to our personal salvation, but all these questions are to be settled with reference to our being used by the Master. Whatever hinders my highest holiness and interferes with the divine flow of power from God out to the world is a thing to be put away. Not because it is abstractly wrong or may be abstractly right. There are many things which in themselves are not wrong, that we find we must lay aside, and many things that are perfectly right in themselves, which, in view of our work, we have no place for in our lives.

There are many weights as well as sins that break up the Christian life and choke up the channels of power. I read an incident of a man who had a grudge against a railway company, and he put a bar of soap into one of the water-tanks from which the engine drew its water. It is a well-known fact that you cannot generate steam out of soapy water; and after the engine had taken its supply, and gone some distance, the engine stopped. Now, we want to keep the soap out of our lives, because, if we do not, God cannot use us. He cannot make anything out of our talents, our natural gifts, our opportunities, if we allow the enemy to come and put in a bar of soap and spoil the whole matter.

We are not to measure power by results. Our work often seems to depend upon our success. If we are successful we are stimulated to more work; if we are unsuccessful, we are discouraged. We often hear it said that if we were only filled with the Holy Ghost men and women would be converted by hundreds. You remember that Peter was filled with the Holy Ghost, and he preached his sermon on the Day of Pentecost, and secured 3000 souls. Men say if we were only filled with the Holy Ghost people would run and cry, What shall we do? But Stephen was filled with the Holy Ghost just as really as Peter, and all he got was 3000 stones. One man got 3000 souls and another 3000 stones. But Stephen did not live to see what he got. He got the stones, but, soon after, he got Saul of Tarsus, who really found the beginning of his Christian life in those words of Stephen which cut him to the heart, and which sent him thoughtful and troubled down to Damascus; and out of Stephen came Paul, or, in another sense, we may say that out of the grave of Stephen rose the Apostle Paul. Let us not be discouraged or overmuch encouraged by the immediate results of our work.

THURSDAY EVENING.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Mr. C. Russell Hurditch, after which a hymn was sung, followed by the reading by Mr. Blackwood of the 33rd chapter of Exodus. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe then offered prayer.

The Fruits of Knowing God.

BY REV. E. A. STUART.

We have heard at this morning's Conference that all men, in the present day more especially, are seeking for the knowledge of God, and I do not wonder at it. Our wise men are beginning to find out that quantity cannot satisfy; there must be quality. They are beginning to find out that good as this world is, so far as it goes, it does not go far enough. There is something in man, nay, rather, everything, which makes man unsatisfied in his present condition. The fact of the matter is, as has been so clearly laid down, there are three things which more especially differentiate us from the rest of creation: those three things cannot be satisfied by anything in the present world. There is first of all the intellect; we may amuse the intellect by dissecting beetles, classifying fronds, and engaging in all kinds of curious speculations; but the intellect cannot be satisfied without the answer to this great question—"What is truth?" Then there is conscience. Somehow or other there is within each one of us a certain knowledge of what is right and what is wrong, and yet we do not see our judgment as to right and wrong corroborated in the world. We see the wicked prospering and the righteous suffering; and conscience, looking forward to the unseen, wants to know what is right, whether its judgment is right, or the judgment of the world is right. Then there is the heart—although it has many things which seem to satisfy it for awhile down here, yet nevertheless the heart is not fully satisfied, and standing upon the brink of the open grave the heart looks forward to the unseen, and the heart longs for something that shall fully satisfy it. Is every love to be as some ivy twining itself around some old wall, merely to cause fresh breaches in that wall as the ivy does? Nay, looking forward surely there must be some future that shall fully satisfy love; not merely playing with the heart of man to disappoint it.

Now, consider, this man is crying out for God; crying out to know God, crying out to know what is beyond. As we have been frequently reminded, man cannot, by searching, find out God, you can only get knowledge by receiving. So far as I know the Word of God, there are only four ways of receiving. There is the receiving with meekness (James i. 21), "receiving with meekness the engrafted Word," putting ourselves in the place of little children in order to hear what the Lord shall say unto us. There is the receiving gladly (Luke viii. 20), "They received the word gladly." When the knowledge of God is brought home in the face of Jesus Christ, the heart of man leapt forth to grasp and receive that knowledge. There is the receiving willingly (John vi. 21), "They willingly received him into the ship." There must be the willing receiving of this knowledge, the whole will going forth to meet the knowledge. Then there is Matthew x., the receiving freely, without toil, without struggle; just simply drinking in the knowledge which God has given unto us.

What is this knowledge? This knowledge is not a mere acquaintance with facts external to ourselves. It is not merely an intellectual conviction of the reality of those facts, but this knowledge is, as it were, the appropriation of them, or rather, one would say, the appropriation of Him as an unseen power throughout the whole being of our lives, the whole man coming into contact with God, and thus knowing God. "This is the life eternal; that we may know Thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom Thou hast sent." This life eternal is not necessarily to be placed in some far-off future, where that knowledge shall be perfected, but it is now. We may now live that life eternal, which is the continual following on to know the Lord.

Bear with me a little while I try and bring before you a few of the glorious blessings which are included in the knowledge of God. There was one passage put down in the programme today that was omitted by the speaker this morning, and I gladly seize upon it, because it comes in the midst of that Epistle which has for its key-note "knowledge." I refer to 2 Peter 1-2: "Grace and peace be multiplied through the knowledge of God and Christ Jesus our Lord." The Apostle commences, you see, with a prayer that this grace and peace may be multiplied through the knowledge; and he closes, after enumerating various blessings to be received through the knowledge, with an exhortation to grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. In the programme attention was drawn to the second blessing which we receive through the knowledge—namely, peace. We cannot receive the peace unless we receive the grace; first the grace for the guilty, before peace for the tempest-tossed. Let me try to bring before you the full meaning of that word grace. We speak of grace, but what various kinds of grace there are. There is pardoning grace, justifying grace, sanctifying grace, upholding grace, protecting grace, preserving grace, glorifying grace. But to my own mind, this word grace was wonderfully opened out to me, just like the bursting of a little bud into a full-blown rose.

We are told there is scarcely any single word upon which the Greek mind has so stamped itself as this word grace. There seems to be five unfoldings of this word. First of all, it seems in the Greek to have a connection with the word meaning "to rejoice." It is, therefore, that which gives me joy. That seems to be the fundamental meaning of the word grace. There is a passage in 2 Corinthians xii. 9, where our Lord Jesus Christ, talking to Paul, said, "My grace is sufficient for thee." Here I can scarcely forbear referring to the wonderful beauty of the verb there used by the Apostle. "He said unto me." The verb is in the perfect tense, "He has said to me, My grace is sufficient for thee." "Oh! Paul, it was fourteen years ago when Christ said that to you." "Why, it is ringing in my ears as though He said it yesterday."

Take the root meaning of the word: "My joy is sufficient for thee." Oh, Christian, is this true, or are you seeking for other things to bring joy to your heart? Is not the joy of the Lord sufficient for you? How is this to be obtained? Turn to 2 Peter i. 2: "Grace [joy] and peace be multiplied unto you through the knowledge of God and of Christ our Lord." The Christian will not be seeking after worldly and sensual joy, the joy of Christ will be more than sufficient.

The next meaning of this word seems to be beauty; throughout the whole of the Greek language this is its primary meaning, because beauty gave the Greek mind most joy. Take that word, "My beauty is sufficient for thee." You are bemoaning your own unworthiness and blackness; Christ's beauty is sufficient for thee. If He makes thee perfect through his comeliness that beauty will be sufficient for thee. How is the beauty to be obtained? "Through the knowledge of God and of Jesus our Lord."

Then comes the meaning generally in the Word of God, namely, free favour. I believe that is what gives the Christian most joy—the free, undeserved favour of God. You are bemoaning your own sinfulness; that you are unworthy to receive the least of God's benefits. You look back upon the past and see only a dreary, sandy desert, instead of a great wall of Ebenezers proclaiming, "Hitherto the Lord hath helped us," only the grave-stones of broken resolutions and disappointed hopes. You look back and see past opportunities neglected, talents unemployed, influence perverted. If we cast ourselves as poor sinners at the feet of Jesus Christ we hear Him speaking to us from glory, "My free favour is sufficient for thee." This free favour comes through the knowledge of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

Another meaning of the word is thanks; and yet another meaning is love or charity. All these are included in the grace that is multiplied to us through the knowledge of God and Christ.

Then following upon grace there comes peace. Grace is the food upon which Christian life lives; peace is the atmosphere in which the Christian life must be lived. Having grace we may go into peace, and this peace comes through the knowledge of God and of our Saviour Jesus Christ. I dare say many of you have heard a story of a little child, who, amid the creaking of the timbers, and the howling of the wind, and the rising of the storm, was perfectly peaceful and happy, and when asked by one of the passengers how it was she was enabled to be so calm when others were so perturbed, she gave the answer, "Because my father is at the helm." Our Father is at the helm. If you know God, then you may have perfect peace, knowing in whatsoever direction He may lead you all will be well. You doubtless have seen at times exhibited upon some steamer the words, "Passengers are requested not to speak to the man at the wheel." Do not speak to the man at the wheel, in this sense, of being continually prying into his secrets, wondering which way He is going to steer. Do not speak to the man at the wheel, as the disciples did when they said: "Master, carest Thou not that we perish?" I should think He did care; He had just said: "Let us go over to the other side." When He said that He would not leave them half-way, but would bring them over. If thou knowest God, rest quietly, peacefully, in the hand of God.

Then, remember this, that this peace is a peace which you may have even in death. Look in 1 Timothy i. 12. The apostle is about to go forth to his death, but he is perfectly peaceful, perfectly happy; he is now ready to be offered; the time of his departure is at hand. What gives him his peace? "I know in whom I have believed, and am persuaded that He is able to keep that which I have committed unto Him against that day." As we listened to Dr. Pentecost this morning, when speaking about power, I have not the slightest doubt many in this assembly cried out, "Oh, God; give me power." But we want power, not only for service, but for suffering. I know not whether the power of God is not more shown in the weak, broken vessel lying upon some bed of sickness, than in the most successful evangelist the world has ever seen. After some further remarks, Mr. Stuart closed with an earnest appeal to the unsaved.

The Object of the Believer's Pursuit.

BY REV. JAS. STEPHENS.

The subject of the address which I have been asked to give is the knowledge of God, the object of the believer's pursuit. The believer is one who knows God already, and yet he is one who has to press on in the work of knowing God—increasing in the knowledge of God. The Apostle says in one passage: "I count all things but loss, for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ Jesus my Lord." He in whom Jesus had been revealed, made it the great object of his life to know Jesus, and to know the Father through Jesus more and more. It seemed as if the whole Christian life might be summed up in this—the seeking and pressing on to know God more. If it is true, as we have had brought before us in God's Word, that it is life eternal to know God and Jesus, then the increase of life in the Christian is through the increase of the knowledge of God and the increase of the knowledge of his Son. If a Christian has set before him to grow in the knowledge of God, then as he increases in that knowledge, he knows the adorableness of God, more and more, and the wonders of God's character, the wonders of God's heart, the wonders of God's purposes and counsels, the wonders of God's thoughts and ways open up before him as a great height and a great deep. The more he looks upward, and the more he searches downward, the more is he constrained to fall in worship and adoration before God. John lay on the Lord's breast at supper, but when John knew more of the glory and majesty of Jesus he fell at his feet as dead. As the Christian grows in the knowledge of God, then he grows, as it were, in the capability of worshipping and adoring.

But, further, as we grow in the knowledge of God we know what it is that God has planned and purposed in each one of us who are believers.

What is it? He has predestinated us to be conformed to the image of his dear Son. As we grow in the knowledge of God, we grow in the knowledge of what is meant by "his image;" we see more of the wondrous character and spirit of God, and, therefore, see more of what He wants to make of us by the power of the Holy Ghost. As we understand more of God's plan and purpose we are conformed to this: "Beholding, as in a glass, the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image." But again, as the Christian grows in the knowledge of God he grows in the power of appropriating the resources of God. He sees what is available for him in God; he sees something of the greatness of God's power towards them that believe, according to the working of the mighty power which He wrought in Christ when He raised Him from the dead. There is something, therefore, for faith to lay hold of. Faith grows by knowledge. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the Word of God;" and the more we know of God the more there is for faith to lay hold of. The more we understand what God has undertaken to do for us, and of his power to carry out his purposes, the more we see for faith to lay hold of and to rest in.

Thus, you see, so far, how growth in the knowledge of God has to do with the growth of the spiritual life. But, further, take the matter of Christian service. This is also a department of Christian life. To grow in the knowledge of God is needful in order to effective service of God. Let me remind you of the case of Moses. Moses knew God. He gave up a great deal for God. He turned his back upon the glory of Egypt to identify himself with a down-trodden people. Yet when he went forth in service he went forth in a way that was not right, and at a time that was not right. So he was led into the wilderness, and kept there for forty years. In those forty years he grew in the knowledge of God. What followed? When he went to deliver the Israelites it was not so much Moses that was before the people as it was God. When Moses went forth at first, it was his personality that was conspicuous, but when he came the second time it was God's personality that was conspicuous. It is very striking, that if you were trying to make a biography of Moses you would have great difficulty, I think, in finding materials. It is "thus God said unto Moses," and "Moses said unto the people;" you find it again and again that he is, as it were, the mouthpiece of God; the expression of God. Thus, when he went forth to work, he presented not himself, but God.

Take a New Testament illustration: Peter knew God in the person of Jesus. He knew Jesus, and was able to confess him, and our Lord said unto him, "My Father hath revealed Him unto you." Peter was one then who knew God, yet when he shortly after said to the Lord Jesus, speaking of his rejection and suffering, "This be far from Thee, Lord," he was displaying his utter need of growth in the knowledge of Jesus. Again, James and John loved the Lord, they were zealous in his service. They would have been ready to give up as they had already given up, a great deal for Him, but they needed to grow in the knowledge of the Lord when they thus expressed themselves: "Wilt thou that we call down fire from heaven on this village of the Samaritans that will not receive Thee?" How different when John in later years went forth to service, strong in the love of Jesus, in the matchless tenderness of Jesus, with an unutterable fulness in his exhortation, "Little children love one another."

In order to service, it is not enough that we know God as when we are regenerated; we must grow in the knowledge of God. We must know God, what his will is, in order to please Him in service. It seems almost as if at times some Christians imagined that God counted on the measure simply of work and effort; but ought not Christian work to be measured by this? In what degree is it that service which God wants, and which is well pleasing to God? There may be Christians who are doing much useless work; there may be Christians who are working to thwart the purposes of God. Take an illustration: A little child loves his father; he gets into his father's study in his absence, and finding the papers scattered over his father's study table, he seeks, as he thinks, to arrange them. It is in love; it is with a desire to please his father, and he gets all the papers together into a nice exact heap. His father comes in; he understands the motive of the child, but the child does not understand the father's will, and he says, "My child, you have shown love, ut you must not do this again, for father wants to keep the things distinct and separate."

It is so in respect of every work for God. We do not know what will please God. We must find out from God's book what will please Him. We must find out what God says will please Him; we must walk in the knowledge of God if we are to render well-pleasing service unto God. But it is only as we grow in the knowledge of God that we grow in the right spirit in which to work. What preacher or teacher has not studied the spirit of Jesus, and prayed again and again that he might have more of that spirit—the spirit of our Lord's love, the spirit of our Lord's compassion, the spirit of our Lord's patience, and yet, withal, the spirit of our Lord when He prayed this, above everything else, to "fulfil the will of his Father in heaven, and finish the work which He had given Him to do?"

And then, we must seek to grow in the knowledge of God, in order to know God's counsels and purposes. It is quite possible in these days that there is a great deal of work being done that will prove itself to be like wood, hay, and stubble, needing to be burned up. Why? Not for want of zeal or energy in the worker; not, perhaps, for want of love, but because the worker did not seek to know God in his counsels and in his purposes, and work in the line of these. Is it not the case that if a man would represent God he must know Him. And what higher character is there for the Christian worker than this—one that should represent God to the world? How shall we represent the Father unless we gaze upon the Father in the face of Jesus? How shall we represent Him amid all the conflicting influences that surround us day by day unless we keep in that secret place of God, and grow in the knowledge of God?

This growth in the knowledge of God has a great deal to do with usefulness in estimating God's dealings with ourselves. How often you find people who speak of God's dealings as mysterious. There are many mysterious dealings of God, but there are many dealings called mysterious that are in no wise so to one who understands God's Word, and who has learned something of God Himself. There are trials and afflictions which come upon some Christians, and they are ready to faint or turn aside almost. These light afflictions coming upon others beget no faintness and no readiness to turn aside. They are full of a quiet and chastened rest, and the reason is they know more of God; they understand more of God's thoughts and purposes.

The knowledge of God, then, is "the object of the believer's pursuit;" but in what way should he pursue this knowledge? God gives us this knowledge in his Word. It is not merely that we should read, but we should know the depth of the fulness, and of the bearings of the Word. It is not simply that one should read the Book, but that one should perceive also that it is a Living Person who is speaking. We are to look, to think of it, not merely as an epitome of his inspiration, but that it is the utterance of his lips. We read, and we listen. We read, and we read with prayer. We seek to grow in the knowledge of God through the Word. And yet, as we learnt yesterday, there must also be the Spirit whereby we can appreciate God.

In seeking to know more of God there must be a great deal of unlearning. God says, "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are my ways your ways." If we, then, receive God's thoughts and ways we must lay aside our own thoughts and ways. This is true at the time of conversion, but it is true all the way. What Christian here of a few years' standing cannot tell how many things he held in the early days of his Christian life he has had to lay aside through fuller knowledge of God's thoughts? When we receive God's thoughts there must be a laying aside of our own thoughts and ways. There must be a constant casting down of every high thing that exalteth itself against the knowledge of God. Again, seeking to grow in the knowledge of God there must be a walking with God. We may know one through his writings; but we shall know him better, provided we have the right spirit, if we are walking with him day by day. We cannot walk with Jesus unless we take his path, go in his ways, and subject our judgment to his judgment. The secret of the Lord (says the Psalmist) is with them that fear Him. The meek will He guide in judgment, and the meek will He teach his way. "If any man," says Jesus, "love Me, he will keep my words, and I will come in to him, and sup with him." The man who keeps Christ's words knows Christ; but when Christ comes in and sups with him, surely there is a further knowl dge given The man who walks with God and abides in his Word is the man who grows in the knowledge of God and of his Son.

Lastly, in seeking to grow in the knowledge of God, there must be a single eye. "If thine eye be single thy whole body shall be full of light." The single eye is an eye not diseased, an eye that sees healthily, truthfully. We have not that eye opened by nature. God has opened our eyes; but even after He has opened our eyes we need the eye of our heart to be enlightened; and some of us need the eye-salve—the anointing. Our eyes are given us of God and anointed of God. If we have a single eye, we shall grow in the knowledge of God. An eye that sees singly is the eye of one whose heart is single. If our heart be fixed simply on Jesus, what a growing in the knowledge of Jesus we shall have. We shall know Him if we follow on to know Him. "If thou seekest wisdom as silver, and searchest for her as for hid treasure, then shalt thou find the knowledge of God."

FRIDAY MORNING, JUNE 27.

The meeting was opened with prayer by Mr. Blackwood and Mr. Hankin, and with singing. The lesson was read from Psalm xxvii.

The World ignorant of God.

BY REV. DR. BROOKES, ST. LOUIS.

In Acts xvii. we discover that knowledge of God is not possessed by the world. It appears that Paul was wandering through the streets of Athens, a lonely, but a very happy stranger, when his eye fell upon an altar with this inscription, "To the unknown God." The word translated "unknown" is the one from which is derived our modern English word "Agnostic," and the phrase might be almost transposed into our language, for we read that the inscription upon that altar was "to the Agnostico God." Since that time the world has made great progress in knowledge, but it has been progress backward, and not forward, with respect to God. If an agnostic of Engand, America, France, or Germany were to rear an altar in great London, or busy New York, or gay Paris, or cultivated Berlin, he would put upon it this inscription, "To the unknowable God." The ancient agnostic sadly confessed that he did not know God. The modern agnostic publicly boasts that he cannot know God. The ancient agnostic stood amid works of genius that have never been equalled, and displays of human art that have never been surpassed, to cry out in his despair to the unknown God. The modern agnostic stands amid Nihilism, Socialism, and Communism, the distress of nations, and perplexity of roaring seas, and invites us to look upon sweetness and light amidst surroundings that are shockingly sour and dark. To my mind, that old altar in the streets of Athens, and this modern altar reared by modern agnosticism are silent but most terrible witnesses to the truth of the proposition now before us, that the world does not possess the knowledge of God.

But let me call your attention briefly to the testimony of the Word upon this point. I will simply mention the texts, because my hope is that some will take them down and study them over. Gal. iv. 8—9. There the Holy Ghost writes to those who are believers, in referring to an earlier period in their history. He says: "Howbeit then, when ye knew not God, ye did service unto them which by nature are no gods. But now, after that ye have known God, or rather are known of God, how turn ye again to the weak and beggarly elements, whereunto ye desire again to be in bondage?" There was a time in the history of those Galatians when they knew not God Read, again, 1 Thess. 4, 5. These believers are to walk, "Not in the lust of concupiscence, even as the Gentiles which know not God" So, again, in Ephesians ii., it is said that although sublime revelations were made of the Holy Spirit, the time was when they were without God, and out in the dark world without hope. In chapter iv. we read: "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart: Who being past feeling have given themselves over into lasciviousness, to work all uncleanness with greediness."

In Exodus v. 2, we find the proud monarch of the mightiest empire of antiquity—a kingdom that is said, and no doubt properly, to be the mother of art, civilisation, and science—saying unto the messengers of Jehovah, "Who is the Lord, that I should obey his voice to let Israel go? I know not the Lord, neither will I let Israel go." There is the testimony of a proud monarch—"I know not the Lord." He told the truth that time.

Take Psalms xiv. and liii. Doubtless you have all noticed the difference between the two Psalms; they are substantially the same, but yet different. The Holy Ghost never puts down a word which is not essential. Why is Psalm xiv. repeated in Psalm liii. without difference? And yet, as we have said, there is a little difference. In Psalm xiv. 2 we have, "The Lord looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand." In Psalm liii. it is "God looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to see if there were any that did understand." "They are all gone aside," we are told in Psalm xiv., "they are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one." In Psalm liii we have an advance, "Every one of them has gone back." In the earlier description which God gives of the state of society during that dispensation as well as under the law, they had "all gone astray." Then in Psalm liii., reaching down to the end of the Apostacy—going back, "They are altogether become filthy; there is none that doeth good, no, not one."

The Holy Ghost, in Romans iii., takes up those wonderful testimonies about the utter darkness and ruin of mankind. There is a reason for it, but I have not time to dwell upon it. Let us come down later. Jeremiah x. 25: The Holy Ghost calls upon God to pour out his fury upon the heathen, "that have not known Thee." Go back to Job xi. 7: "Canst thou by searching find out God?" All the way through, the Scriptures show this truth—that the world does not possess the knowledge of God. The Holy Ghost takes his stand, as you see in 1 Cor. i. 20, and He asks, "Where is the wise? where is the scribe? where is the disputer of this world? hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world?" "The world by wisdom knew not God." 1 Cor. iii. 17: "For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God. For it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness."

A profound remark was made by some English brother, of which I was told: "We might be so wise if it were not for our wisdom." Don't you remember how it was with the ancient Greek philosopher? When some friends asked him to give a definition of God, he required a certain length of time in order to frame his reply. At the expiration of that time he said: "I must have more time, and more time, and more time," and when at last their patience was worn out, he said, "the more I consider it the less I am able to answer the question." This poor world never by its philosophy, or civilisation, or wisdom, has found out anything about our God. That is the world's own testimony.

God in Christ drew near to us, and then we have an unknown Christ as well as an unknown God. That is the saddest of all. "No man hath seen God at any time; the only begotten Son, which is in the bosom of the Father, He hath declared Him." Notice in verses 10 and 11, "He was in the world, and the world was made by Him, and the world knew Him not. He came unto his own, and his own received Him not." Sad and humiliating truth. The world did not know its own Christ who came to save it. John iii. 19: "This is the condemnation, that light is come into the world, and men loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil." This is the heaviest burden that rests upon a ruined world, that light has come into it, but the men love darkness rather than light. Now if a man love the darkness, of course he hates the light. John vii. 7. Read what He says to his own kindred—and this shows that family relationships will not reveal the knowledge of God—"The world cannot hate you"—why? "but Me it hateth, because I testify of it, that the works thereof are evil." John xv. 19: "If ye were of the world, the world would love his own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." Ver. 25: "He that hateth Me hateth my Father also. If I had not done among them the works which none other man did, they had not had sin: but now have they both seen and hated both Me and my Father. But this cometh to pass, that the word might be fulfiled that is written in their law, They hated Me without a cause."

How unutterably touching it is to find that without a cause they turned a deaf ear to the sweetest invitation that ever fell on human ears, just as He was closing his work. "Let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will let him take of the water of life freely." Without a cause! There was no cause in Him why the world hated Him; there is no cause out of Him why a poor sinner is saved. This is the testimony of his grace.

Notice, again, how we are shut up to this. Here comes not only Christ revealing the Father, but the Holy Ghost revealing Christ. Does not that show how the world has no knowledge of God and cannot have it? What does Jesus say? "Even the Spirit of Truth, whom the world cannot receive." "O righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee; but I have known Thee, and these have known that Thou hast sent Me. And I have declared unto them thy name, and will declare it." What is that? "I have manifested Myself." I have revealed Thyself, and I intend to keep on doing it. What for? "That the love wherewith Thou hast loved Me be in them, and I in Thee." I do not believe it was possible for any human person to devise language like this. It must have come from the lips of Jesus Himself—that the immeasurable, eternal, unchangeable love which God lavished upon the Son of his love may be in them and I in them. These are the closing words of our Lord's intercessory prayer.

Now, we are not surprised to find that it is the purpose of the Holy Spirit to testify of Christ to a lost and ruined world. He sets forth Christ as "the wisdom of God," which none of the princes of this world knew. If they had known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory. That does not say, "which none of the persons of this world knew." I want the philosophers, if any are here, to mark that. It does not say the ignorant rabble, but the princes of this world—the men of highest distinction in Italy; none of them knew it, or if they had known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of Glory. 1 John iii. 1: "Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us, that we should be called the sons of God: therefore the world knoweth us not, because it knew Him not." That is the reason. Why, then, should Christians be surprised that the world does not know them?

How do we get a knowledge of God? Just in this way—Christ reveals the Father, and the Holy Ghost reveals Christ.

The leaving out of Christ is a stoppage at once to all pursuit of the knowledge of God, depend upon it. This is true apart even from revelation. It is true in the whole of the experience of the ablest and greatest minds you have in England, or any other country. A man may speculate about this wonderful being of his, and suppose he gets some vague conception of it, but there it stands out like a beautiful gold statue, and it is only when the Sun of Righteousness arises with healing in his wings that, like the statue of Memnon, it becomes vocal with praise. No knowledge of God out of Christ; and no higher knowledge of God is attainable than in Christ. No higher knowledge will ever come to a poor sinner than to know Him who is from the beginning; and the fathers cannot get beyond this, "Hereby we do know that we know Him, if we keep his commandments."

This is not the worst aspect of the case about this poor world. It has always exhibited enmity towards God. "For the invisible things of Him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and Godhead; so that they are without excuse." There is what may be called the natural religion. When they got this glimpse of God in the field of nature, of which we hear so much—when they got some conception of the power of the Deity, "they glorified Him not as God, neither were thankful, but became vain in their imaginations, and their foolish heart was darkened." There is man's progress in the light of natural religion—professing themselves to be wise, they became fools. There is man's intellect in the progress of natural religion—"changing the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, and to birds and four-footed beasts and creeping things." There is man's conscience in the light of natural religion—"Who changed the truth of God into a lie." There is man's love of truth in the light of natural religion—"And worshipped and served the creature more than the Creator, who is blessed for ever." There is man's religion in the light of nature—"And even as they did not like to retain God"—they did not approve of God, and therefore "God gave them over to a reprobate mind." Is it not awful? Just think of the description given by the Holy Ghost of man as he is by nature in this proud world.

In Romans vii. 8 we find what is asserted of the mind which belongs to man in the world: "The carnal mind is enmity against God: for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be." It does not say the worldly mind is "an enemy;" for an enemy may be changed into a friend. Enmity is never changed. James iv. 4: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God; whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." Drawing-room and fashionable society, the gaieties and splendours of this world, which say, "I do not need you, Christ," know ye not that the friendship of such a world, with all its embellishments and beauties, is enmity against God? Whosoever, therefore, will be a friend of the world, is the enemy of God. "Do ye think that the Scripture saith in vain, The spirit that dwelleth in us lusteth to envy?" 1 John ii. 15, 16: "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world." What world? The coarse, vulgar, low, obscene, drunken world? No. The devil does not expect us to love that. The beautifully polished, the elegant, the cultured world. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

Once more, "we know that we are of God and the whole world lieth in wickedness," or, literally, "in the wicked one." Let me again beg you to remember that it is not simply the world of the Apostles' days. I am emphatic in calling attention to this, because in America I find many of God's dear children have been deluded by the artifices of the devil, who has been teaching them that the world is different from what it was 1800 years ago. Different! That little dead child, who has just fallen asleep and looked as if she breathed still, upon whom the Lord laid his gentle hand and said, "Rise my child;" that dead Lazarus who had been in the grave four days—both were dead. One was no more dead than the other, but both required the exercise of Omnipotence and power to give them life. Take your cultivated, refined, gentle, amiable ladies; take your philosophical, upright men in society. What do they know of God as He is in Christ, any more than the poor Chinaman to whom brother Hudson Taylor sends missionaries?

It is important practically to see how believers are delivered out of the world. Gal. i. 4: "Christ also gave Himself for our sins, that He might deliver us from this present evil world." How did He do it? Gal. vi. 14: "God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." What are you to do? Go into the hermit's cave or the monk's cell to get away from the world? No, it is in the cross of Christ that you are safe. When you see Christ upon the Cross you are done with the world—you can't help it. The world is crucified to you. "I have given them thy word, and the world hath hated them." Why? "Because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." The measure of the separation of your crucified but risen Lord from this world must be the measure of your separation. You tell me the head can be in one place and the body in another. Are we not members of Christ? How can He be away from the world and you in it? Look at the believer's relation to Him. (John viii. 12; John xvii. 18; Matt. v. 14; Phill. ii. 15; Romans xii. 12; James i. 27). What is religion, pure and undefiled? It is that which keeps men unspotted from the world. What does that mean? Why, that if you go down into the world you will get spots, and surely you don't want to go to heaven as a sort of zebra or leopard. "Keep yourself unspotted from the world." (2 Peter i. 4; 1 Cor. iii. 22, and vii. 29.)

When I was coming to your country I noticed that, just about the close of the voyage, some of the sailors one morning climbed up to the top of the mast. I noticed that they were furling sails, and painting all round the ship. I ascertained this was because they wanted to get into Liverpool in a respectable way. They did not want to come in rusty and tattered, and so they painted the whole thing up afresh. Why? Because they were getting near home. We are nearing home. The Lord is coming soon. Get everything in readiness on the ship, and paint it up. Get ready for Him.

Dr. Brookes closed with a stirring appeal to the unsaved.

The Church's Calling.

BY REV. DR. BULLINGER.

We have heard of the wondrous blessing of the knowledge of God, that it is the source of all comfort, all trust, all faith, all power. And then this morning we have had before us the terrible picture of the world, which, by nature, knows not God. My special subject is that this knowledge of God is to be communicated to the world by the Church of Christ, according to the declaration, "Whom ye ignorantly worship, Him we declare unto you;" for "the lips of the righteous disperse knowledge." The concluding text of the former part of this subject is the link which unites the two together—"O righteous Father, the world hath not known Thee, but these have known Thee." In other words, before knowledge can be communicated it must be possessed. "I have known, and these have known, that Thou hast sent Me." I have known Thee in thy purposes. I have known Thy counsels, thy love, thy grace; I have known thy goodness, and these have known Me, the sent One. Yes, if we are to be used as the channel of communication of this knowledge we must possess it in our own souls, as it is written, "We speak that we do know;" and we must be able to say, as the Lord Jesus said to the thirsty woman of Samaria, "We know what we worship." Here is the essential condition of all communication, the possession of this knowledge, divinely communicated to us, and the communication of this knowledge, which we divinely possess.

And oh! what a contrast the Lord's people present to this poor world that lieth in ignorance of God, and yet thinks itself to be wise. They would have us to believe that their unknowableness of God is the very highest pitch to which we can attain. True, it is the highest pitch to which human knowledge can attain; but we have to go before the world with a Divine certainty. We have not to speak to it in its own uncertain language, but to take up the language of St. John, and say, We know, we know, we know. While much of the knowledge, falsely so called, is more or less mixed up with, or vitiated by hypothesis, or theory, or conjecture, or speculation, we have a Divine revelation on which to base our knowledge. We have in the Divine revelation a rock on which we may stand, a rock on which we may build, and a sure hold for our anchor.

And then notice the secret and source of all this knowledge, or rather of all this testimony. The secret of it all is love. He who had most to say about this knowledge was he who loved most. He was the Apostle who leaned on Jesus' bosom; it was he who drank in most deeply of his love, who speaks the most certainly and the most positively of the knowledge of God. It is in his Gospel and in his Epistle that we have that ever-recurring refrain "We know." And we are to speak, dear friends, with this same blessed certainty. We are to go to the world, and tell them it is their ignorance of God which is the source of their misery and of their sin; that their ignorance consists not in a mere negative ignorance, but in the alienation of the heart from God; an alienation that must be as eternal as the life which comes from the communication of the knowledge of God. We are to go to the men of the world and tell them, that they may know all about the rocks, while their hearts are as hard as adamant. We are to tell them, that they may know all about the winds in their courses and currents, while they themselves are the sport of every passion. We are to tell them, that they may know all about the sea and its depths, and all its phenomena, while they are strangers to that peace which consists in the knowledge of God, and are like that troubled sea whose waters know no rest. We must tell them that though they may know how to arrest the lightning's flash, vain will be their knowledge unless they have learned divinely how the wrath of God is to be averted.

And if our declaration is to be of any avail, it must come from hearts that divinely possess this knowledge. We must speak that we do know. Like the Apostle, we must speak that which our eyes have seen, which we have handled, which we have looked upon, and which we have received in our own souls, of the Word of Life. That is what we declare unto you. It is the declaration of this knowledge which can alone give peace and happiness to the world.

That passage in Ephesians iv. has been already mentioned as showing us that there is no knowledge and no truth out of Jesus; that the words are not "the truth as it is in Jesus," but "as the truth is in Jesus"—not in Christ, but "as the truth is in Jesus." The morality that is not manifested by the Lord Jesus is not true morality, and the education and teaching that do not spring from the teaching of Jesus can be in no sense true education. Yet we are told that the witnesses for Christ in the present day are to go with the spirit of the age. They are to have regard to the spirit of the times. But I ask you, What have God's people and God's servants to do with the spirit of the times? It is the Spirit of God with which they have to do. The spirit of the age is one of constant change, but the Spirit of God is the Spirit of truth, and truth never can change. Hence this communication is to be by the Word of truth. It is to be by holding forth the Word of life. Many of the high names and titles of this Word are given in the Scripture. It is called the engrafted Word, and as such is to be received into our heart. It is the Word of truth, and, as St. Paul says, we are to rightly divide it, and as the Word of life, the life-giving Word, we are to hold it forth.

We cannot separate the written Word from the living Word. Both possess the same power and the same things are predicated of both, and therefore the Lord's witnesses from the very first have to be witnesses of Christ. The words of his last earthly prayer, and his last words before He ascended into heaven, were these: "Ye shall be witnesses unto Me;"—to a crucified, to a risen, to an ascending and to a coming Saviour; witnesses to a Divine Person, witnesses that shall remain one and the same through all ages, not adapting their experience to every century, but preaching the Gospel, the same Gospel, to every creature. "Thou shalt be a minister and a witness," was the word to that chosen vessel, Paul; a minister and a witness, so that, "as the Father hath sent Me (Jesus), even so send I you." Paul was a minister, and he was a witness. He ministered like Him who came not to be ministered unto, but to minister; and he was ever a witness, like Him who is called the faithful and true Witness. How wonderful, that we poor, weak, frail, earthen vessels should be used by God for the communication of his divine, saving knowledge!

In 2 Cor. iv., "We have this treasure in earthen vessels, that the excellency of the power may be of God, and not of us." It is called a treasure, not because it is that which we value, not because it is a treasure to us, but for its own intrinsic glory and value. It is not so much the thought here that the earthen vessel possesses this treasure, as it is that the glory of this treasure possesses the vessel, governs the vessel, fills the vessel, uses the vessel, and displays itself through the vessel. The contrast with human thought is strongly marked. Man's thoughts are always the reverse of God's thoughts. In human affairs we make choice of a casket which bears relation to the treasure which it is to contain. We have some regard to the excellency of the treasure when we prepare the casket for it, but not so with God. He hath chosen an earthly vessel to contain it, in order that the glory of that treasure may be more clearly and powerfully displayed, and hence, in those verses that follow, we have the inward and the outward exercises by which the glory of that treasure is manifested. As the next verse says, "We are troubled on every side"—that is, on account of the earthen vessel—"yet not distressed," because of the excellency of the all-surpassingness of the treasure. We are persecuted, and feel it on account of the weakness of the vessel, but we are not in despair, because of the excellency or surpassingness of the treasure. We are persecuted, but not forsaken; we are cast down, but not destroyed; and we notice how carefully the Holy Ghost is always to keep before us the weakness and frailty of this earthen vessel. St. Paul is instructed to say, "Who, then, is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as God gave to every man." And so when he has these thoughts in his mind, he says to them in 1 Cor. i. 26, "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called.' The word in the Authorised and Revised versions is "called," but in italics. The thought is not of those that are called, but of those that are used for the calling of God's people. "For ye see your calling." You see how you are called, and by whom you are called—not by the wise men of this world, not by the noble, but God hath chosen the base things, God hath chosen the foolish things, God hath chosen the weak things by which you have been called, and by whom this knowledge shall be finally and savingly communicated to you. But of God, are ye in Christ Jesus? Not of Paul, not of Apollos, not of these wise, or mighty, or noble ones, but of Him are ye in Christ Jesus. The same purpose is expressed in these words: "But we have the same treasure in earthen vessels that the excellency or (surpassingness) of the power may be of God, and not of us." And hence we have a power working, as well as a treasure living.

And when the same Apostle writing to these Corinthians describes his going to them, he says: "Paul planted and Apollos watered." If you read the account of his going into the city of Corinth in Acts xviii., you will find he was there for eighteen months or more preaching the Word of God; in the sixth verse "he reasoned with them out of the scriptures," and he called them his planting. Now, when the Holy Ghost speaks of planting, what does he mean? Why, by the very word He condemns the world of unfruitfulness to God. He tells the world there is nothing in it, nothing of it, which can produce any fruit for his glory; and what is more, He not only convinces us of the impossibility of producing anything for God, but also ignores all that it possesses. He takes no note of whatever good might be in it, and whatever might have the semblance of reality. There is nothing He can use. It is not Paul that hath cultivated what was already there, but Paul hath planted, and the planting is the putting in of something that did not before exist there. It is the bringing in of something new which the world did not possess before. It is the assertion that that which is born of the flesh is flesh, and can never become spirit, and that that which is born of the Spirit is spirit. He calls this the preaching of the Word of God, which is planting. He tells us what he did. He took them some fresh news altogether. He tells them what they had never heard before, and he brings before them what they have been totally ignorant of up to the time; and hence he did not go to Corinth as a mere reformer of the morals of the city. I suppose there was no city on the face of the earth that had reached the depth of immorality that was reached in Corinth, and yet he speaks not a word of it, except to say, "Such were some of you." He speaks not of its immorality or of their uncleanness, but he says, Paul hath planted. He brought in something divine, something fresh, and thus communicated to them that divine light. He ignores all their outward reformation. There is a reformation, indeed, which the world can understand; there is a reformation which advances a man's progress in the world, his sobriety, thrift or diligence; God ignored all that. He ignored all his sins, all his self-righteousness, and he brings in something totally new. He brings in his own Divine knowledge, the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. And mark how this is done. "God who commanded the light to shine out of darkness hath shined into our hearts, to give us the light of the knowledge of the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ."

This then, dear friends, is how we are as witnesses of the Lord Jesus Christ to communicate this light. We are to be light-bearers; that, just as the bearers declare the glory of God, so his people now are to declare that glory by reflecting it abroad. The heavens speak of his glory and his people now are speaking witnesses of his glory—the glory of God in the face of Jesus Christ. But from these heavens now the Sun its absent The Sun of Righteousness has gone away into heaven. It is all dark below. It is night; but the same word that tells us it is night tells us that the "night is far spent." Thank God for that. And the Church collectively, like the moon, and the saints individually, like the stars, are to shine forth his knowledge, are to declare that knowledge, are to reflect that glory, and, like the heavens, to declare the glory of God.

Ah! dear friends, we know that this night will soon be at an end, that the morning is about to dawn, that morning without cloud. We look for the Morning Star; we look for the rising of the Sun of Righteousness. Oh! let us remember and desire, and look for that glorious time when this light in the glory of God shall flood the earth with its glory and its beauty.

EXHIBITIONS ON THE LORD'S DAY. — Mr. George Howard, M.P., has secured Friday, July 18, on going into Committee for a motion in favour of opening Metropolitan Museums and Galleries on the Lord's Day. Persons friendly to the preservation of the Lord's Day as a day of rest should write to their members, asking them to vote against Mr. Howard's motion. Dr. Gritton, 20, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C., will send papers and information on application. The Council of the Health Exhibition have determined not to open on Sundays.

CHRIST, THE COMING KING OF ISRAEL.

By Dr. BROOKES, St. Louis.

AN ADDRESS AT MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

IT is very difficult in the few minutes allotted to this service to know where to begin or where to end on such a subject. It is set forth in the Word of God with a fulness, frequency, a clearness, and an emphasis, that makes it far more certain than a mathematical demonstration. If we assume, which we ought to do, that the Holy Ghost knew what He wanted to communicate, and that He meant what He said, there can be no controversy about the personal coming of the Lord Jesus Christ to reign over Israel. It is not a question for us to speculate upon. It is a question to consult God's Word about, and to be subject to that Word.

I would simply ask anyone who has read the Old Testament prophets, for example, whether every one of them does not dwell with glowing anticipation upon the coming of the Lord Jesus, to lift up the fallen banner of Israel, and to reign over his ancient people in glory and in power. Even the least of the prophets, so far as the space he occupies is concerned, Obadiah, does not omit that. You cannot read any of them without finding that this is the great theme of the Holy Ghost from first to last. Let me ask anyone to read the first verse of the first chapter of Isaiah: "The vision of Isaiah, the son of Amos, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem." Is it right for anyone to say that the vision was not concerning Judah and Jerusalem? I would put it to anyone who is a humble, honest student of the Bible, if that means a vision concerning England and London. If the Holy Ghost had meant England and London would He not have said so? If it is to be spiritualised away—if it does not mean Judah and Jerusalem—then neither was Isaiah, the son of Amos; we have got to spiritualise him away too. Neither was it a vision; you will have to spiritualise that too. Where will you stop the spiritualising process? I believe the word of God has been more hurt by its friends than injured by its enemies.

I can only refer to a few passages out of the hundred that I might quote. Take first a passage in 2 Chron. xvii. 17, "Thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come, and hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, O Lord God." Dr. Young, in his translation of the Bible, renders this, without any sort of regard to doctrine, but simply as a matter of scholarship: "Thou hast seen me as the type of the Man who is on high." Or it may be rendered: "Thou hast regarded me according to the order of man from on high O Lord Jehovah." David declares that this promise of the establishment of his throne for ever links him to a man on high. Who is the "Man on high?" There is but one Man—the Lord Jesus Christ. (Having read verses 18—22, Dr. Brookes continued:) Is it right for a child of God to put his theory and his exposition against clear testimonies like these, so as to make them practically mean nothing, or to appropriate all the blessing of it to himself, when it was the Jewish David who was made a type according to the Man on high, and when he goes on to speak of the people of Israel, the literal children of Abraham—the very people whom God brought up out of Egypt?

In reading the Bible we need to remember the profound remark of the able commentator, Delitzch—Mr. Wilkinson tells me he was a Jew—who says "Interpretation is one thing; application is another. When we read in the Psalms and Prophets constant references to Judah and Jerusalem and the ten tribes that were called Israel, remember that the interpretation of these passages refers to God's ancient people; that is the first thing. The application of the principles and truths involved, you may bring home to your own heart; but do not forget the interpretation." This leads me to mention another matter, with respect to the purpose of God. Prophecy is a revelation of the counsel of God the Father concerning the Son. All the events predicted are but so many shadows pointing on to his coming. Our Lord's Second Coming is the crisis of this world's history. Some of these events perhaps have been fulfilled, still they are only stepping-stones, so to speak, on which the Holy Ghost stands for a moment as He goes on towards the supreme moment in the world's history when Christ will come back to be glorified on the theatre of his sufferings and death. Everything points to that.

Look for a moment at the well-known passage in Isaiah ix. 6: "Unto us a child is born. . . . Of the increase of his government there shall be no end, upon the throne of David and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." It is not a question of the faithfulness of Israel; it is the unconditional sovereignty of the Almighty God that is going to bring it about.

Psalm lxxxix. 34: "I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure for ever, and his throne as the sun before me. It shall be established for ever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven." If that does not mean a covenant of God with David, what does it mean?

There are other like passages in the 110th and 132nd Psalms, where we have most explicit promises in which the faithfulness of God is pledged to the restoration of Israel and the eternal reign of Jesus Christ. In the latter Psalm, verse 11, we read: "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; He will not turn from it. Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne. . . . . For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for his habitation." Psalm xlv., too, is a celebration of the coming of Jesus to reign over Israel. Not Rome, but Jerusalem, will be the metropolis of God's millennial earth.

In the New Testament we find these Scriptures confirmed. "He shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his father David; and He shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke i. 32, 33). What can that mean if it does not mean that Jesus is to sit upon the throne of his father David? Is David's throne in our hearts, or in heaven? David's throne was in Jerusalem.

Acts xv. 14—18 is to my mind a most conclusive passage, if there were no other. The question came to be discussed in the only college of the Apostles we know of, whether those who had been Gentiles previous to their conversion could be required to observe certain ceremonies of the Mosaic law. Paul and Barnabas were sent from Antioch to consult the Apostles at Jerusalem upon this important subject. Peter took the ground that they were not to be put under the ceremonial law. When he had finished his address, James, who was evidently a pillar in the Church, makes an authoritative announcement upon the whole subject: "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." Is there one intimation, from the first chapter of Genesis to the last of Revelation, that God ever had any other purpose in this dispensation? I have asked, in the presence of 500 ministers, to be shown such a passage. I have taken my seat and waited patiently until they could bring forward one text to prove that the world is to be converted by the agencies now employed. I have never found the text yet, and nobody has ever pointed it out to me. His purpose is "to take out a people for his name." James goes on to say: "And to this agree the words of the prophets, as it is written: After this I will return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down, and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up." After what? After I have taken out of the Gentiles a people for my name, after the times of the Gentiles have been fulfilled, when the fulness of the Gentiles shall have come in—"I will return." What for? "That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, and all the Gentiles upon whom my name is called, saith the Lord, who doeth all these things."

What, then, is the order during this dispensation of God's Spirit? A people is being taken out of the Gentiles for God's name. There is a remnant of Israelites, according to the election of grace, always being saved. There was a time when all believers were Jews; but God's grace overflowed the boundaries of Israel, extending to all the other nations. When Christ comes back, what do we find? This grand work of restitution begins with Israel. The ruins shall be built up, and the desolations removed; then Israel will be the chosen vessel for the communication of God's grace to all the unsaved nations of the earth.

In Jeremiah xxiii. 5—8, we have another very striking passage foretelling the time of which we are speaking. If a reverent reader of the Scriptures should come across that passage for the first time, without any preconceived theory, and without any human instruction, would he have the slightest doubt that when Jesus returns "Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely;" that God shall bring his scattered Israelites back from the face of all the earth, whither they are now driven?

After citing various other cognate passages, Dr. Brookes said, in bringing his remarks to a close: If God's people would but keep their eye fixed upon the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ as their hope, what a blessing it would be in preserving them from all other expectations. If we look to such things as human progress, the advance of civilisation, the power of earthly governments, &c., as the hope of the Church, we are distracted in ten thousand ways. How blessed it is to be ever gazing through the encompassing darkness for the rising of the Sun of Righteousness, which is promised to us in the return of Jesus Christ! The cherishing of this hope will also keep us holy, and waiting for Him.

What about the Jew? I feel humiliated and ashamed of our neglect and evil treatment of this people, so dear to the heart of Jehovah. They ought to be dear to us too. If we went more among them, not to blame them, not to remind them of the fact that they crucified the Redeemer, but to pray for them, as our Lord Himself did on the Cross, when He said, "Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do;" not to heap reproaches upon them, but to take them by the hand, as belonging to the most ancient—if you choose to say it, the most renowned people,—how much more we would accomplish! A friend in Boston told me several years ago about an old Jew who was visited by a Christian lady. She talked with him, and at first he was disposed to be surly, thinking she had come to reproach him. I do not wonder at their suspicions and distrust of us Gentiles. I believe we should be worse than they, if we had been treated all these centuries as they have been. This lady conversed with the old man, and asked my friend to go and see him. He went, and told him the story of the Redeemer, pointing out many passages in the Old Testament that had all been fulfilled in the person of the Lord Jesus Christ. It pleased God in the sovereignty of his grace to cause the light of the Gospel to break into his heart. My friend was with him when he died. He raised his hand, and looking up as though gazing into the opened heavens, like another Stephen, he cried out, in faltering accents: "O my God, not Barabbas, not Barabbas, but this Man I take to my heart!" Many of them are ready to say, "Not Barabbas!" Are you ready to go to them with the precious tidings of redeeming love?

AFTERNOON GATHERINGS.

The Hope of Israel.

ON Wednesday afternoon the area of the Large Hall was filled, when addresses were delivered concerning "The Hope of Israel." Earl CAVAN, who presided, said there was not a more important subject to be found anywhere than that of God's dealings with the Jews. Their complete history furnishes us with a wonderful view of Jehovah, and should lead us to praise for his goodness, and holy fear for his severity. In praying for the peace and prosperity of Jerusalem we shall get a blessing for ourselves. We have not to deal with their enemies; God will deal with them in judgment, and recompense them, as He has said. Never was there a time when so much interest was felt in the Jews as now, or so many watchmen upon the walls, resolved to "give Him no rest until He arise and make Jerusalem a praise in the earth."

Rev. J. GOSSETT TANNER addressed the meeting, dwelling especially on "The Restoration of Israel to their own land." A stranger visiting Palestine at the present time, he said, is disappointed, and ready to say there is no prospect of the Jews ever returning. But God's word clearly predicts a restoration; every provision has been made for it, and these will be revealed in due time. It is well known that the state of the land requires a rich supply of water, and prophecy shows it will be forthcoming in the needed hour. Indeed, it is already in existence. Recent discoveries have brought to light the fact that vast reservoirs of water are under the Temple Hill. The Psalm that tells of "a river, the streams whereof make glad the city of God," is yet to have its literal fulfilment; this will be produced by the great earthquake foretold by the prophet Zechariah, ch. xiv. The restoration of the Jews is largely unfolded by Isaiah in chapters lx. to lxii.; also, in Psalm cvii., where they are seen coming from the four quarters of the earth, and resting under the smile and blessing of Jehovah. But no more striking passage is to be found than the words of the prophet Amos, "I will plant them upon their own land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God."

The subject was continued by Rev. C. SKRINE, who dwelt chiefly on the hope of Israel, "In relation to the Messiah—salvation." Each dispensation is in advance of the one preceding, and so it will be in the future of redeemed Israel, whose privileges will be greater than any of the past. What comes to us now will come to them more grandly then. A careful study of the book of the prophet Zechariah shows their salvation will not be brought about in the same way as it is now, viz., through the work of the Spirit and by faith in an unseen Saviour, but by seeing the Messiah visibly at his Personal Advent. "They shall look on Him whom they have pierced." God's dealing with Paul in calling him, is a type of his dealing with them; the Lord Jesus, whom they persecuted, will appear unto them. All this will be brought about by terrible things, as predicted in the last three chapters of Zechariah, where the treading down, the tribulation, and the day of Jacob's trouble are predicted. But the day of their trouble shall be the day of their deliverance; the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, so all Israel shall be saved. One of the last acts of the Saviour was to stand on the brow of Mount Olivet and proclaim the desolation of Israel until the day of his appearing. From that spot He ascended to the Father. His feet shall stand once more, on the scene of his triumph. Even so the place of Israel's persecution under Antichrist shall be the place of victory achieved for them by the Messiah, whom, weary and worn, they will then gladly welcome. The feast of Tabernacles has never yet had its fulfilment, nor the seventieth week of Daniel's prophecy. It is at the end of that period that the rejected One will appear for their help, and then shall they exclaim, "Blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord."

Dr. Laseron then offered prayer, and the subject of the afternoon was further spoken to by Rev. J. Wilkinson, who dwelt on the hope of Israel. "In relation to the nations—a blessing." The Church has lost more than could be conceived by the neglect of this question. There are three certainties, (1) Israel shall be blessed; (2) All who seek to bless her will gain blessing through her; (3) When blessed, they will be a blessing to the world. Hundreds of instances could be given of blessing coming to those who have observed this divine principle. God said, "I will bless him that blesseth thee," and it cannot be otherwise. They have been marvellously preserved by the miraculous power of God, and since God never wastes power, there must be some special reason for it. That reason is clearly revealed, viz., that they may be a blessing to all nations, as covenanted with Abraham, and recognised by Paul in Galatians. Neither is there any ground for expecting blessing for the Gentiles in any other way. The Jew is "first" as a nation as well as an individual. He recently read the whole Bible through in twenty-eight days, and found that there is not a single passage in it that warrants us in holding out the slightest hope for national Gentile blessing until the Jews are converted. We are indebted to them for three things: (1) A glorious protest against the idolatry of the present day: (2) for the Bible they gave us; (3) for a Saviour. But what a lamentable fact, that among the people who gave us the Bible are so many who know not where they are going to. Still, God is disposing thousands of them to hear the Gospel, and "the remnant" is being rapidly gathered in. Read frequently Isaiah xix. concerning Egypt, in this day when so much of interest is taking place there. Note the last three verses specially. Chapter xxvii. is also a wonderful chapter. When Israel is restored and converted, there will be a nation of missionaries ready to hand.

This excellent meeting was followed by another, held in the Tent, having as its object, "Prayer for Israel." Dr. Laseron, who presided, sought to move the tender sympathy of the audience by reminding them of the present condition of the people, their persecutions, and ill-treatment. An announcement (he said) appeared in the papers only that day, reporting a fresh outbreak against them in Russia, by which nine Jews were killed, numbers wounded, and their homes wrecked. God will surely bless England for the help given them. Fervent prayer followed, by Mr. Samuel Field, Dr. McKilliam, Rev. H. Kelk, and others. The case of a young Jew brought to the Saviour through the instrumentality of Mr. Kelk just before leaving Jerusalem, was specially urged, he being tempted on every hand.

The Deepening of Spiritual Life.

On Wednesday afternoon, before the hour appointed, No. 6 Room was crowded, and an "overflow" filled up the Tent. Our reporter attended the latter, and found it a most profitable gathering. Revs. H. W. Webb-Peploe, Wm. Haslam, E. W. Moore, and J. B. Figgis were amongst the speakers. The indoor meeting was conducted by Rev. Evan Hopkins.

Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe based his remarks upon Ps. cxxxix. 1—23 and Job. xiii. 9—11. Many persons come to these conferences with a longing for a more satisfactory life than they are at present leading, but little knowing what they will have to endure if they really give themselves up to God. He must search their hearts, and whatever his pure eyes see amiss must be purged away. Are you ready to be searched like that? "Is it good?" I knew a lady who for seven years was seeking to lead a more profitable life, and wondered why she did not enjoy more peace; and it turned out that she had one idol in the shape of a piece of jewellery, which at the end of that time she was prevailed upon to sell. She then found it was worth only seven shillings! Are there not many who are losing their peace for some paltry seven shillings' worth, which in some form or other is an idol? Let us not spoil the chances of bringing souls to Christ for the paltry things of earth. We pray sometimes that we may be "filled with the Spirit," but this is not done by any outward manifestation. God begins blessing by crushing, by bringing us down. Are you ready for that? Is there a something—perhaps as thin as a sheet of paper, but still which keeps the light of God's presence from your eyes? This must be removed. God cannot bless us till He has crushed us, nor fill us till we are emptied. What about the vanity of dress and the extravagant expenditure of money for personal pleasure? We are met here for the express purpose of having these things pointed out. You may wince, but will you shirk it? "Is it good that God should search you?" Yes, dear friends, it is good for a man to bear the yoke in his spiritual youth. You cannot have power till God puts it in, and He cannot put it in until you make room for it. Let us each take this word to ourselves, beloved, and if we are "afraid of his excellency, and his dread fall upon us," then He will give us power, and we shall be like Jacob—princes with God, and shall prevail.

Rev. J. A. Jacobs followed with a few words on the right which every Christian has to joy in the Lord, when once he has realised that his sufficiency is of God; but this cannot come until he is brought, as it were, to the brink of despair—that is, to confess ourselves worthless, to give up trying as a bad job, and commit ourselves wholly into his keeping: then we have a right to "rejoice in the Lord."

Rev. E. W. Moore, in speaking from Isaiah xi. 1, 2, said: We have here, firstly, a testimony to the humanity of our Lord—"Out of the stem of Jesse;" and, secondly, the sevenfold fulness of the Holy Spirit, that is, the Spirit of the Lord itself and its aspects, wisdom, and understanding, &c. We can trace all the attributes of the Spirit in the life of Christ. The Spirit rested on Him at the day of his birth and at his baptism. He was led of the Spirit into the wilderness and came again in the Spirit into Galilee, and on the cross He, by the eternal Spirit, offered Himself to God. The first result of the Spirit of wisdom and understanding resting on anyone is that they will forsake sin, which in Proverbs is always called folly. Then, if we are under the Spirit, we shall receive counsel as to what to do and might to do it, and, inasmuch as "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom," we become also endued with "the Spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord." May this Spirit rest upon each of us here to-day, and it will be so if we are willing to yield ourselves to God.

Rev. W. Haslam said that if we commit ourselves into the hand of God, He will show us our sins without our praying for it. God digs deep and lays a good foundation, because the building is for eternity. We may be sure God loves us more than we love ourselves; therefore we may have no fear of putting ourselves under His care. He wounds that He may heal. There is a story of a sculptor, who was seen gazing at a piece of marble which seemed to occupy all his mind. He was asked what he saw in that ungainly block of so much interest. His reply was, "I see an angel in it." He was not looking at it as it was, but as it would be when his accomplished hands had done their work. So the Lord sees perchance something in us that no one else sees, and He will perfect us if we will let Him. It may be necessary to hit here and chisel there, and cut a piece off elsewhere, but He will conform us into His own glorious image. Let us therefore give ourselves up unto God, and He will perfect us according unto His will.

Rev. J. B. Figgis compared the present gathering to the Feast of Tabernacles of Jewish times. We are spiritual Israel, and, perhaps, some here are only on the border of the good land. You feel there is yet very much land to be possessed, and come in daily conflict with great and terrible foes. But take not your counsel from man, but from God, and He will strengthen you to overcome your enemies. If you had a very dirty, crooked tube, and put it in a running stream, it would soon be cleansed, and the water would run through it. So, though we may be crooked and defiled by sin, yet God can use us as channels through which his grace will flow.

After a few more solemn words of exhortation, Mr. Figgis then requested those who would yield themselves unto God for service to raise their hands, to which many responded. The meeting closed with a hymn and prayer.

Room No. 6 was crowded long before three o'clock on Thursday afternoon to hear further addresses on this subject. Overflow meetings were held in the Tent and under the Tree. Rev. H. W. Webb-Peploe began his discourse by reference to 2 Cor. i. 8-9. He said no one knows what Paul's particular trouble here alluded to was. It is well it is not revealed, because it thereby is left open to all troubled ones to appropriate his consolation, whatever the cause of their trial. The question is, "How may we appropriate it so as to get deliverance from all sin?" The one answer is found in the word trust. The text demands absolute trust; the Greek word is nowhere else used in this precise form. The trust demanded is just what we repose in medical men when we hand ourselves over to them for the healing of a disease. I have often wondered when thinking of the extent to which we do confide in them, putting our lives in their hands. But such is the simple and childlike trust that God requires of us, and which Paul had. First, however, there must be the sentence of death in ourselves. The next conscious need of the anxious one is that of deliverance from the dominion of sin. Take him to Rom. vi., where he is told to take the place of death, reckoning himself dead to sin. He is then in the place of deliverance through Christ, who raiseth the dead, and will soon learn to say, "I thank God, through Jesus Christ our Lord." Neither is there any other way of getting power for service but by death. We must have the sentence of death in ourselves relative to any strength of our own; then "Truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord." Lastly, we need God's power to enable us to endure and to suffer for Him. Our first desire is to escape it, and, like Paul, we beseech the Lord thrice. We have to die to our own will, and then we find the power of Christ resting upon us.

Rev. W. Haslam delivered an address in the Tent. When you set yourself to work and pray God to bless you, that is your work. But if you come to Him and abide in Him and bring forth fruit, and He gives you work to do, that is his work, and will have his blessing. When you give yourself in unreserved surrender to Christ He will never rest until He has found you work to do, and when you do his work there will be no exulting, any more than the pen or the axe exults. I have had such a happy time in Ireland following up the work of Mr. Moody. I told them about the keeping power of Christ, and they were filled with joy. So they were when I spoke of consecration. God is raising up hundreds of workers there.

Revs. Evan Hopkins and J. B. Figgis redelivered in the Tent the addresses they gave on the previous day, on this subject.

[We are obliged to postpone the remaining reports of afternoon gatherings.]

GUERNSEY.—Mr. Henry Varley held evangelistic services here in connection with the Y.M.C.A., from June 8 to 22. Large audiences were drawn each day, and on Sunday evenings the St. Julian's Hall, the largest available building, has been crowded. Mr. Varley gave his lecture to men on "Various Forms of Temptation," and the hall was crowded. The question of the necessity of social purity was treated in an eminently practical manner. Large numbers have been present each day at the Bible-readings in the afternoon, which have been most instructive and helpful. Christians of all denominations have attended. Much good will be the result of these meetings, and many are the regrets that Mr. Varley has to leave so soon. At the closing meeting on Sunday evening a large number confessed their faith in Christ.

SAVING THE CHILDREN.

MAY I bring before the readers of The Christian the pathetic needs of the children coming under the Industrial Schools Act Amendment Act, 1880? They are children growing up in the lowest dens of infamy, generally the children of people who have been tempted to support their families by turning their houses to a nefarious use. In a very bad, but, alas! not by any means wholly exceptional neighbourhood, four streets, in 1880, gave us fifty-eight of these children, living more like rats in a drain than children in a human home. And as if we were not satisfied with the degradation of the individual child, we compel these degraded children to attend school, and constitute the link between the children of the respectable poor and the lowest dens of infamy. We take these children, inoculated in every form of obscene vileness, and turn them loose on the children of our elementary schools; and then feebly wonder that our moral small-pox spreads, and that juvenile degradation is on the increase.

For four years, ever since we got the Industrial Schools Act Amendment Act, which now enables a magistrate to commit to an industrial school any child under fourteen living in a disorderly house, or frequenting the company of abandoned women, I have been endeavouring in vain to rouse the conscience of the nation with regard to these unhappy children. Committees of the House of Lords, committees of Convocation, commissions on industrial schools, have urged one after the other that the Act should be put in force. In vain. The Industrial Schools Act Amendment Act has till now remained almost a dead letter.

But, thank God, at length there seems to be signs of an awakening on all hands to the obvious truth that if you want to put down the evil which far more than intemperance is undermining the national health and character, your first step in common consistency, even though it be but a small step, is to prevent children being deliberately brought up for it. The London magistrates no longer refuse to commit. The London School Board is thoroughly willing to co-operate. But the real practical step has been taken by the admirable and energetic Refuge and Reformatory Union in appointing out of its own funds two experienced rescue officers, who can now be had on application to the office, 32, Charing-cross, to work any cases known to ministers, missionaries, district visitors, &c., where the Act wants putting in force.

Through their agency in the last year above seventy children, largely girls, have been rescued. Two pamphlets have been issued, giving the facts about these children, one by the Refuge and Reformatory Union, called "Save the Children," which can be had at their office, and one by Mr. Horsley, called "Am I my Sister's Keeper?" which can be had on application to him at H.M. Prison, Clerkenwell.

Both from their very nature are only suited for very careful distribution. It is impossible to quote much from either. The fate of these unhappy children is simply unspeakable in the literal sense of the word; but is this to be the reason that they should be abandoned to it? One little boy was found living in one room with nine abandoned women, to none of whom was he related. One of them had adopted him out of pity. In another case an outcast girl came to the rescue officer and besought him to rescue her sister of thirteen, a bargain for whose intended sale for £7 she had overheard. She herself had been sold in like manner; this child was rescued just in time.

Can it be the will of Christian England that these things shall go on? We have it in our own power to put a stop to it. Only let the Act for removing such children be steadily enforced, and the parents be compelled to support their children in Christian and industrial training, and it would put a stop to the temptation they are now under of supporting their families by nefarious means, and it would soon become a recognised thing that no children should ever be permitted in disorderly houses. Vigorous action would soon extinguish this class of children. In one case of a very intelligent little girl of eight being rescued, the officer states: "After she was sent to school, the news flew through the neighbourhood where she had been living, and a great many children who were residing with outcast women were removed to respectable houses, some went out of the neighbourhood altogether. The parents feared that they would be similarly deprived of their children, and have to pay for their maintenance at an Industrial School."

But there is one obstacle to this energetic action which I must ask your readers to help me in meeting, and that is the paucity of certified industrial schools for girls. I have already frequently stated the proportion of boys to girls in our certified industrial schools, 19,000 boys to only 4600 girls. Side by side with this I have placed the proportion in Ireland, where the men do care for the honour of their women, do recognise that the girl, as the future mother and educator of the young, is the vital factor in the physical and moral health of the nation. In the Irish certified schools there are 3171 girls to 2049 boys. The five schools we have opened for this class of children are all full, with the exception of one at Plymouth, which will be needed for the wants of the far West, and one at Ashurst, which is reserved for girls between twelve and fourteen, and which is also rapidly filling. The consequence is that these children are being put into large barrack schools, where they cannot receive the individual attention they need, and where, therefore, they may do incalculable harm.

Fortunately, the managers of these large schools are beginning to refuse to take them, but this will only reduce us to the dead-lock of having nowhere to put our rescued little ones. One school alone refused four of these children the other day, on the ground of being already overcrowded. A fresh certified school must be opened for them at once, and three others in the course of the summer, bright, pleasant Industrial Homes in the country—on this I lay the greatest stress—where fresh country sights and sounds may wholly change the current of thought, and the little life, like a stream, may run itself clear.

Once started at a small initial expense, the payments of the children make it self-supporting when full. The admirable Society for the care of waifs and strays is ready to start such a school at once if I can raise £250 to meet preliminary expenses. A Manchester friend gives me £50; I hope to spare a like sum myself. Will three others do the same? Or, perhaps, it may be our Lord's will to send it in smaller sums, that there may be more hearts to yearn for his poor, degraded mites, and more souls to share the joy of saving in perpetuum twenty-five of "God's little girls" from a fate which would certainly break our hearts if it happened to our own.

MR. GEORGE BLAIKLOCK has lately visited and addressed Gospel Temperance meetings at Reigate, Woolwich, Strood, Rochester, Snodland, Sittingbourne, Queenborough, Sheerness, Faversham, and Whitstable-on-Sea.

UPPER HOLLOWAY.—A Tent Mission, conducted by Rev. M. Rainsford, jun. (St. George's, Tufnell-park), is being held in Upper Holloway, June 16—29. Hundreds failed to gain admission on Sunday, and the large tent is full every evening.

RICHARD WEAVER has consented to hold a fortnightly special service at the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, to follow up Mr. Moody's meetings at Temple Gardens Hall, many from the neighbourhood of St. Giles having received a blessing. Our brother commences on Sunday, July 6, and will preach morning at 11 and evening at 7, and every week evening, Saturday excepted, at 8. Workers heartily welcomed; also any members of Mr. Moody's choir.

Paradoxes of the Christian Life.

O BLESSED life! which is not ours
But thine, who deign'st to be
"The Resurrection and the Life"
Of all who died with Thee!

O sacred paradox of faith!
We "suffer," yet we "reign;"
And only as we live in Thee
The place of death maintain.

O wondrous mystery of love!
We triumph through Thy cross:
And for the knowledge of thyself
Account all "gain" as "loss."

"Perplexed," but never "in despair:"
"Cast down, but not destroyed:"
And when from our own works we cease,
Then are we best employed.

"As poor, yet making many rich;"
(Giving, we have not less!)
As "having nothing," yet in Thee
We everything possess.

If troubled sore on every side,
Yet are we not distrest;
And 'tis beneath the "yoke" of Christ
Our souls have found their "rest."

When we are "weak" then are we "strong;"
"Unknown, and yet well-known;"
And, with our Lord, we claim to be,
"Alone, yet not alone."

"As dying, and behold we live;"
"As chastened, yet not killed:"
As sorrowful, yet all the while
With glad rejoicing filled.

"Made free," and yet by dying love
For life and death enchained;
In sweet and glad captivity
Eternally detained.

Then first we conquer when we bow
To thine almighty will:
And each desire resigned to Thee
Thou lovest to fulfil.

For only into yielded hearts
Thy blessings Thou canst pour;
And empty vessels are the ones
Thou fillest evermore.

Mr. and Mrs. Haslam in Ireland.

A FIVE weeks' Mission has been concluded in the south of Ireland by Mr. and Mrs. Haslam, under the auspices of the Irish branch of the Evangelical Alliance. It was undertaken at the earnest request of many Christian friends in that part of the country, and the result has exceeded expectations. The services commenced in Waterford on Sunday, May 18, and were continued in the large Protestant hall of the city until the following Sunday. Three meetings were held each day, a Bible-reading at noon, and an evangelistic service in the evening, conducted by Mr. Haslam, and a meeting for women in the afternoon, addressed by Mrs. Haslam. Ministers of various Protestant denominations took part in the services, which continued to increase in power and interest till the end. The closing meeting of the series was held on Sunday evening, 25th, when the hall was densely crowded. It was a very solemn and impressive service. The meetings have been greatly blessed to many.

The Mission was continued in Carrick-on-Suir, Cahir, Fethard, Dungarvan, and Bandon, and was brought to a fitting close by a brief visit to Cork. The services in Cork were held in the South Mall Hall and in St. Mary's Church. The noon meetings were attended by over a thousand persons, and the meetings in the evening were very large. The result of the labours of these devoted friends in the south of Ireland affords occasion for much thankfulness to God, and their return will be looked forward to by very many to whom they have been made a blessing.

MISS MACPHERSON'S JOURNAL.

MANY of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who are aware that Miss Macpherson sailed for Canada on May 15, with a party of eighty children, are inquiring how it fared with her and her little ones on the ocean. Some extracts from her journal will doubtless be read with interest.

Saturday, May 17. On board S.S. Circassian.—After leaving Lough Foyle last evening, the ship began to roll very much, for the wind was high and the sea rough, but thankful we were to find the dear children all fast asleep. . . Met the captain, who told us that a poor woman in the steerage, whilst drinking a cup of tea, had died in a moment of heart disease. We went to see the poor bereaved husband, who was overwhelmed with grief, as well as the poor little children; one, only a year old, lay sound asleep. God's voice is speaking to every soul on board.

Sunday, May 18.—Weather bright. Everyone sent upon deck. We saw that there was a good opportunity of speaking a word for the Master, so we sang several hymns, and then endeavoured to tell out the Gospel story amid the pitching and tossing. Some Roman Catholics began to murmur, "Suffer not a woman to take a priest's place," but the crowd quickly told them to be quiet, as if they shut their eyes they would not know the difference.

At midday the funeral of the poor woman who had died the previous day took place. The captain stood with his men, bareheaded, a portion of the Burial Service was read, and in ten minutes we heard a deep plunge, and all was over. She is left till the sea gives up her dead. How we longed that the voice of the Lord might be heard by every soul! It seemed so solemn, and all on board were stilled for a brief season.

Wednesday, 21.—What an awful night we have had! truly "the floods have lifted up their voice;" "He raiseth the stormy wind;" yet "the Lord reigneth." How helpless, even to think, are we in such wild tumultuous howling of the waves. These mountains of water washing over us from stem to stern, it is as if in a few moments they might engulph us for ever. Inside our vessel every human voice is hushed, and all are silently enduring. Although only two minutes' walk from the children's compartment, yet that was impossible, and even dangerous to attempt, as the ship seemed to dance like a thing of life, every now and then giving a shake to right herself in breasting the waves. Hearing a sailor outside our cabin, we begged him to go and see how the children fared; he returned with the cheering news that most of them were asleep, and the two helpers on the watch to soothe any who were alarmed. As the dawn appeared there was a slight cessation of the excessive rolling.

Friday, 23.—Before starting on the voyage, we had considered, that as opportunity was given, influence might extend to the stewards. So a number of little bags had been packed with suitable books. To-day, being on the watch for an opportunity, we called one of them aside to receive his bag, when he at once spoke out freely, said he was unsaved, and had such a burden. At home he had been so wicked, had refused to go with his wife to a place of worship, &c. A day or two since he had discovered that she had put his father's Bible in his box, and had written on the first page, "Don't be ashamed to read a verse daily, dear Willie." It had cut him to the heart, and now the big tears were rolling down his face. We pointed him to the Saviour of sinners, referring to several passages of God's Word, and soon his eyes were opened to see that Jesus had atoned for his sins on Calvary's cross, and we kneeled down together, and thanked God that he was brought out of darkness into marvellous light.

Sunday, 25.—The weather being warmer, we gathered our children on deck, and were assisted by a young missionary on board, who preached to a goodly number of passengers on the Prodigal Son. We sang several hymns together, and pleaded for a blessing on the words spoken.

Monday, 26.—At nine o'clock this morning we sailed into the port of Quebec, amid loveliest sunshine and balmy air; the little ones looked so charming in their shade hats, running about. Mr. Merry met us, and begged me to leave him and his son and the nurses in charge of the children, and go off by the first train, as the emigrants' train would not start for eight hours. For the first time I consented to leave my charges and proceeded with my companions.

Tuesday, 27.—At seven o'clock this evening arrived safely at ——. Such a warm welcome awaited us. Our hearts were deeply touched by recognising in the company who greeted us on the verandah two belonging to our Mission, one a Christian young man, employed in the house of business, the other a youth of ten summers, calling our hostess by a loved familiar name, having been adopted into the family. How deep were the sorrows from which that child had been rescued, but he knows nothing of it under the shelter of this Christian home.

Friday, 30.—Mr. Merry came to meet me and we returned together to Stratford; the dear children had arrived there two days previously.

Sunday, June 1.—We all went to the Town Hall this afternoon, to receive a welcome with our children. One of the ministers opened with praise and prayer, showing much tenderness and sympathy, and the Lord strengthened us to testify of His goodness to the little ones all the way through. This is our last day on earth as a family. On the morrow many will be here to claim their longed-for treasures. Were it not that the Lord calls me to return and abide patiently, watching for another family of destitute little ones, how gladly would I remain, and train these for missionaries, but we rest on that word, "God setteth the solitary in families."

Monday, June 2.—Before eleven o'clock to-day the house was quite full of farmers and their wives. We found a young doctor in the act of choosing little C. H. to be a companion for his mother, so took the opportunity of asking him to write to her father, that his heart may be comforted. He is in bad health, often out of work, and has a little deaf and dumb boy to support.

From Miss Macpherson's nephew, who accompanied the party to Canada, there comes the following account:—

June 3.—This morning the M.P. who has Charlie C. came for Dolly, so the affectionate brother and sister will be in a fine home together. E. G. was taken yesterday by such a loving, kindly lady to bring up as her own. C. L. was adopted by a comparatively young couple, who have no little ones of their own, and they were so enraptured with her that they left her box of clothes on the platform at the station, and did not discover it till they got home! They told us while here, that they had scarcely slept for two nights, so conscious were they about the choice of a little girl. C. L. was brought to them first, and they put their arms round her and loved her at once, the husband declaring she was the image of his wife!

Little A. B. has a fine home with a most motherly woman, who wanted a daughter to pet and love. She chose A. because of her noble brow. She said she knew the child would be a credit to a better woman than herself! To-day a jolly old farmer came and took the eldest, D. I told him, after the boy had gone back to the school-house to fetch his box, about his father dying a few days before he came to us, so the old gentleman called him back, and said, "I lost my father when a boy, and I know how lonely it feels; but I will try and be both father and mother to you."

THE "JOHN BOST" REFUGES at Laforce celebrated their anniversary on June 6, when, as usual, a large number of friends took part. The different establishments, La Famille, Bethesda, Ebenezer, Le Repos, La Retraite, La Miséricorde, &c., were erected and maintained through the loving efforts of Mr. John Bost, and are used to provide subsistence and care to orphan or neglected girls, aged and worn out governesses and servants, idiots, epileptic and infirm persons of both sexes. They are now all prosperously conducted by M. Ernest Rayroux, with an efficient staff of female workers.—Le Christianisme.

LITTLE FOLKS. 3s. 6d. Cassell & Co. This volume contains the parts for the current half-year. It is admirably adapted for children, abounding in attractive pictures and interesting stories. The monthly parts may also be had, price 6d. each.

SELECT LETTERS OF THE REV. SAMUEL RUTHERFORD. Devotional Manuals Series. T. Woolmer. Rutherford's letters do not need any words of commendation, after being a joy and solace to thousands of kindred spirits for more than two centuries. This is a neat and tasty little book, suitable for the pocket.

LIFE OF WYCLIFFE. By Rev. W. L. WATKINSON. 2s. 6d. Thos. Woolmer, 66, Paternoster-row. Although so many works on this subject have appeared of late, there is much in this volume that strikes the reader as fresh and interesting. Several leading authorities have been consulted, and these, with numerous illustrations, and the author's style, unite in producing a very readable book.

SUNLIGHT is the happy title given to the "Summer Number" of The Girls' Own Paper (6d. Religious Tract Society). Full of poems, pictures, pastimes, pleasant stories, practical papers, music, and so forth, it well deserves the name. Perhaps the two pages that will be most carefully conned are those that contain charmingly executed counterfeit presentments of the chief contributors to this popular monthly.

ARMINIUS VAMBÉRY: his Life and Adventures. Written by Himself. 6s. T. Fisher Unwin. This far-famed Hungarian traveller has made for himself a name as one of the most daring and observant of modern explorers. He has done for Central Asia, and at greater personal risk, something akin to what Stanley has done for Central Africa. The reading public ought to thank Mr. Unwin for sending out this popular edition of a wonderfully fascinating account of men and things, in a comparatively unknown part of the globe. We may not be able fully to endorse M. Vambéry's political views: we cannot but admire his courage and his literary skill. A map of the route taken would be a decided help to the reader.

HOW SORROW WAS CHANGED INTO JOY. By Mrs. PRENTICE. 2s. 6d. Hodder & Stoughton. Mrs. Prentice kept in diary form a little history of the lives of each of her children, noting their pretty ways and funny sayings. This volume consists chiefly of the history of her little Eddie, who died at three years of age, with letters of sympathy to sorrowing mothers suffering under similar bereavement, whom her own sorrows and rich Christian experience so particularly fitted her to comfort. In the truly Christlike work of binding up the broken heart and pouring in the oil of holy consolation Mrs. Prentice has few equals. If other bereaved mothers can be stimulated by her example to "go and do likewise," the mission of this dainty little book will be well accomplished.

 The price of Rev. W. B. Doherty's book, THOUGHTS OF PRESENT INTEREST IN THE CHURCH OF GOD, is 1s. (post 1s. 1d.), not 6d., as stated in our recent notice.

A HAILSTORM IN FRANCE.

DEAR FRIEND,—I should hardly have written to you just now, when so many great meetings are claiming your attention, were it not to ask your sympathy and that of the readers of The Christian for our poor neighbours. A sudden change has come over their prospects, and they are in great trouble. On Thursday, Miss Mudie and I went to visit some lonely farmhouses in the glen above Vaujelas. We remarked on the extreme luxuriance and beauty of all around the village. The abundant rains had given unusual greenness after the drought, and the wheat fields especially struck us. As we repassed the village in returning, there were slight showers, but on all sides we heard the assurance, "Pas de grosse pluie aujourd'hui."

We had not been home ten minutes when a terrible storm burst on the village we had left. Literally torrents of rain mingled with hail, with fearful lightning, were what fell here, but on poor Vaujelas, Suze, and Gigors, it was hail which devastated all. Next morning the country was white for miles with hail. In the street of Montelar the hail was knee deep. Sabbath morning one could only think of the words of Joel. The land had been like the garden of Eden; now it was only a desolate waste. The wheat, potatoes, vines, everything is destroyed.

Mr. Mudie went with me to look at some of the wheat fields, there was nothing left but green stubble, the ears cut off. Yesterday I visited the village. I think for nearly a mile I passed through wheat fields; which were being grown and dried for hay! I saw one poor woman wandering along the little runlet which bordered her fields. I can never forget the despair in her face as she said, "God may as well take away our lives, for He has left us nothing to support them." The leaves on the mulberries are stripped, and as they say chopped up and driven into the earth. In the country, where bread is literally the staff of life, the loss of the wheat is something terrible. On it the peasant proprietors depend not only for food, but for money to pay their taxes. So many have no higher hopes, that the loss of the harvest is crushing. Formerly they depended on their vines—the phylloxera has destroyed their vineyards; and now there will be no harvest. Sixty years ago there was a similar disaster, but later in the season.

It was a cheering contrast to the despair of many to meet some of our Christian friends; they too had suffered, but as one said, after replying simply to a question, "Yes, all is destroyed," added, with a radiant face, "I have something better." Another said, "As to the Christians, I have no anxiety about them; they know who sends the chastening. They are sure to get on all right, but for the others—what will they do?" I trust the lesson has gone home to some hearts. "God has to send judgments, otherwise we should never think of Him," is an expression I have heard more than once.

Of the rebellion, and blasphemy, and superstition which are uttered, we hear little. Superstition, on one side, thinks our commune has escaped because we live here; on the other, the calamity is ascribed to the "praying people." One poor family, only "fermiers," having rent to pay, are in terrible distress. The hail had taken all, and they were obliged to buy leaves for their hungry silkworms. On his way to buy them, the man's oxen swerved, the cart was upset, the daughter had her leg broken, a little boy received two terrible wounds on the head, and the poor man himself some serious internal injuries.

We hardly know the extent of the calamity yet. I only speak of the part coming under our own notice. I was struck with one poor woman saying heartily on looking at a field of our neighbour's, which had scarcely suffered, "I am so glad that others are not suffering as we are." Last year's wheat is not yet exhausted in some homes, and the newly-sown late potatoes are in the ground; otherwise fruit, vegetables, corn, and potatoes are utterly destroyed. "Not a leaf in our garden," said one woman. In some cases the wheat stalks are so beaten into the earth that the fields will have to be cleared by fire before ploughing will be possible. Pray that this failure of earthly hopes may lead many to seek an inheritance unchangeable in the Heavens.

—Yours very sincerely,

Maison Jossand, S. R. Geldard.

Obituary.

MRS. SEWELL.

MANY will have heard with sorrow and with a sense of personal loss of the death of this estimable lady on June 10 at Norwich. She died most peacefully, and was conscious till within a quarter of an hour of the end, sending messages to herspecial friends. A correspondent, writing to us about the deceased lady, says:—

"She was one to whom the Christian world owes much, and whose life and pen were given in the interests of the poor of our land. There is scarcely a class of oppressed and needy ones for whom Mrs. Sewell did not plead. Her touching ballads could not fail to enlist sympathy in their behalf. Whether in 'Our Father's Care,' 'Mother's Last Words,' 'There's Help at Hand,' or 'The Button-hole Maker's Soliloquy,' or the many other poems she penned, they were written with such true pathos and genuine sympathy that they would often draw tears from strong men, and rouse selfish hearts to care for others. No district visitor should be without her volume entitled 'My Poor Brother.' It has helped and encouraged many in their work. Readers at 'Mothers' Meetings' and 'Penny Readings' have found these 'homely ballads' invaluable; translated into several languages, they have found their way to distant lands. She has now entered her rest, and her work is over. She must not, however, be forgotten. We know that her 'labours of love' will be remembered by Him for whom they were done."

REV. JAMES SCOTT, GLASGOW.

A devoted leader of the evangelistic movement in Scotland, which may be said to have originated in the first visit to this country of Mr. D. L. Moody, has passed away by the death, at the early age of 39, of the Rev. James Scott, which took place on the night of Monday, 23rd inst., in London. A native of Fifeshire, born in the vicinity of Leslie, Mr. Scott was studying in Glasgow for the ministry of the Free Church when Mr. Moody in 1874 visited that city. He was one of a little band of students who came forward to help the American evangelist in his work. Deeply impressed by his enthusiasm, Mr. Moody encouraged him to give himself to evangelistic work, and especially to the continuance of the movement which was then begun in Glasgow; and on the formation of the Evangelistic Association in that city he accepted the appointment of secretary. In this office he developed an admirable power of organising, and in the decade that has elapsed since he entered upon the work he was the means of initiating or powerfully furthering many important Christian schemes. In connection with the free breakfast and the free dinner table in James Morrison-street, started in 1875, and which have continued in active operation down to the present hour, he was the moving spirit; and it is hardly possible to estimate the amount of spiritual as well as material good accomplished on behalf of the outcast class by this beneficent institution, which has been conducted, at the expense of some £25 a week, without a penny ever having been asked for.

For the ten years in which Mr. Scott was spared to exercise his ministry he was also the principal conductor of the noon meeting in Glasgow. In 1881, along with Mr. Sankey, he conducted evangelistic meetings with distinguished success in the Mormon city of Utah; and his services during the same visit to America were so much appreciated in San Francisco that he received a pressing invitation to the pastorate of a church in that city with a stipend of £600. At one time he was very nearly going to South Africa to take the management of one of the missionary stations of the Free Church in that country; but he was prevailed upon by the friends in Glasgow to remain at his post in Scotland. As an evangelist, Mr. Scott was eminently practical and effective; and in addition to his power of speech he had a gift as a writer of telling evangelistic tracts.

His health, always precarious, gave way in December last, when he was obliged to seek rest at Rothesay, from which he came to Glasgow on an exceedingly inclement evening towards the end of January to read a paper before the Scottish Temperance League—the last public service he was destined to render. It was feared that the fulfilment of his promise on that occasion aggravated his illness. The following weeks were spent in various hydropathic establishments, and in April he proceeded to Bournemouth, where he spent six weeks without any improvement in his condition. A month ago he came to London, and, after he had been there two weeks, he was visited at his hotel by Messrs. Moody and J. Campbell White, of Overtoun, who found him sinking so fast that they had him removed to his private lodging in Upper Baker-street, where, at half-past nine on Monday night, he breathed his last. Mr. Moody was with him shortly before he died. Mr. Scott, whose studies for the ministry had been interrupted in 1874, resumed his theological course and completed it in 1877, when he was licensed by the Glasgow presbytery of the Free Church as a preacher. In May of last year he married Miss Reid, of Glasgow, who survives him.—Christian Leader.

REV. BALDWIN BROWN.

This well-known and highly-esteemed minister of the Congregational Church, Brixton, S.W., died suddenly from an apoplectic fit last week. He had been in failing health for some time, and was on the point of leaving for the South of France, in the hope of recruiting his health. He was a voluminous and forcible writer on theological and political topics. His remains were followed to the grave at Norwood Cemetery on Monday last by a large body of sorrowing friends.

Seaside Services for Children.

DEAR SIR,—May I be allowed to call the attention of your readers to the accompanying list of Seaside Services for Children? It is, of course, not yet complete, but if your readers know early, they may be able to make arrangements to spend their summer holiday at one or other of the seaside resorts where meetings will be held. I trust many Christian friends will rally round and lighten the labours of our workers, who will be glad of help in the singing, making the meetings known, distributing hymn sheets, picture leaflets, conversation with children, &c. Ladies can be especially helpful in all this.

I would earnestly ask prayer for these services, as well as the others that we hope to arrange.

Yours very faithfully,

48, Paternoster-row, E.C. T. B. Bishop.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

The Converts' Farewell.

THE London Mission has already receded into the past, and become matter of history. If that history were to be written by the pen of Omniscience, we believe it would far surpass in genuine and tragic interest all the records that the libraries of this world contain, or have contained. The history of one soul—who has ever read, or what human pen could write it? The story of the revolutions that have taken place in many thousands of priceless souls these past eight months, no man can tell, or even conjecture. The Lord knoweth, and it may be that one day all who have had the privilege and responsibility of taking some part in this great Gospel campaign will know what wondrous things God hath wrought. As a solitary instance of the results that have followed, though they may not always have been made known, we quote some sentences of a letter that came to Mr. Moody on one of the very last days of the Mission, the writer giving his name and address:—

"I have to thank God for leading me to hear you on Friday night. I came out for the purpose of committing a burglary; been out of work, and my wife ill in bed, and my landlady said if the rent was not paid she would put brokers in, and sell my home. So I intended to get the money somehow. I was led to your meeting, and when you spoke of the mother and her condemned son, I thought of my poor mother, and that broke me down. I threw my revolver into the Thames, went home and asked the Lord to save me, which He did before I rose from my knees."

The closing meeting for young converts on Monday week, at Temple Gardens Hall, was in every respect worthy of the occasion; but we must be brief in our reference to it, as there is great pressure on our space. Anyone entering the hall at the hour of meeting would have thought it was some festive gathering instead of a farewell, with which we commonly associate feelings of sadness. Kind and loving hands had profusely decorated the platform and Mr. Moody's pulpit with roses, ferns, and other choice floral products of the soil. The hall, of course, was crammed to excess—so much so, that Mr. George Williams and Mr. Stevenson Blackwood were fain to take refuge on the pulpit steps.

Mr. McGranahan and his Male Choir were there; so also was Mr. Stebbins, who, with the help of several others, sang once again that favourite song, "Along the river of time we glide." The ordinary choir did their very best, and "all went merry as a marriage bell." Among those who led the devotions of the immense assembly were Revs. A. G. Brown, of Stepney; Marcus Rainsford, of Wandsworth; C. A. Fox, of Eaton-square; and J. Jackson, of Stratford; Mr. Stevenson Blackwood, &c.

Early in the evening Mr. Moody caused no little pleasurable excitement by suggesting that a cable dispatch should be sent to Mr. Sankey by the meeting. As drawn up by Mr. S. A. Blackwood, the message read as follows:—"Heartiest loving greetings from all the Christians assembled in closing convention in Temple Gardens Hall. We thankfully remember your service of love, and cordially commend you, and all dear to you, to our God and Father in Christ Jesus. The Lord bless thee and keep thee, and use thee more and more in his blessed service." Mr. Moody also announced that Mr. George Williams, with his characteristic generosity, would be glad to meet all the young men present who had been in any way connected with the Mission, for tea at Exeter Hall on the following Wednesday. An account of this interesting gathering will be found in a subsequent column.

Mr. Moody's address to the young converts was the pièce de résistance of the evening. He said he was going to damage his reputation for giving short addresses, and he was as good as his word. With only a brief interlude he discoursed for a full hour and a half on the benefits that would accrue to the young disciples from a thorough and intelligent study of the Bible. His great desire was to get them in love with the Word of God. We hope soon to publish this valuable address in a separate form, with some additions. The evangelist closed his remarks by giving, in his most thrilling style, the wonderful description of Paul's heroic courage and devotion under trial and suffering that forms the closing chapter of his book on "Heaven."

Though the evening was far spent, an additional twenty minutes were given, devoted to prayer, before the meeting broke up, and the London Mission of 1883-4 became a thing of the past.

Mr. Moody at Wandsworth.

The ceremony of laying the foundation-stone of a new Evangelistic Hall was performed by Mr. Moody at Wandsworth on the 24th June. Though the gathering was not so large as that at Stratford on the previous day, the tent was filled to overflowing some time before the appointed hour. Much interest was shown upon Mr. Moody's appearance with his little son Paul, who, from the frequent allusions made to him by Mr. Moody in his addresses, is now quite a public character.

Dr. Watney, who has generously provided the site and means for the erection of the building, took the chair. After the opening hymn and prayer,

Mr. Ernest Tritton said that in coming thus together they met on no ordinary spot, but upon ground hallowed by God in the salvation of many souls, who had gathered upon it when the iron hall stood there. The foundation-stone, therefore, would be a perpetual memorial of that blessed mission which had been held at the end of last year. He was reminded of an incident that came under his notice during the mission in Wandsworth. A working man was endeavouring to convince his friend of the good of the work, but vainly. Presently the latter remarked, "Well, I confess there's one thing I can't get over; they does its gratis!" He saw it was all done for love to God and the souls of men; if he has not gone a step further and accepted the gift of God without money and without price, it is to be hoped that as he sees this hall doing its blessed work, he may again feel that the grace of God is gratis, and that such a work is a reality indeed. Mr. Tritton then expressed his earnest desire that all present should be built upon the true spiritual foundation, and thus be built up, a holy temple in Christ Jesus.

After Rev. Marcus Rainsford had made a few comments upon Psalm xxiii., Mr. Seaman read a statement showing that such a hall, suitable for the rallying of young converts in evangelistic work, had long been needed; it would be used for mission services for the labouring classes, and other work of a similar character.

Mr. Moody, alluding to Proverbs xi. 24, said that perhaps some ministers might withhold their sympathy from such a movement as this, fearing that it would empty their churches; he was sure it would have the contrary effect, if the converts saw that they came amongst them as their friends, for then they would naturally attend their ministry. He loved the Church of God perhaps more now than ever, but he believed that there was very little provision made during the week to interest young men from seventeen to twenty-three years of age; if the Church did not look after them, the devil would. These buildings supply that need, and assist numbers of young men to keep out of the way of temptation. He wanted it to be like the Tabernacle of old, where all the twelve tribes met together, and he would be glad to see members of all Christian churches banding themselves together in the work of the Lord. A similar building was erected in Chicago years ago; nine out of ten of the ministers thought it was a mistake, but it was done. Shortly after it was burnt down, but its work had become so apparent that it was put up again without delay. It was burnt again in the great fire of Chicago, but a third time it was built, and there it stands, a centre of light and usefulness. Christians need to meet together on a common platform to give mutual help and encouragement, and they will be the better fitted for their work. Two boys went to sleep in one of his meetings, and a worker gently awoke one of them and said, "Look, your companion has gone to sleep; you watch him and keep him awake." The effect was instantaneous; he rubbed his eyes, and was so intent in keeping his fellow awake that neither went to sleep again. So Christians need to be on the alert to help their fellow-workers, and in doing so, depend upon it they will keep awake themselves.

Mr. Moody then proceeded to lay the stone; but, not believing in mere ceremony, he went to work in good earnest, and having laid the mortar in a truly workmanlike style, he assisted in lowering and adjusting the stone, after which he tested the accuracy of its position with the plumb-line. He was keenly watched by a group of workmen at a little distance, and their faces testified their approval of the work. One could not help noting that such practical fellow-feeling with the working man as this might have more effect than a sermon.

Dr. Sinclair Paterson then offered the closing prayer, and in a few minutes Mr. Moody was surrounded by an eager throng anxiously endeavouring to press his hand once more.

The building is now in a fair state of progress, and from the architect's designs a very handsome and commodious structure may be expected, to stand as a worthy memorial of a noble work.

Tea Meeting at Exeter Hall.

A very large number of male converts accepted the kind invitation which Mr. George Williams announced at the closing meeting in the Temple Gardens Hall, to meet Mr. Moody at Exeter Hall, on the following Wednesday evening, the 25th ult. Tea was provided at 8 p.m., of which about 1200 partook. This was followed by a meeting in the large hall, at which the Male Choir, numbering about 100, sang some of their choicest and most thrilling pieces, under the vigorous leadership of Mr. Carr.

Mr. Moody's entrance was greeted with vociferous applause, renewed again and again, until he characteristically begged as a personal favour that there might be no further expression of their joy in that manner. The principal object of this gathering, he said, was to introduce the new converts to the advantages of the Y.M.C.A. in various parts of London, and to form new organisations to carry on the work which has been started during the past eight months.

Mr. Williams expressed his conviction that the grip of the Y.M.C.A. over young men was greater than that of any other institution, and all members were welcomed with warmth, love, and sympathy. He was deeply thankful to God for the late Mission, and trusted they would that night realise afresh the power and presence of God.

Mr. Burson then gave a sketch of the work ordinarily done by that branch, and offered a warm invitation to foreign young men to attend the classes specially provided for them.

The Male Choir sang "The Gift of God." Mr. Moody presently bade the congregation join in the chorus. "I do like that hymn," he said, "and wish all you men would join the Male Choir."

Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, referring with great heartiness to the hymns that had preceded, said: Why did Christ receive sinners, and eat with them? That they might have strength to work for Him. After Peter and the labourers with him had caught the great draught of fishes, seven men could not pull the net to land; but when he had fallen at the feet of Jesus, he could do it by himself. When young converts are at the feet of Jesus they have sevenfold strength. I have never seen so many young converts together at one time. But you will soon part from our friend Mr. Moody, and certainly you will never all meet again on earth. What is to be the practical result of this Mission? There is plenty of work to be done in this part of London, and although it may not be very pleasant, yet I do not believe in work that has no cross in it. Saint Paul said, "I take pleasure in infirmities." He did not merely bear them, but actually delighted in them; and if we follow his example we shall not lose our reward.

I know a young Londoner out in St. Louis, whose father is on this platform to-night, who has done a mighty work for God out there. He is a small, quiet, beardless stripling, but he has a heart devoted to Christ, and I have seen him stand up before great strong men and plead with them until he has melted them to tears. I cannot tell you how many men he has brought to Christ, but I would to God all here would go and work for the Lord as he has done.

At the close of Dr. Brookes' spontaneous and encouraging address, Mr. Moody asked for the hymn, "Hallelujah for the Cross," which seemed to enspirit his very soul. He then urged the necessity of forming a strong Male Choir for Exeter Hall; he believed that if it were noised abroad that four or five hundred men would sing the Gospel there every Sunday afternoon and evening, that large hall would be filled to overflowing. About 240 men then held up their hands as willing to assist regularly, either by singing or in other ways; these adjourned to the lower hall to enter their names and addresses, and to band themselves together for the Lord. Mr. Moody then learnt from those present what work was being done in the various localities, and gained fresh recruits for each.

Before leaving, Mr. Williams, on behalf of the audience, expressed their pleasure and appreciation of the devoted labours of Mr. Moody and his fellow-labourer, as well as those of the other evangelists who have laboured in conjunction with him, and committed them to God for present and future blessing. Mr. Moody then went to the lower hall to see what had been done, and found that 192 names had been received to augment the choir and forty-four for other Mission work. After a season of earnest prayer the happy gathering dispersed. Thus for the last time Mr. Moody met with a body of some 1500 men, most of whom will henceforth call him their spiritual father in Christ Jesus.

A Word to the Young Converts.

DEAR SIRS,—As an old reader and contributor to your pages, may I express the thankfulness with which I have read your weekly details of the labours of the American evangelists and their fellow-workers? Through God's blessing on their work, hundreds have been brought to know "the way of God more perfectly," and hundreds, if not thousands, have changed the service of Satan for that of Christ. May I ask what should be the outcome of all this? Ought not a stream of this world's goods to be now used for the service of the new Master? Many of these new disciples have not been trained to giving. Will you, through your columns, help such with a little brotherly advice? Does not the command in Prov. iii. 9 apply to all who profess to be Christ's followers? "Honour the Lord with thy substance," &c. And xxi. 26, "The righteous giveth and spareth not." Again in Ex. xxv. 2, "Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring Me an offering."

If the money hitherto lavished on dress, ornaments, costly living, and amusements, is only poured into the Lord's treasury, how your column of gifts will be enlarged. Whether for Missions abroad or at home, for widows, orphans, cripples, sick or needy, money will be forthcoming. And among the many efforts, help for which you have been asking, for our soldiers, sailors, fishermen, and the outcast, will surely come.

Amongst other special claims, the efforts now being made to erect schools in which the young may be taught the way to heaven, in Japan on the one hand, and in Bethlehem, where the Lord Himself was a child, will certainly not be disregarded.—Yours faithfully, H. W. E.

[We are obliged to omit this week the chapter of Lady Hope's interesting narrative.]

YOUNG WOMEN IN LONDON.

THE obligations of Christian London to the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress were further enhanced by the hearty welcome and hospitality accorded to the members and friends of the Y.W.C.A. at a conversazione held at the Mansion House on the evening of the 23rd inst. Founded in 1857, this was the first visit of the Association to the Egyptian Hall, and we think it has seldom sheltered more appreciative or more worthy guests. While the entertainment of the young people was attended to, the Council of the Association had a more serious purpose in view, and an hour was devoted to short addresses on the aims and utility of the institution, and the necessity of further support by the Christian public. The LORD MAYOR accordingly took the chair, and the proceedings were prefaced by prayer, offered by Rev. E. W. Moore.

Mr. W. T. PATON, in submitting the report of work done during the past year, claimed support for the Association on the highest Christian and social considerations. On whatever platform the woman stands, there eventually the man finds his place. Society was not like a bicycle rider—a man on a wheel—it was of a dual nature, and one side could not be affected without the other sharing in the result. He thankfully acknowledged the sympathetic reply to the appeal for aid which was made last year, and by means of which four new centres and twelve new branches had been opened. There were now eighty institutes and branches throughout the postal district of London, with a membership of seven thousand. They were learning that they were only at the fringe of the work, and they were resolved to persevere in it. This year he was commissioned to ask for £3000 for the enlargement of the Finsbury Institute, and he had little doubt the sum would be obtained, as Mr. Samuel Morley had led the way with a subscription of £500. There were also crying demands for institutes in Southwark, the Strand, and Hackney, where there were thousands of young girls who needed kindly help, sympathy, and a friend, and who at present were lacking in all. Their programme of work was not drawn up to suit those of a strait-laced sort. When he himself opened his house to his friends it was not always for a prayer-meeting. The corner stones upon which they built were Bible-classes, special services, and devotional meetings, but this structure had space for services of song, with social gatherings of different sorts, and these contributed to give a homely feeling to their institutes. An institute was a bright, happy, cheerful place, where girls without friends could resort, and even reside, and where in the matron they could find a friend who would gladly advise them when they found themselves standing in the cross-roads of life.

The LORD MAYOR, speaking for his daughter and himself, expressed his satisfaction at the Mansion House being made serviceable to the young women of London. He was well aware of the dangers to which young people were liable, and the aim they had in view was to enable as largely as possible Christian ladies to exercise care over friendless girls, such as they could wish for their own daughters, if under similar circumstances.

Sir THOMAS CHAMBERS said he had just finished a heavy day's work, but he had not been able to refuse the invitation to be present. He had been connected with the Y.M.C.A. for thirty years, and he was glad to see the sister association now following in its wake. He commended the institution to generous support, as from its nature it could not be self-supporting, any more than other missionary work at home or abroad. The benefits it conferred were not to be estimated, as beyond positive good, the evil which was prevented was incalculable.

The following speakers were Mr. Stevenson, M.P., and Rev. E. W. Moore. The latter specially commented on the undenominational character of the work. He thought every City clergyman should have a branch in his parish, especially as now the work was beyond the experimental stage, and every assistance was gladly given at the Central Institute.

Miss RAYMOND, of Walworth, who, along with her duties at the Deaconess House, has undertaken the matronship of the Institute there, was the next speaker. It was very evident that she not only had deep sympathy with the hard-worked shop-girls of Walworth, but that she could impart it to others. She said she had become aware that there were many places of amusement that girls might go to, but that no place that was open to them for recreation was safe unless it was provided by such an institution as theirs. Some girls worked as late as ten o'clock, and even at that hour they came to the Institute for a little change and rest. She told the history of their Institute, and how the girls themselves had spent five pounds to furnish their garden with flowers, and how two young ladies in the West-end had provided them with a beautiful piano.

There yet followed Rev. J. J. Bennett, Canon Spence, and the Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, all of whom contributed matter of deep interest to the meeting, which we wish we had space to record. We would only say that if further information is desired regarding this valuable Society we would recommend the perusal of the annual report (which is of an extremely interesting nature), which may be had from Miss A. Ely, 17, Old Cavendish-street, W.

The New Crusade.

THE London Branch of the Ladies' National Association for the Abolition of State-Regulated Vice recently held its fourth annual meeting at 17, Old Cavendish-street, W. Mrs. Steward, of Ongar, presided. Miss Bewicke, Hon. Secretary, presented the report, which showed a large amount of voluntary work in all parts of the metropolis, each parliamentary district having its local Hon. Secretary, with a band of active helpers. Miss Whitehead urged the need of continued effort till victory was complete. Mrs. Hind-Smith urged that each lady present should engage in spreading a knowledge of the conflict among her own friends. Resolutions were passed praying the Government to immediately repeal these laws, and reminding them that while passing measures such as the Criminal Law Amendment Bill, for the better protection of girls, they should at the same time abolish laws which ensured and legalised the destruction of young girls. The meeting was also addressed by the Right Hon. James Stansfeld and Miss Isabella Tod.

A memorial has been presented to Mr. Gladstone expressing a widespread desire for the immediate and total repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts. It is signed by a number of leading Liberals and by representative men of various classes, by clergy of all sections, including five bishops, and fourteen present or late headmasters of public schools, by the official heads of all the principal Nonconformist bodies in the United Kingdom, by medical men, and by naval and military officers and chaplains resident in the district where the Acts apply.

The following is Mr. Gladstone's reply:—"10, Downing-street, Whitehall, June 20: Dear Mrs. Butler,—I am directed by the Prime Minister to acknowledge the receipt of the Memorial forwarded to him by you, praying for the total repeal of the Contagious Diseases Acts. We need hardly assure you that the Government are sensible of its weight; and that, having advisedly adopted a resolution on the subject, they intend to act to the best of their ability in the spirit of it. Yours faithfully, HERBERT J. GLADSTONE."

DUNKERQUE.—The Mission schooner belonging to the Portsmouth and Gosport Seamen's Mission has been here for the last month, and has attracted many hundreds on board to hear the Gospel, preached by a member of Mr. McAll's Mission, while many remained on the quay who could not get on board. Several meetings have also been held for children, who have paid the greatest attention. Most cheering results we believe will follow. The ships of other nationalities have been visited with copies of the Word of God. Hundreds of New Testaments and Gospel papers have been distributed among the French. The Mission schooner so far has been a great success. Its motto is "Have faith in God," and to Him we look for help to carry on this work among the French and other seamen who frequent the various ports of France. H. COOK.

A FEW HINTS ABOUT COFFEE PALACES.

LEARNT BY EXPERIENCE.

START on a small scale and in connection with Mission work. Enlist the sympathies of the working men, but do not give anything—not even free teas. Never sell any article without profit. Do not try to make your place popular by imitating public-houses or music-halls. Avoid such games as bagatelle, dominoes, &c. Respectable working men do not care for them; lads acquire a taste for gambling; the place gets unpopular with parents, and moderate drinkers criticise. Have daily papers, and two or three good weeklies; illustrated papers are very popular. While boldly avowing your religion by texts and Bibles about, do not obtrude it by large texts outside or by keeping customers waiting while you are preaching to others in the bar.

Do not put up offensive notices—"No credit given," "Pay before you are served," &c. Have things in stock which are often wanted.

When you see your way to open a large Coffee Palace, select a site in a busy thoroughfare, if in a town; or by the high road, if in a village. Have a corner plot, if possible, with plenty of room for vehicles to draw up. Have large bar and large well-lighted kitchen, and kitchen offices quite close to it.

You must not depend on local support so much as upon total abstainers and others travelling or working in the neighbourhood away from their homes. Blue Ribbon Missions in your town do not help you so much as those held in more distant places.

Secure, if possible, a successful tradesman and his wife as managers. Many Christians, with good business capacities, would leave a more secular trade to serve the Lord in this homely manner. One great cause of failure has been that good, but inexperienced persons, who have never prospered in their former occupations, are supposed to do very well as managers of coffee houses. Avoid people who are too grand to do the work themselves. A showy woman who spends her time in her parlour, or one who is taken up with the cares of a family, and who leaves all the waiting, &c. to untidy or inexperienced young girls, are quite unsuitable as managers. For helpers prefer staid, respectable women (superior charwomen) to young girls or lads. Pay these women well, as they do more work and break less than the young, cheap servants.

While you encourage working men's clubs of all kinds, always insist upon a small payment per head; one farthing each per night will cover expenses. Do not expect these people to take much "for the good of the house;" they have their homes close by, and do not feel it right to spend money constantly on luxuries.

On Saturday nights have a free Gospel Temperance Meeting, with plenty of gas and fire in winter. Let it be entirely among working men, who should in turns take the chair, open with prayer and short Bible-reading, and then others will recite, deliver addresses, sing, &c. Occasionally a gentleman's presence is appreciated.

Have all your provisions of best quality, but see that there is no waste. A frugal, sensible woman will not throw away a crust of bread or a morsel of vegetables; these things can be made into puddings and soup. In many coffee places there is as much wasted as used, and hence failure.

If possible let your manager be a pleasant, shrewd man, with a genial way of turning the conversation into profitable subjects, without neglecting his work. Let everything about the building be kept perfectly clean and sweet. Many places which were very smart and bright at first have become shabby and smudgy after a few months.

Listen to any sensible advice or complaint, but uphold your manager in all things publicly, and consult him about any changes. Neighbourhoods differ; do not think that because some articles are in great demand in another place, they must be made popular in yours. Managers get discouraged who are constantly urged to changes. Pray for wisdom and expect it to be given. F.

"THE CHRISTIAN AGE" of June 26 contains a capital portrait of Mr. George Brealey, author of the Blackdown Tracts, with an interesting sketch of his life and evangelistic work on the Blackdown Hills, by the Editor, who has lately married a lady from that locality.

MISSION TO SEAMEN.—In Stettin, a large harbour on the Oder, a German pastor is carrying on a Mission to sailors, fishermen, &c. Besides German ships, 484 English and French vessels put in last year; but there is a great need for suitable English tracts. The heart is easily touched in a foreign country when reminded of home by some words, either spoken or written in the native, tongue. Any tracts or periodicals sent regularly, perhaps after perusal, would be thankfully received by Herr. Wegeli, Westend, Stettin, Prussia.

CONFERENCE HALL, ECCLESTON-STREET, S.W.—Rev. Dr. Brookes, St. Louis, will give Gospel instructions on Peace with God, Communion with God, and Service for God in the World: Sunday, July 6, 3.45 p.m. and 7 p.m. Tuesday, July 8, 5 p.m. Thursday, July 10, 5 p.m. Prayer is earnestly desired that the Lord would bless this testimony to many in the West-end. There are meetings held in the hall every Tuesday at 11.30 a.m., and every Friday at 8 p.m., for strengthening and encouraging the children of God in the service which He has given them to do.

"LET US GO OVER TO THE OTHER SIDE."

By T. J. BARNARDO, F.R.C.S. Edin.

AS the time of my departure for Canada draws near, I am anxious to place clearly before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN the position and prospects of the work of emigration connected with the Homes under my care.

Although I had frequently sent special cases of boys and girls to our colonies, it was only on August 10, 1882, that my first organised party left England to be placed out, as other children had been placed out by various agencies, among the families of Christian people in the Dominion. Our second party of 100 boys sailed on June 14, 1883. The subsequent departures were 72 girls on July 12, 1883, and 61 boys on March 27 this year. On Thursday last 30 more boys left Liverpool, and I hope on July 10 that 130 little girls will sail.

This brings up the total number of boys and girls, who will have been sent to Canada alone since August, 1882, to 444, besides those sent to Australia and South Africa.

The work of organisation in Canada has proceeded slowly, but surely. Begun almost in fear and trembling, afraid of taking a single false step which might prejudice the future of the work there. Unable, hitherto, to go over myself, I had to trust to correspondence, and to be largely dependent upon the loving service of those who were co-operating with me. God richly gave his blessing to the undertaking, and to my co-workers. Every individual child sent out has, without exception, done well. Of course there have had to be changes of situations. Some children will not succeed in one place who will do better in another, and all this has to be attended to on the spot by those who have accepted the responsibility of their oversight.

Our first Home was in the City of Toronto itself. A suitable building was found, although the rent was somewhat high, and as the town is the business centre of the Province of Ontario, it was found exceedingly advantageous to have our offices there. Soon afterwards generous help was offered in another direction. A very fine house, capable of accommodating a hundred children, with six acres of land, situated at Peterborough, about sixty miles from Toronto, has been given by a Canadian gentleman and lady, whose interest in the work of Christ and in the welfare of poor children is very deep. But we shall still keep on our offices in the City of Toronto, enabling us thereby to come into contact with numbers of farmers and others who would, probably, never find us out if our only habitat were at Peterborough.

The children emigrated may be divided into three classes: first, very little boys and quite young girls, who are adopted into the families of persons who either have no children of their own or are willing to add to their family a little English boy or girl trained in our "Homes." Second, boys over thirteen and girls of twelve years of age and upwards. These are not as a rule chosen for adoption, but are hired out as servants, their wages varying from 30 to 200 dollars per annum, or even more, besides board, lodging, washing, and medical attendance.

The greatest possible care is taken as to the kind of people to whom our children go. The applicant for a child has to get a personal recommendation from a clergyman or magistrate. He has to supply the fullest information concerning himself, his family, his occupation, &c. If a farmer, he must state whether his farm is his own, or whether he hires it only; whether he is a member of a Christian church. He must also state what kind of work the child will have to perform; on what terms the child will come into his family; the length of engagement desired; what church the little one will attend, and so on. If a child is to be adopted, an agreement is entered into that his adopting parents shall, if a boy, lodge a certain sum in the bank for his benefit when he is twenty-one years of age; or if a girl, that she shall be provided with an outfit and all that is needful in the event of her marriage. After children are placed out they are encouraged to write regularly to the head of our Canadian Home. The Visitor of the Home periodically visits the child at his or her employer's or adopted parent's house. Often the Visitor remains the guest of the family for a day or two days, and thus gets an opportunity of seeing closely the character of the family life, and the exact position in which our little one is placed. Thus by every possible means the future of the child is fenced round about and cared for. No precaution is omitted which will ensure its welfare. Our staff consists of, first, the resident managers of the Peterborough Home—a married couple, who have had for many years considerable experience as the heads of a middle class school, and have both been associated with Christian work and Christian people almost all their lives.

The Visitor among the boys is a young English gentleman who, brought up himself at a public school, has had the advantage of a liberal education. Besides this he had been previously for some time in Canada, and was a settler in Manitoba. A decided and earnest Christian, he brings to his work the freshness and vigour, as well as the earnest love for boys and zeal for Christ's service, characteristic of his age, training, and habits.

The Secretary of the Peterborough Home is a Canadian lady of missionary spirit, and of considerable literary power. A personal friend of the donors of the Peterborough Home, she will doubtless do much to enlist the sympathy and interest of Canadians in a work which touches their own interests so closely.

I have so far only spoken of two classes of young emigrants received into the Training Home at Peterborough, and the distributing branch in Toronto, but there is a third. Until recently we found we could only take out boys and girls whose ages did not, as a rule, exceed fifteen years. It was held on all hands to be very unadvisable to send to ordinary Canadian homes the bigger and rougher lads who had been trained in our Labour House. Indeed, the advice and practice of all those who had had the longest experience in Canada confirmed this view.

On the other hand, I had had important interviews with persons from the Far West, who urged me to send out to them the bigger, rougher fellows, unsuitable for Ontario. How to accomplish this I knew not. To send great lads over sixteen to Manitoba, without supervision, to leave them to work their own sweet will in situations which might be obtained for them among the farmers, however fair it looked, was felt to be disastrous in the extreme. It would not answer here in England. It was less likely to answer there. For some period after they have been placed out, these great fellows require the same wise oversight and kindly care which have already been such important factors in their rescue and training. Canadian farmers, like all others, possess a keen eye to their own interests, and would quickly send to the right-about those unlikely to suit them. On all hands I was urged to apply to Government for a grant of land, to take up a considerable allotment myself, to put over that land a good Scotch bailiff and his wife, and to send out a party of forty or fifty of my rough fellows to start the new colony. They could remain under the bailiff, say for a few months, at the end of which time they would have become acclimatised, and accustomed also to the peculiar life of Manitoba, and would be much more valuable to the farmers around. It was urged that if the work was attempted wisely and prudently the farmers would soon recognise its immense value, and that a constant stream of great strong fellows, the most difficult class to place out well, might pass through our colony to the farmers of the district. By this means, too, if mistakes were made, and lads sent out who proved after a time to be unfit for Manitoba, they would still be in our hands, and under our care, and could be shifted from the province when it was desirable; whereas, if they had been placed out from the first in situations, without any testing or oversight, a single error might go far to spoil the reputation and the future prospects of the work in the province.

After much prayerful thought and consideration, application was made to the Dominion Government for an allotment of at least 3000 acres. I am expecting daily to receive an official reply. There is but little doubt that the answer will be favourable.

It is under these auspices that I shall leave England, God willing, on July 17, journeying first to our Home in Peterborough, then stopping some days in Toronto, subsequently surveying (or rather "prospecting," as it is called) in Manitoba, and remaining there sufficiently long to develop and organise our scheme. What the future of such a plan may have in store for hundreds of rough London lads, as well as younger boys and girls, one cannot tell, but it is hopeful in the extreme.

In closing this somewhat lengthy statement I desire to draw the attention of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN to the following meetings. On Monday, July 7, 130 little girls (who are to sail on the 10th) will be present at the noon-day prayer-meeting at Aldersgate-street, and I earnestly invite the attendance of Christian friends at that meeting, to commend the party of young emigrants to our heavenly Father's care.

On Wednesday, the 9th, there will be an assembly of friends at Euston, to see these children and those who go in their charge off for Liverpool. Any reader desiring to be present should apply to me for a ticket of admission to the platform, at the address as below.

On Friday, July 11, a meeting is convened by the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House, over which he will preside, at three o'clock, to bring before the citizens of London the general features of our scheme of emigration. Among those who have kindly promised to be present and to speak are Mr. Samuel Smith, M.P., the Bishop of Bedford, Sir Charles Tupper, K.C.M.G., C.B., and the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, M.A. To this meeting I would especially invite City friends. It will begin at three o'clock, and last probably one hour and a half. I earnestly ask the prayerful sympathy and continued remembrances of all God's people for this new departure, that we may be guided and directed in every step, "constrained" and restrained by the good hand of our heavenly Father.

Answer to a Little Boy's Letter.

FROM THE SECRETARY OF THE CHILDREN'S MEDICAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Endell-street, St. Giles', W.C.

HOW kind of you, my little friend,
Two Mission pillows more to send;
And Fritz and Mary, Johnny too,
Mirrie and Jessie—all of you.
How glad the "pillow boys" must be,
Such comfortable gifts to see!
And Jesus Christ is happy too,
When work for these poor boys we do.

I wonder, would you like to take
A box for them, for Jesus' sake?
Twelve pennies saved and given, you know,
Will to a silver shilling grow,
And twenty shillings, I have found,
Grow surely to a golden pound.
And pounds will food and medicine buy,
And pay the doctors kind who try
The tired boys and girls to tell
Of Jesus, and to make them well.
So if, one day, the postman knocks,
And brings a card, "Please send a box,"
My friend or I will quickly pack
A box for you and send it back.

And then—Can any of you knit?
(Such work for girls and boys is fit);
For comforters, made warm and strong—
Made nice and broad, and very long,
Of many strips of colour bright,
Red, pink and yellow, blue and white,
Are just the very things, I find,
To please and charm the Indian mind.

Such things to "Mrs. Tonge"* might go,
(I'll give you her address below);
And she would send to Bhagalpore
In India, all your little store.
How glad the lady doctor there
Would be your work and love to share!
To her all little ones are dear,
They come to her without a fear.

And now this letter long must end.
I'm Annie Butler, Joey's friend,
Friend of the other children too—
I send my love to all of you.

The little boy's letter was as follows:—

DEAR MISS B.,—We have made two more pillows for your poor children; Fritz, Mary, Johnnie, Mirrie, and Jessie all helped. We should like to do something else for you this winter if you would tell us what you would like best. Fritz says he likes to work for the pillow boys.—Your little friend, JOEY T.

Letter to the Editor.

FEMALE EMIGRANTS TO CANADA.

DEAR SIR,—May I ask you to call the attention of your readers to a "Home" now open in Toronto for "respectable servants and women emigrants"? It is superintended by Madam Van den Bruggen, an English lady, who took out a party of girls last year from England, looked after them on the voyage, and obtained situations for them on arrival. Madam Van den Bruggen found the Government emigration sheds quite unsuitable for the reception of these young women; and the "Home" she has been enabled to open in Toronto will in some measure supply this need, if friends in England will support her, and also make this Home known to intending "emigrants."

The house at present used as a "Home" is No. 223, Queen-street West, Toronto. The charges for beds and meals are very moderate, and situations are found for the inmates, fees being asked only from the employers.

There is a daily prayer-meeting from 12.30 to 1.30, which is conducted by members of the Salvation Army. Many young women have been converted in the "Home," and it would be a great privilege for any girl to be under the influence of the lady superintendent, who is a most earnest, spiritually-minded Christian woman.—Yours faithfully,

EMMA FORSTER.

HOUSE OF REST, 8, Cambridge-gardens, Kilburn-park, N.W.—Friday, July 4, all-day meetings. 10.30 to 1, prayer for all Missions represented; 3.30, Bible-reading on "Sanctification;" 7 p.m., prayer for "Spiritual power." Refreshments between the meetings.

ALDBOROUGH FAIR, NORFOLK.—This large cattle and pleasure fair was held on June 23 and 24. Some years since nothing could have been more brutalising and degrading than the conduct of many of the drovers, booth-keepers, and visitors. But a marked improvement has taken place of late, owing to the efforts of the Dowager Lady Buxton, of Cromer, and other friends. A large tent was erected in the midst of the fair, in which evangelistic services were held all day. There was also a book-stall, under the charge of Mrs. Richard Gurney, who brought a large supply of Bibles, "Sacred Songs and Solos," and the "Life of Chinese Gordon," for sale, which were eagerly purchased. The change which has taken place for good in the general behaviour and talk of the people who meet now on these occasions is most encouraging, and affords a proof that great blessing is resting on this effort.

CLOUDESLEY INSTITUTE FOR YOUNG WOMEN.—By the kind invitation of the Earl and Countess of Aberdeen, about 130 members of the above Institute spent a delightful afternoon at Dolles-hill on Saturday, June 21. A few words of welcome and sympathy were addressed to them by his lordship, some hymns were heartily sung, and all were extremely gratified by the considerate kindness of Lady Aberdeen, who took a real and personal interest in the whole proceedings. It may be well here to note that Cloudesley Institute combines with its other arrangements a comfortable boarding-house, where respectable business young women are received on moderate terms.

THE ANCHORAGE MISSION.

THE ANCHORAGE HOUSE, Regent's Park, N.W. THE MISSION HALL, Queen Anne's Gate, Westminster.

Committee—GEORGE HANBURY, Esq.; Rev. H. E. FOX; Colonel STUART WORTLEY.

A SALE OF VARIOUS ARTICLES OF GREAT INTEREST,

In the MISSION HALL, July 2, 3, and 4, 11 a.m. to 9 p.m.

The number of Young Women sheltered in the Anchorage House of Shelter, many of whom are about to become mothers, causes the work to be costly, and funds are much needed. Messrs. MORGAN & SCOTT will receive subscriptions.

N.B.—If any Articles remain unsold, Mrs. H. STUART WORTLEY, Rosslyn House, Grove End Road, N.W., would be glad to hear of opportunities of disposing of them, either to or through friends.

JUBILEE OF THE SOCIETY FOR PROMOTING FEMALE EDUCATION IN THE EAST.

President—
THE DOWAGER MARCHIONESS OF CHOLMONDELEY.
Treasurer—
SIR W. R. FARQUHAR, BART., 16, St. James's-street, S.W.

Half a century has now elapsed since a few ladies, moved by pity for their unhappy sisters in Eastern lands, met to form themselves into a Committee and to consider how best to "proclaim liberty" to the captives in Zenanas and in Harems. While waiting, as they had to do, for the gradual opening of these prison-doors, they took up the work that was ready for them, and gathered the little ones into Schools and Orphanages. To India and China, the countries which were selected as those in which to begin their efforts, the Committee have been permitted to add Japan, Ceylon, Mauritius, South and West Africa, Egypt, the Levant, and, lastly, Persia; but there remains yet much land to be possessed, and in this, their Jubilee year, the Committee are anxious for special help to enable them to lengthen their cords and strengthen their stakes.

The following sums are needed at once, for the cases are pressing and the emergency is great:—£2,000 for their work in Japan, in response to an urgent appeal from the Church Missionary Conference, for its extension and permanent establishment; £2,000 for the same purpose at two of their Stations in China; £1,000 to enable them to enter into a very important Station in North India where nothing has yet been done for Female Education; £400 to complete their Bethlehem Building Fund; and at least £1,000 for the general funds, that the work in many other existing Stations may be extended and strengthened. Surely there are many of the Lord's stewards who could meet one, if not more, of these pressing calls.

Hon. Secretaries { Miss ELLEN RUTT, Lower Clapton, E.
Miss HALDANE, 118, Westbourne-terrace, W.
Miss STIRLING, 77, Cadogan-place, S.W.

LONDON CITY MISSION.

By JOHN MATTHIAS WEYLLAND,
Author of "The Man with the Book," "Round the Tower," &c.

INTRODUCTION
BY THE
Right Hon. the EARL OF SHAFTESBURY, K.G.

S. W. PARTRIDGE & Co.

A Jubilee Fund has been commenced for the purpose of sustaining and extending the operations of the Society. It is the wish of the Committee to raise their staff of missionaries from 460 to 500. The first effort will be to increase their staff of visitors to Public Houses, so that all the people found in these 10,400 houses may be brought under the influence of the Gospel. In this great object we ask help of every reader. Further information will be given, and contributions received, by the Jubilee Fund Secretary, J. M. WEYLLAND, London City Mission House, Bridewell-place, Ludgate-circus, E.C.

CONSUMPTION

CHRONIC BRONCHITIS,

AND ALL

OTHER CHEST DISEASES.

Containing ONE HUNDRED and THIRTY-THREE SELECTED CASES. May be had from ELLIOT STOCK, 62, PATERNOSTER-ROW, E.C., or from Mr. Congreve (the Author), COOMBE LODGE, PECKHAM, S.E.

TENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of MISS M. G. R.

In a recent letter this lady, referring to her restoration to health, and correspondence with me, says: "Make use of my case, and any part of my letters and testimony that you please. For certain reasons kindly not publish my name more than M. G. R., Mrs. Loveland, Camelia Cottage, Elmfield, Ryde."

The medicine was obtained for this patient through a friend, at reduced price, through my old friend, Rev. T. W. MEDHURST (whose name appears in connection with several cases in my book), at which time I received a statement of her case.

A severe attack of inflammation of the left lung had been followed by consumption. She says: "I had become a walking skeleton. My symptoms were cough, extreme weakness, palpitations, short breathing, pains all over the chest, no appetite, and life seemed a burden.

"I felt an improvement (she continues) after five doses only, but after taking two large bottles I was 'a walking advertisement.' People used to stop me in the street to know what I had taken.

"I feel I cannot thank you sufficiently for your kindness. I think I may say I have recommended your treatment to at least fifty people; in train or tramcar, or whenever I see any consumptive person. Mr. H. Cook, of the Soldiers' Institute, was one, and since he has used it he has also recommended it far and near."

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

ODO-MAGNETISM.

THE varied applications of Magneto-Electricity are too well known in the present day to need explanation. A schoolboy can demonstrate the existence of Magnetic force, or produce Electric light by powerful batteries; but it needs very little penetration to understand the difference between these crude experiments and the amount of study which led to the perfected and steady illuminating power of the incandescent lamp. The same illustration will apply to its therapeutic properties, for although the Odo-Magnetic remedy is one of almost universal applicability, in fact more so than any other form of Electricity, its best successes are only achieved by careful and studied adaptation to the particular complaints it is intended to remove. With this aim constantly in view, we can now claim for the remedy a success unparalleled in the art of healing. If John Wesley could say with regard to one of his cures by Electricity, "Can all England afford such a case as this cure wrought by a course of medicine?" what shall we say after such statements as are found amongst a list of 950 of our patients to whom reference is permitted?

The experience abundantly demonstrates how marked and speedy, as well as permanent, are the benefits obtained among that class of sufferers whose ailments had been pronounced incurable. Can anything more be required to remove all doubts from the minds of inquirers as to the best standard by which to calculate probabilities of successful treatment, and by which to secure all practicable and personal advantages from the means employed?

From Mr. A. HOLWELL, 10, Redcar-road, Guisboro'.

December 5, 1883.

"I am able to report a grand improvement from the use of your appliances in three months. All my nervousness is gone, all indigestion removed, and I can eat meat or pastry without any after-suffering.

"I can rest much better at night now than I have done for years, and if the benefit continues through the winter, I shall be something like 'perfectly whole.'

"I had a heavy, sleepy feeling in the head all the summer, but it has quite disappeared lately.

"I find, to my great comfort, that I can bear the cold better this winter than before—circulation is kept up, and I do not feel the cold; from top to toe I feel just as if there were life and vigour running through me. These appliances would be very valuable to those who suffer at the chest in any way; the comfort to be derived is only to be understood by using them.

"I feel thankful to God for giving His blessing to the means made use of in my behalf, and wish you God's blessing on your further endeavours."

From Capt. H. C. KENNEDY, Enmore-villa, Cricketfield-road, Lower Clapton, London, E. May 2, 1884.

"I have much pleasure in testifying to the benefit I have derived from your treatment. For two years, previous to my adoption of it, I had suffered severely from indisposition; night after night intense pains in my chest and stomach, preventing me from sleeping, and compelling me to rise from bed and walk the room for hours. I have now been under your treatment nine months, and I am happy to state that I enjoy refreshing sleep, and am free from aches or pains of any kind. I may add that I am now in the 62nd year of my age."

On receipt of particulars of any case in which advice is sought, the fullest information will be forwarded and the required treatment suggested gratuitously, by Mr. B. COPSON GARRATT, Medical Electrician, 16, Finsbury-square, London, E.C.

The Christian.

THE PAN-PRESBYTERIAN COUNCIL AT BELFAST.

PRESBYTERIANISM is possessed of a vitality and power which causes it to flourish on almost any soil. Its advance in our own country within the last twenty years has been most marked, the London Presbytery alone now numbering 86 congregations. In the provinces and in other lands it is also deeply rooting itself, and constantly gaining fresh adherents. Evidence of this is afforded by the remarkable character of the conference just held in Belfast, known as the Pan-Presbyterian Council or Alliance, comprising representatives of many nations. This is the third general meeting of the kind, the first having been held in Edinburgh in 1877, and the second in New York in 1880.

The present session has been held in the spacious edifice known as St. Enoch's Church, of which the Rev. Hugh Hanna is minister. 300 delegates have been in attendance, representing some 20,000 congregations. England, Ireland, Wales, France, Switzerland, Italy, Germany, Netherlands, Belgium, Bohemia, Scotland, America, Ceylon, and Australia, have all sent representatives; while among the speakers were missionaries from India, Japan, South Africa, China, Roumania, and the Hebrides.

The unity exhibited in this grand movement is one of its most remarkable and valuable features. The Established Church of Scotland, together with the Free Church, the United and Reformed Presbyterian Churches, have all met in harmonious concert, thus affording a spectacle worthy of closest attention and general imitation by all other sections of the Christian Church. The Council has no legislative or judicial authority; its objects are to promote brotherhood and co-operation, and thereby strengthen and encourage the weaker and more struggling portions of the community; to promote mutual acquaintance with each others' principles and methods; and to consult as to the best means of promoting and distributing the missionary activities of the several branches included in the Alliance.

Among the most important questions which have occupied the Council at its late session has been the desirableness of framing a consensus of doctrinal belief to be adopted and published as a Presbyterian standard of faith. A long and animated discussion was entered into on the subject, various opinions being advanced, but in the end it was decided not to take this step, the extreme difficulty of formulating a creed to which all would be able to subscribe, making it undesirable and hazardous. Valuable papers on stirring topics of deep interest were read by eminent and well-known men, and practical subjects bearing on the work of the Churches were dealt with. The fact that so large an assembly, and one representative of so many different shades of opinion, has met, and in thorough harmony discussed matters delicate and requiring to be approached with mutual forbearance and tact, is a blessed testimony to the real oneness of believers in Christ, and to the power of the Holy Spirit in the midst of those who depend upon his aid.

The number of distinguished men taking part in the proceedings is so great that we can only give a selection of the best-known. These include Drs. Watts, Cairns, Calderwood, Marshall Lang, Charteris, Matheson, Monro Gibson, Blaikie, Monod, M'Cosh, Gautier, and others, on this side of the Atlantic; with Drs. Schaff, Hall, Hodge, Briggs, King, M'Vicar, and others, from transatlantic shores.

The Council cannot but result in far-reaching and wide-spread blessing to the cause of God in the earth. The next meeting is to be held in London in 1888.

THE WITNESS OF THE SPIRIT.

By the Author of "The Gospel and its Ministry."

"The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God."

THE statement is but little understood, and often much perverted. Some read it as though it implied nothing more than the Spirit's testimony in and through the Scriptures. Others pervert it to undermine the truth that the written Word is the only ground of faith as to our salvation. The Spirit does testify that the believer is saved, but that testimony is given only in the Word. From that Word there is no appeal.

But the text means something more than this. It is a testimony, not to salvation, but to sonship; and it is a joint witness that is spoken of, and that by the Spirit Himself. The word is not martureo, but summartureo—"to bear witness with, or in accordance with, another." It is a testimony in agreement with, or in confirmation of, some other; and it is a direct personal testimony—it is by the Spirit Himself. Anything more inconsistent with the verse cannot be conceived than the popular idea that it is a feeling within the breast, given us to confirm the promise and deepen our assurance of its truth. It is not that our own spirit bears witness with the Spirit of God, but that the Spirit Himself bears joint testimony to our spirit that we are God's children.

Who, then, is the other witness? Our translators are responsible for the idea which prevails that it is our own spirit. But this is impossible, for it is our own spirit which needs the assurance of our sonship. Who, then, can it be? The very words "the Spirit Himself" imply that it must be the Spirit still, but in some less direct way. Who but the Spirit, indeed, can bear testimony on such a matter? He first testifies through the written Word; and then, to the soul that receives that Word and accepts the place of a child, He adds a direct personal assurance of the relationship.

This has nothing in common with the theory of "feelings." Feelings are worth nothing unless they rest on facts, and they can never in any sense or any degree confirm the truth of that which creates them. The emotions which belong to the position of a child may exist, though the relationship be wanting; and the relationship may exist without any corresponding consciousness. A foundling brought up in ignorance of its origin may have all the feelings of a child toward those who adopted it; and, on the other hand, a child may be utterly estranged from the parents who gave it life.

We are not only born of God, but we "have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father." As many as are born of the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God. This is true, but it is not the truth here taught us. The words are, "As many as are LED by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." And only such have the joint-witness spoken of in the words which follow. This special witness of the Spirit is not something to be prayed into or preached into in a happy meeting. It is not a distinct blessing, to be struggled after apart from the life with which it is connected. It is enjoyed by every believer who is led by the Spirit of God, and only such can know it. Men talk of this witness as though it were granted to satisfy the unbelief of hearts that doubt the written Word of God, and are casting about for some other ground of confidence.

Let those who would know its blessedness rest their souls on the bare promises of God, unconfirmed by emotions, or feelings, or consciousness, and then enter the path of faithful, trustful discipleship. It is not intended to satisfy the doubter, but to confirm and comfort the believer. It is like the word of the blessed Lord: "If a man love Me, he will keep my words; and my Father will love him, and WE will come unto him, and make our abode with him." God is greater than his Word, and God Himself will dwell with such.

The Working Lads' Institute.

THIS Institute was founded as a means of keeping working lads from spending their evenings in the public-houses and low theatres which abound in the East-end, by providing a reading-room, library, evening classes, &c., combined with innocent recreation and religious teaching. More than 1100 lads have been thus benefited, many of whom are now engaged in religious and temperance work. In 1879 a larger building was needed, but for three years no suitable site could be found, but at last a large plot of freehold land was secured, and designs forthwith prepared. At this juncture a notice was served by the District Railway Company to take this land for the extension of their line.

We have now secured a second site, the purchase-money being already paid. The total cost will be £10,500, of which £5000 has been received. The memorial-stones of the first section, comprising reading, refreshment, and class-rooms, dormitories, gymnasium, &c., will be laid on October 15 by the Lord Mayor. The new Institute will accommodate about a thousand lads, and we shall try to promote, by every means, their physical, mental, moral, and spiritual welfare. Those who know the temptations of boys in our great city will gladly help in such an effort. Perhaps none more need sympathy than the lads who are constantly arriving from towns and villages in the country; and we therefore confidently ask friends in the provinces to do what they can in aid of this great work. Contributions may be sent to me or to the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.

GOD KNOWETH.

"O Lord God, Thou knowest."—Ezek. xxxvii. 3.
"What shall be the manner of the child? and what shall be his work?"—Judges xiii. 12 (marginal reading).

DEAR little feet! In after years
To tread Life's path 'mid smiles or tears;
With gleeful laugh or anxious fears?
Who knoweth?

O little hands, stretched out in play!
What shall they grasp each passing day,
Things that will last, or fade away?
Who knoweth?

Sweet baby eyes, with questions bright!
What will they learn to read aright,
Here, where earth's shadows dim the light?
Who knoweth?

Where leads thy path from this fair morn?
Through desert land with stone and thorn,
Or 'mid the flowers and golden corn?
Who knoweth?

We cannot tell; our love for thee
Yearns to look on—it may not be!
Sweet comfort, though we cannot see,
God knoweth.

Only keep close to Christ's dear side,
Through flowery glade or surging tide,
And safely homeward He will guide.
God knoweth.

"EARL CAIRNS ON THRIFT."

Such were the words which caught the eye of one of our readers a few days ago.

That reader was once a timid, quiet, gentle, little boy, altogether unlike his schoolfellows, whose games and playful tricks were of too rough a kind for his gentle disposition. His "pocket-money" was not spent on what Earl Cairns calls "useless things, often doing more harm than good;" but was put into his money-box, and annually taken charge of by his most excellent father, who duly credited his boy with interest on the amounts.

When that boy attained the age of twenty-one years, he had saved the sum of one hundred pounds! And what did he do with it?

He thought it was very unusual for boys to save so much in their early days; so he thought he had better take an unusual course with respect to it; and he resolved that the amount should be considered as permanently invested at five per cent. interest; and he would give this interest during his lifetime to God.

Many years have passed since then, and here and there may be seen upon his locks the evidences of declining age; and if you inquire whether his resolution has been faithfully kept, the answer is, "It has;" but with considerable increase.

The little yearly sum of five pounds as interest is annually received into a larger stream; and not only scores, but hundreds, of pounds find their way into it; and the stream flows on.

Young reader, follow, and induce others to follow, the example of this boy; whose name we should have been glad to place here on record, but we are not permitted to do so. If the money spent by children on "useless things, often doing them more harm than good," were given by those children to God, what an immense amount of good would result, and what blessings would flow to them through life!

A CHILD'S PRAYER.

Let me not wrong thee, Lord, to-day
By word, or look, or tone;
Drive every foolish thought away,
And make me all thine own.

Let not one angry temper rise
To drive Thee from my side;
Keep Thou my hands, and lips, and eyes;
Dear Lord, with me abide.

I'm often tempted, Lord, I own,
By many an evil snare,
Oh, do not leave me all alone,
But whisper in my ear.

Whisper sweet counsel, then I know
I shall be firm and true;
I will not fear the greatest foe,
For what could Satan do?

I wish I might be like Thee, Lord,
When Thou wert young as I,
So pure in every thought and word;
Lord, help me when I try. C.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.

By Dr. OSWALD DYKES.

Luke x. 25—37.

I dare say most of you, even the younger children who come to church, know that the Ten Commandments of God were gathered up by our Lord Jesus into two, and these two Commandments are, "Love God, your Father in heaven; love everybody on the earth." Very short and very simple. What this little story of our Lord was intended to explain to us was the second of these commandments; it does not say anything about the first, though the first was the more important; but it was about the second of these that this learned man, this Jewish lawyer, raised a question, and it was, "Who am I to consider my neighbour?"

It was after the fashion of our Lord to answer these questions by telling parables, or stories, and that is why our Lord Jesus is the best Teacher for children, because children are more easily taught in this way. Jesus did not make his lessons as dry as possible; but, on the contrary, made them pleasant and interesting, and this should be a lesson to teachers.

This tale might indeed have been true, but this, of course, I do not know. Everybody who goes to Jericho knows the road spoken of in this parable. There was a great deal of traffic and coming and going between these two towns, because there was no other road. There is no village on the road, nor houses now, and probably there never were. But there is the ruin of an inn, which seems to have been built about the middle of the road for the accommodation of passengers. Well, this road goes down an uncommonly rugged and trying descent into what we should call in this country a glen; and this has always been a place where brigands and thieves of all sorts could find pillage and safety, because there were few or no houses about where people could see what they were doing. Thus it was a most likely place for the scene of such a story as this.

You see the reason why these clergymen passed the poor man; they were afraid of their own limbs and property. When they saw the man lying there, they knew that the brigands who had attacked him could not be far off, and so they got off as fast as possible. Now, the lesson which our Lord wishes us to draw from this little story is, I think, this: that we ought to hear a call from God to act a kindly and brotherly part towards that person, no matter who he is. You would hardly believe it, boys and girls, brought up as you are under Christian teachers, that at that time people did not do anything particular to those who were not of their own religion or race, or in some way connected with them. They used to think that if they showed kindness to those of their own clan or class, then they had done all that could be expected of them.

That was what the Jew and Samaritan thought of each other. They disliked one another very much. They had that peculiar dislike which occurs sometimes between nations in these days; and the wonderful thing about this story was that the Samaritan should show such kindness and such generosity to this poor Jew, when his own countrymen showed such little kindness towards him.

The lesson is that we are all to go and do likewise, and that we are not to say of any one, "He is not of us;" but if he is in trouble, if he is in want, if he is in sickness or in sorrow, he has a claim upon us. Men are all brothers—that is what Jesus tells us. All have the same Father, all have the same Saviour in Jesus. Now this was the lesson of the parable, and it was intended for us all to learn.

It would be a good thing if the boys and girls were to learn this little story off by heart—that they should learn that Jesus, who is our Good Samaritan, who came from heaven to find us, and save us, and bring us back to God, and make us fit for heaven, wants us to be the friend, and neighbour, and helper of every man, woman, or child who needs our help.—Contemporary Pulpit.

Missionary Work in France and Belgium.

A MEETING on this subject was held on Wednesday afternoon of the Mildmay Conference week, at the house of Dr. Burns Thomson, Newington Green-road. Rev. H. Noel and Rev. T. Baron Hart successively presided. Several workers in France were also present. Mr. Hart opened the meeting by prayer, in which his warm interest in the Lord's work in those countries and throughout the world was earnestly expressed.

Mr. C. E. Faithfull, recently arrived from Marseilles, called attention to the great and general need of evangelisation in France. He spoke briefly of his work at Marseilles, now well known to our readers, and stated that, owing to some recent alteration of arrangement, he has every reason to anticipate, with God's blessing, increased success.

Pastor Brochet, from Belgium, referred to the great work going forward in that country. It has greatly increased during the last ten years, resulting in a large number of converts from Romanism, and the formation of many new churches, with a satisfactory progress in Christian experience and knowledge, so that many are now capable of conducting meetings. There is also a spirit of prayer amongst the converts. At Brussels there are now Gospel meetings that are much appreciated.

Miss Grimston, from Paris, expressed her great desire for a large increase of workers for France, and also the pleasure she had had in visiting Mr. Faithfull's Rests at Marseilles. If any of our readers would like to have fellowship with Mr. Faithfull in carrying on this work they may address him, care of Dr. Clapton, 105, Cheapside, London.

INCREASE OF TEMPERANCE.—One of the greatest proofs that Temperance is greatly increasing is the thousands of glasses of fresh milk that are being sold weekly to the visitors at the International Health Exhibition by Messrs Welfords and Sons, at their model farmyard and dairy, where the cows are milked and the butter is churned on the spot. The Model Warwick Farm Dairy is far more crowded with customers than the spirit-drinking bars.—Church of England Temperance Chronicle.

LIVINGSTONE INLAND MISSION.

IMPORTANT STATEMENT.

ON Thursday last a large number of Christian friends from various parts of the country accepted the cordial invitation of Mr. and Mrs. H. Grattan Guinness to spend the afternoon and evening at Harley House, Bow, on the occasion of the departure of several missionary brethren from the institution under their care for Algiers, Oran, Morocco, Arizona, California, Virginia, Wisconsin, Iowa, and other parts of the world.

Mr. GUINNESS said that several of the brethren were leaving to enter upon important fields of labour. One brother would shortly be going to Morocco, to work in connection with a new Mission which some of them had the privilege of establishing this year. Mr. Glenny had been to Tangiers, and had seen the house which had been purchased for the use of this Mission, and General Hay, who was there at present, was assisting in establishing the Mission. In reference to the history of the year at Harley House, he said that since October last they had received into the Institution 58 new students. There were at present in connection with it about 106. The number sent out thus far since October was thirty, but they hoped to send many more before the close of the financial year. As they were now in the twelfth year of the Institution, they could but cast a grateful glance at the past, and own the way in which they had been sustained in this missionary work. He then read an important paper prepared by Mrs. Guinness, on the transfer of the Livingstone Congo Inland Mission to American management. We append as much of the statement as our space will allow:—

"Many of our friends will be surprised to learn that the Congo Mission is about to be transferred to new management; we wish to explain the reasons for the step, and what are likely to be its results. This Mission, founded in 1877, is one of the seven important central African Missions established since the death of Livingstone. Its plan was to evangelise by means of industrial Mission stations the tribes and nations occupying the vast basin of the Congo River, and constituting at that time an almost unknown world equalling in area the whole United States this side of the Rocky Mountains. The Mission was in connection with no large society. Its original council was a very small one, and though some of its members were most liberal the demands of the Mission soon surpassed its resources. We were then led to assume the sole financial responsibility, and undertook the management of the Mission in connection with our own Institute. For the last four or five years the Lord has through the liberality of his people enabled us to meet the large demands which the support and the development of the enterprise have involved, though the physical, financial, social, and moral obstacles at first were very great. The climate of the country proved trying and fatal to Europeans, and the difficulties, dangers, and expenses of travelling and transport were immense.

"Fifty brethren and sisters in all have been sent out on the staff, and yet it consists to-day of only six and twenty. This may give some idea of the large amount of apparently fruitless outlay necessitated by work in such an unhealthy country. In spite, however, of a legion of difficulties, the Livingstone Inland Mission has nobly made its way, carried out its original programme, and planted Mission stations at intervals through three or four hundred miles of country right into the interior. The terrible preliminary difficulties have been overcome, the heavy initiatory expenses met, the first fruits of the harvest reaped, much precious and costly experience gained, and the Mission occupies to-day a position which we hardly dared to hope, when we commenced, it could attain so soon. The important Belgian expedition is thoroughly friendly to it; the King of the Belgians himself is warmly interested in it, and Mr. Stanley most kindly doing all he can to help it forward.

"Why then transfer it to other hands? Why pass over to others the result of so much toil and care and outlay of life and money? The wonderful providence of God which concealed this region during the days of the slave trade, which is now directing to it the attention of the civilised world, indicates clearly enough that the time to favour Central Africa has come at last, and that ours are the days in which Ethiopia shall stretch forth her hands to God. What else is the meaning of the fact that the opening up of the Congo followed so closely on the liberation of the negroes in America? The yoke of bondage was broken from off the necks of millions of Africa's Christian sons and daughters in one continent, putting education and elevation within their reach. Then a pathway from the west was opened into the heart of another continent, the benighted home of these very people, as if to invite them to evangelise the land of their forefathers. A very large number of the coloured churches of the Southern States belong to the Union to which we are transferring the Congo Mission, and it is the earnest hope and expectation of the American Board that the missionary zeal and ability of these churches will be largely increased by the call which will now be made on their sympathy and self-consecration.

"That the approaching transfer of the Livingstone Inland Mission to the American Baptist Missionary Union will be for the good of the Mission we are thoroughly persuaded. It has so grown and developed that it can no longer be managed as a subsidiary branch of our east London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions. We had for some time been prayerfully considering the best course to take, when a year ago we received an intimation that the American Baptist Missionary Union was looking out for a good opening in central Africa, feeling it was their special duty, as having a large constituency of coloured churches, to do something for the evangelisation of the negro's neglected fatherland. We communicated with the secretary and have had correspondence since. After twelve months of negotiation this society has just informed us of their glad and unanimous resolution to adopt and vigorously prosecute the Livingstone Inland Mission. Dr. Murdock of Boston, secretary of this board, and Dr. Crane, a member of the Executive Committee of the Board, came over to examine into the nature and working of the Mission last Christmas; after a week's pleasant intercourse, they returned to Boston, and placed their report, first before the Executive Committee, then the Board, at their great annual meeting. A few weeks since we received from Dr. Murdock the brief cablegram, 'Board approves,' followed by a letter stating that with hearty unanimity and satisfaction the managers at their annual meeting reached this important conclusion. We are now waiting to receive from the Executive Committee information as to the practical details of the annual transfer.

"I should add that all our council as well as all our missionary brethren on the Congo approve the course we have taken, and feel that it will be for the good of the Mission. The American Board takes over the staff as it stands, together with all the stations, steamers, and property of the Mission, which, though it will not in future be as in the past undenominational, will still be conducted in that spirit of large-hearted charity which recognises that the essential points on which Christians are agreed are much more important than the non-essential points on which they differ. As it happens, many if not most of the members of the staff of the Livingstone Inland Mission hold Baptist views, and the only other Mission in the country is that of the English Baptist Missionary Society. We were partly guided in this matter by the conviction that it would not be wise to introduce a second denomination into the field. If it be objected that it is a pity to hand over to Americans that which has cost so much English life and treasure, we reply, what does it matter by whom work is done, if only it be done, and done well? Neither we nor the council of the Livingstone Inland Mission, nor the friends who have so liberally sustained it for the last seven years, had any personal, denominational, or national object in view. Our sole end and aim was to do good to men, and obey Christ, by proclaiming his Gospel among the fifty millions of the Congo country. If we have secured this, is not our object attained? And if Christ and his great salvation will be proclaimed further and more widely by this Mission, under American management, than it could have been under our own, surely we have cause for nothing but joy and thanksgiving. We shall continue to correspond with the missionaries on the Congo, to keep open house for them on their return on furlough, or on sick leave, and we shall hope in every way to facilitate their new work by rendering to our American friends all the aid in our power. We shall still gladly act as an auxiliary association, by forwarding to Boston the contributions of those who wish to continue to help the Mission, or by supplying volunteers for the work when needed, and we trust that the friends of the Livingstone Inland Mission will still love it and pray for its future growth and prosperity."

Rev. Dr. BROOKES, St. Louis, in addressing a few words to the young brethren to whom they were to-day saying farewell on the eve of their going out as witnesses for Christ, dwelt upon 1 John ii. 14: "I have written unto you, young men, because ye are strong, and the Word of God abideth in you, and ye have overcome the wicked one." He said it did not to him seem possible that a young man could go out to work successfully in the Mission field unless he went out with the conviction that his own sins are forgiven. Having that conviction there would certainly be a renunciation of self; for the man who does not abjure self as the governing principle of his life, or who does not overcome it, can never be a successful worker for Christ. The word always to be borne in mind was, "Without Me ye can do nothing," for as the branch withers where it has been cut off from the vine, so without Christ we are lifeless and withered and powerless. This truth the speaker illustrated and enforced most effectively; the young workers on the eve of setting out for their respective spheres of duty could hardly have been more faithfully admonished to keep to the Word. I solemnly adjure you, he said, not to retreat by a hair's-breadth from the position of the plenary, verbal inspiration of the Holy Scriptures; and a loud cheer from the large company showed the importance which in their judgment was attached to such counsel. It is the sword, not the scabbard, that is to do God's work. It is the naked, gleaming "sword of the Spirit" that we want to see wielded now, both in Great Britain and in America.

Rev. J. DENHAM SMITH, after some interesting remarks, closed the afternoon meeting with a touching prayer on behalf of the young brethren to whom they were bidding farewell.

In the interval between the afternoon and evening meeting, it was a sight which moved many hearts to witness the old fellow-students taking leave of each other. In quite an informal way, so as not to attract the notice of many in the grounds, they gathered in a little knot in front of the College, and there sang to encourage each other, "Bringing in the sheaves!" M. Cuendet was leaving that night for Algiers to work among the Kabyles at a station at Djemaa-ridge. He is about to join Mr. Lamb to carry on a work which has been in progress for about two years. The work there has since branched out into Oran, and more recently has extended to Morocco. A house has been taken at Tangiers, and Mission work will be commenced forthwith among the Moors and the native Kabyle tribes.

A TEMPERANCE CONFERENCE upon "Harvest Work without Beer" has recently been held at Ampthill, Beds. Lord Charles Russell presided, and addresses were delivered by Earl Cowper and a large number of clergymen. Abstaining principles are making progress amongst the labourers there. Similar gatherings have also been held at Lewes and Basingstoke, convened by leading landowners in the neighbourhood. At the latter, Sir Nelson Rycroft, Bart., said he knew something about farming. As soon as he commenced it he stopped the supply of beer, and had done so ever since, and he believed that the men liked it better. He found it far more acceptable, instead of sending beer into the harvest field, to send a supply of meat, vegetables, and a little money to their cott[illegible].

THE CHURCH'S DUTY TO THE WORLD.

AN ADDRESS AT MILDMAY CONFERENCE,

By Rev. A. N. MACKRAY.

REVELATION, Appropriation, and Communication may be taken as the three key-words of our Conference on The Knowledge of God. But the key-word of to-night is truly the master word of our whole Conference, for our God, as we have been seeking to apprehend Him, is the God of unlimited self-communication. He became one flesh with us, that we might become one spirit with Him. The three crowning affirmations of our Christian Scriptures, touching the nature of God, are these: God is Spirit, God is Light, God is Love. He is Spirit, as regards his essential being; Light, as regards his essential character; Love, as regards his essential relations. God would not be God—God would not be Himself, without love—love transitive, love in the giving, and in the receiving of it; for love implies relationship. "The only God," as He is called in the Gospel, never was or could be the lonely God; for God is love. And as Augustine said long ago, "Where love is, there is the Trinity." The name of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, is never mentioned in the New Testament Scriptures except in the communication of blessing.

Thus if it be ever-increasing communication on God's side, shall it be otherwise on ours? Can I be a man of God, can you be the people of God, if this key-word of to-night's study does not lie close to our hearts—if it is not the meaning, the motive, the aim of our life? Our Chairman yesterday spoke a tender word about the grief of God when his people do not increase in his knowledge. Let us think of the sorrow of God when his people do not increase in the communication of that knowledge. And this knowledge is to be communicated by the Church. The Ecclesia was of old the assembly of the citizens summoned by the herald for the transaction of public affairs. The Ecclesia, the Church, by its very name, therefore means business. Not enough to respond to the summons by the herald, the calling of God by his Word and Spirit to the faith and fellowship of his Son; not enough to respond loyally to the out-calling from among the rest of a chosen people. The called, the called-out, are one and all called out for business. And the Church's business, as regards this world, is the communication of the knowledge of God to that world, the knowledge which the world needs, the knowledge which the world does not possess, the knowledge which the world, in ignorance, and unrest, and misery, is blindly groping after, the knowledge which is now made known unto all the nations for the obedience of faith, as Paul so grandly says in the doxology which sums up his great Epistle to the Romans, "According to the commandment of the everlasting God."

As we look each other in the face to-night, never again to meet altogether until we are gathered by the Elder Brother, as those who are members of the Christian society, which by its very name means business, the joint-business of the King and the citizens, let us repeat our watchword with a solemn sense of personal responsibility, and with a bracing, inspiring conviction of that joint partnership which lies at the heart of the corresponding word in the New Testament Scriptures, communicate.

Let me indicate the line of thought which is laid down in the four texts under the first head of our evening's subject, which I doubt not have been selected by the brethren with much prayer in the Holy Ghost. We should therefore approach them very reverently. The first is in Acts xvii. 23; you find it more correctly rendered in the Revised Version, "I found an altar with this inscription, 'To an unknown God;' what therefore ye worship in ignorance, this set I forth unto you." They could not ascribe personality to that power unknown and unknowable, which yet they felt must exist; that is precisely the position of many teachers of science in our day, who, I think, ought to appropriate that ancient altar of which Dr. Plumptre tells us in his Commentary, now in the Vatican Museum, that bears upon it this inscription, "the sign of the undiscoverable God." This text is put at the basis of our meditations to-night, as, I take it, to remind us where the Church of Christ has to find her true starting-point in going forth to fulfil her Lord's Resurrection Commission. I find this starting point in Acts xvii. First in Paul's fearless exposure, at the headquarters of the world's civilisation and culture, of its utter ignorance of the supremacy and spirituality of God, and of His relations with all men and all men's relations with Him; secondly, in his pathetic reference to the world's uncertain groping in the dark after God; thirdly, in his bold appeal to the witness for God that lies in man's conscience; and finally, in his solemn testimony to the crisis that has supervened after the times of ignorance, inasmuch, as we read, "God hath appointed a day in the which He will judge the world in righteousness by the man whom He hath ordained, whereof He hath given assurance to all men in that He hath raised Him from the dead."

I take it that that missionary had better stay at home who does not go to the regions beyond with the burning conviction that Christianity is the only religion that gives to men the true conception of God, and that brings men into right relations with God. When the Church of Christ sprang into existence, under the Pentecostal fulness of the Spirit, this was the word that was her strength and inspiration in her world-wide mission: Salvation is in none other than in Christ crucified and risen, "Neither is there any other name given under heaven among men whereby we must be saved." The Church, as I believe, would throw away the charter of her calling, would cut the sinews of her activity, would be false to the Lord, if she yoked herself, as some advise, with other systems of belief, or linked the Name that is above every name with that of Brahma or Buddha, or Mohammed. Let us see then in this first Scripture where we, as Christian workers, must put our feet firmly down on this:—the manifest insufficiency of all knowledge of God, outside the Word of inspired revelation, to meet the last and the longest needs of man, to be truth to his mind, peace to his conscience, satisfaction to his heart, to be the rule, pattern, motive, and goal of his life—to be the renovation and the transformation of the man himself at the seat of his personal being. Go forth, my fellow Christian worker, in some lonely place—go forth with the Word of Truth, assured that beneath all the refinement, flippancy, indifference, formalism, godlessness, vice and crime with which you may be confronted, there is ignorance, there is doubt, there is disappointment, there is weariness, there is want, there is self-loathing. Let this be your starting point: "What ye worship in ignorance, this set I forth unto you."

Our remaining Scriptures, from this our starting-point, describe the communication of the knowledge of God under three instructive and solemnising aspects. The communication of the knowledge of God is to be made first after the manner in which the sower sows his seed; secondly, after the manner in which the heavenly bodies diffuse their light, and thirdly, after the manner in which the incense-bearers at a Roman triumph became a savour of life, or of death, to the captives that followed in the train of the conqueror.

The first text is in Proverbs xv. 7, "The lips of the wise disperse knowledge." The word there means as dust is scattered by the wind or as the seed is dropped into the open furrow. The "wise" in the Book of Proverbs is the name given to those who have received the true knowledge of God, who occupy themselves with thoughts of God and man, and of their mutual relationships, who have become enamoured with the Wisdom, or the Word of God. In that Book the wise are opposed to two classes—to the crass, thoughtless multitude, the fools, and to the scorners and the sceptics who seek to justify their unbelief on intellectual grounds. The wise go forth knowing God, loving God, apprehending his purpose, seeking to do his will, and by their lips, that is, by well-considered speech, disperse the knowledge of God. The sower goes forth to sow, and the seed is the Word. It seems to m that the conveners of this Conference have given us this text to remind us of what we are very apt to forget—that the oral Gospel long preceded the written Gospel, that the Lord and his Apostles communicated the knowledge of God to man by word of mouth, and that the earliest triumphs of Christianity were secured through the Pentecostal believers going everywhere preaching the Word. This Scripture, as I take it, calls upon us for a consecration of personal intercourse, for the faithful employment in every legitimate channel of the living Voice. Let the seed be quietly dropped into the willing ear; let it be deposited, with its mysterious germ of life, in the solitary heart. I hardly need stop to say here that one great lesson of recent religious movements—the lesson of the inquiry-room, the lesson of the London City Mission, the lesson of the great unnumbered—unnumbered only except as numbered by the Lord—army of visitors from house to house—one great lesson is this, the need and the gain of personal dealing with men. A single pointed inquiry, a few words spoken alone, as we were hearing in the tent this afternoon—spoken alone, about salvation, may do what years of sermon-hearing have failed to accomplish.

I take up the life of Richard Baxter, and I find him adopting this method of individual dealing with the parishioners of Kidderminster, bringing them to his house and taking them apart one by one. He tells us that he had reason to believe that more than a third of the grown-up inhabitants of the place were converted to God. I take up the life of the late Mr. Grant, of Arndilly, and I find him so intent upon the habit of individual intercourse that in three months he had dealt with 1500 souls, while the refrain of all his letters, as Mrs. Gordon says, was always this: "Speak a word for Jesus."

I turn to Dr. Barnardo's Night and Day for this month, and I find Mr. Archibald Brown recalling to the mind of our Chairman the night three and twenty years ago when he gripped his hand in a private room, and asked him whether he would then and there accept of the Lord. I go down to the town where I have laboured for many years, and I see one of the chief tradesmen of the place transformed in character and life, and at the head of the Y.M.C.A. I trace the change to a night when, two years ago, or thereabouts, Mr. Moody laid his hand upon his shoulder, with a heart overflowing with love, and said to him: "Will you not trust Him?" I look back upon my own spiritual history when an undergraduate, and I connect its crisis with a similar home-thrust from a plain, unlettered Wesleyan local preacher, who was one of the holiest men I ever met, the late James Turner, of Peterhead. You misquote the text in the Book of Proverbs, and reverse the true order when you say: "He that winneth souls is wise." No, friends, the wisdom precedes the winning, and the winning is the proof of the wisdom: "He that is wise wins souls." He draws their affections to Himself, and thus leads them to receive the truth that has made him wise unto salvation. Our Conference will lamentably fail, if, being more wise, we are not also more winsome.

The second Scripture describes the communication of the knowledge of God after the manner in which the heavenly bodies give forth their light. I wish you to notice that the splendid charge which the Apostle lays upon the whole congregation of the faithful in Philippians ii. 16: "Hold forth the Word of life," follows and completes his exhortation to cultivate a blameless and a luminous walk in the world. This is the argument—maintain a salt-like savour of Christian character; be God's pure, blameless, irreproachable children in the midst of all the perversions and distortions of the generation among whom your lot is cast, and you will appear—it does not mean you will try to shine; you will be seen as luminaries in the world, because you will be "holding forth the word of life," applying to all darkened, troubled, and perishing souls with whom God brings you in contact, the Word of life, the message that proclaims and conveys the only life worth living.

I take it that the conveners of our Conference intended here to remind us that the knowledge of God is to be communicated to the world, not only by personal, secret, and if I might say, mouth-to-mouth dispersion, but by open, united, world-wide proclamation. For the most of us, this can be done only, in its highest aspects, perhaps by the liberal, prayerful, sustained support of Christian Missions, Missions to the heathen, the heathen at home and to the heathen abroad, and to the "lost sheep of the house of Israel." Of course you will notice that as this charge to hold forth the Word of life is laid upon the whole congregation of the faithful, it vindicates this right for every Christian. If any of you are brought into contact, as I doubt not you in your quiet village homes sometimes are, with a pretentious sacerdotalism, you must give prominence to the fact that the command to evangelise the nations was laid by our blessed Lord upon the whole company of the faithful. Notice, however, here, that this truth of the individual right, and therefore individual obligation, of holding forth the Word of life, is to enter into the make of character and conduct. The idea of the Apostle is that it is to give tone, colour, point, force, to all our activities. What is true, properly, of Christ, comes to be true derivatively of his Church and of every member thereof. "The life is the light of men." By the force of example, by practical Christian sympathy, by conspicuous Christian well-doing, we are to hold forth the Word of Life. Have you ever traced the connection of the word logos in the New Testament Scriptures? It is the Word of Grace, the Word of the Cross, the Word of Reconciliation, the Word of Salvation, the Word of Life, the Word of the Kingdom, and then, crowning and guaranteeing it all, the Word of Truth—the Word of the Truth of the Gospel. We need at last to write the term with a big "W," and give it a personal interpretation. Christ Himself is the Word, the Message, the Gospel, the Word of Life—life-giving, life-sustaining Words. Eloquence literally means outspeaking. He is the truly eloquent man who can give utterance to all that is in him. But no Christian can do this in mere words; he must be eloquent by being a living epistle of Christ. "Give unbelievers," said the martyr Ignatius, at the close of the first century—"give unbelievers the chance of believing through you. Consider yourselves employed by God; your lives the form of language in which He addresses them."

One word upon the last of the four scriptures, and then I close. You will notice that it is taken from 2 Cor. ii. 14, and suggests that the communication of the Word of God is like the sweet odours of incense, which formed an essential part of every Roman triumph. Paul in this scripture gives thanks to God, "who always causeth us to triumph in Christ," or, as you have it in the Revised Version, "who always leadeth us in triumph" at the chariot wheels of Christ, and makes our ministry in every place like the incense of the Roman triumph, that wafted everywhere the tidings of the coming conqueror. There were two classes of prisoners in the Roman triumph—those who had received pardon, and therefore were on their way to be delivered; and those who remained condemned, and who were on their way to perish. The same incense that bore to the one class life, health, and joy, bore to the other class dolour, doom, and death. Paul says that it is not otherwise in the Gospel triumph of Christ, through the wilfulness and impenitency of men. It is a savour of life unto life, or of death unto death, and that more and more.

Let us remember that the Word of God is a hammer that hardens where it does not break; that it is a fire that consumes where it does not purify. The sword of the Spirit has a tremendous back stroke. I think you London Christians ought to tremble as you now have to consider the judicial action of God's Word after the unexampled proclamation of it for eight months past. I want the humblest worker here to remember that the same alternative action of God's Word is going on in connection with his or her ministry, obscure as it may be. There is not one of us who has been attending this Conference who can escape this alternative action of God's Word upon our souls. Who thinks sufficiently of the testing, the determining, the judicial action of God's Word in a Christian community? Why, it is thus that silently, but searchingly and surely, modern "Christendom," as the phrase goes, is being judged by the Word of the Lord. What wonder that the Apostle facing the tremendous issues of his work exclaims, "Who is sufficient for these things?" Does not the same cry rise from all our hearts to-night, both as regards the reception and the communication of the knowledge of God? Let us go down upon the knees of our souls; let us seek to sink ourselves in the message God has given us to deliver; let us lose ourselves in the ministry, however humble it may be, in the home and outwards, which God has given us to fulfil. Let us ever be as in the great Task-master's eye, for it is upon Him that the ministry of the Word terminates, and the preaching of the Gospel is a sweet savour to God of Christ, whether the message be received or rejected. Let us ever be as in his immediate presence, neither lifted up by success nor cast down by apparent failure. Let this be our confession, and let us live and labour, and pray, and wait, in the faith of it:—"Our sufficiency is of God."

Undenominational Mission, Pontymoil.

THE sixth anniversary of this Mission was recently celebrated under exceptionally favourable circumstances. On Sunday Mrs. S. E. Jasper delivered Gospel addresses at the morning, afternoon, and evening services to attentive congregations, by whom her remarks were much appreciated.

A public tea-meeting was held on Monday afternoon. This was followed by a platform meeting, at which there was a large attendance. Mr. Richard Cory, J.P., Cardiff, occupied the chair. Mr. T. M. Wintle gave his annual report. "For six years," he said, "the Mission work had been diligently prosecuted in Pontymoil and neighbourhood, but the past year had been the most successful and encouraging of any. Many of the most destitute children had been brought in from their evil surroundings, and instructed in the truths of the Gospel, while others had been admitted into industrial schools in London, where they were being well cared for and brought up in honesty and respectability. The only education many of the younger ones in the locality received was in the Mission Hall, as they were overlooked by the day-schools. The good work amongst the girls had also been diligently carried on. They were in great need of a Bible-carriage, whereby they might more readily propagate the Gospel."

Mr. Cory, in the course of a long and interesting address, congratulated Mr. Wintle and those immediately connected with the Mission on the favourable progress they had made during the year. He was glad to see that the efforts put forth to rescue the destitute and neglected children in that locality had been so successful. Rev. O. Tidman said he firmly believed that this was the right work carried on by the right persons among the right class. Rev. J. Tucker gave a few words of encouragement and sound advice to the young, whom he hoped to see continuing in the right way. He also hoped that the principal workers in connection with the Mission would not rest satisfied with the results that had already been obtained, but would go on endeavouring to extend their field, and bring in those who were still in darkness and the shadow of death.

CHILDREN OF MISSIONARIES.—DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me to speak to your numerous readers in reference to the boys at Blackheath, and girls at Sevenoaks? The holiday season is at hand, and most of us will be laying out plans to spend a few weeks at the seaside or elsewhere. Some will as usual arrange for one or more of these children to form part of their family circle. May I venture to urge that this very estimable custom should be more largely followed? There must be many who are interested in Missions, to whom such a suggestion has only to be made to be acted upon. Among the boys especially there are always a goodly number who, having no friends, do not get invited, and their prospect is to stay at Blackheath. Applications to provide either for a part, or the whole of the vacation, will be most thankfully received by Mrs. Waite, "School for the Sons of Missionaries," Blackheath, S.E., or by yours very truly,

Handen-road, Lee. LIZZIE UNWIN.

Evangelising in Norway.

By Dr. MOXEY.

A PARTY of five Christians (two ladies and three gentlemen), including Mr. J. N. Carr of Carlisle, and myself, have been travelling in Southern Norway for the last week. We brought about 1300 tracts with us, most of them being translations into Norwegian, of the pretty illustrated quarto sheets of the Children's Special Service Mission. These have been received with eagerness, both in town and country. It is quite touching to see the little groups that collect to discuss the pictures (which, with this simple people, so child-like in their ways and manners, seem to form a special source of attraction), or to compare notes as to the contents of each tract. Men at their work, women in their homes, children playing round the doors, seem all to be equally interested; and often a shrivelled old hand, or a tiny dimpled one, will be extended, to emphasise the grateful "tak" (thank you) with which the Gospel message has been received.

The only cause of regret is that we do not know the language, and therefore cannot preach Christ to those who we believe would be willing hearers. Our courier, a gentlemanly man, and a graduate of the University of Christiania, is much interested in our work of evangelisation, and tells us that each tract will be perused by perhaps a dozen different readers. On one occasion he has interpreted to a cottage audience Mr. Carr's explanation of "The Wordless Book."

We often sit on the balcony of our hotel, or go to some place where an audience can be gathered, and sing some of Mr. Sankey's songs. These are listened to with evident delight, and to-day at Notodden as many as fifty came round to listen. Tracts were handed round to them; one man, a sailor, thanked us in English, and began to explain "the Wordless Book," a copy of which Mr. Carr had given to him. Soon after, I spoke to him and another sailor, and discovered they both were Christians; one was not clearly in the light, and both listened earnestly while I tried to put the glad tidings simply before them. While I was thus engaged, another man with his wife and child came up to Mr. Carr and the ladies, and addressed them in English. He was anxious about his soul, and said he was a sailor, and had heard Mr. Moody at Michigan. Often, he said, his anxiety kept him awake a considerable part of the night. He accompanied us to the hotel to get some English tracts to help him on his way.

We ascribe much of our success in reaching the people to the hymn singing. They seem to take knowledge of us, "Whose we are and Whom we serve," and those who long to be on the Lord's side are encouraged to approach us, and ask the way Zionward. We found a fine intelligent lad at Bolkesjo, a driver of carriages for tourists, who had been converted six years previously, through the Methodists at Königsberg. He came up, and claimed fellowship with us; and a Professor of Ancient Languages in one of the colleges of Christiania, a fellow traveller in the same hotel, begged some of our tracts, as did also the landlady, whose demeanour changed from gloom to sunshine when she heard our hymns. We have all been more or less engaged in personal dealing with souls, both among Norwegians and English travellers, and we commend similar work to any Christians who may be coming this way.

LITERATURE FOR THE BLIND.—The Saloon of the Mansion House was, through the kindness of the Lord Mayor, placed at the disposal of the "Society for Embossing and Circulating English and Foreign Books and Pamphlets in Dr. Moon's Type for the Blind." On Friday week a public meeting was held, with his lordship in the chair, when Dr. Moon explained the principal features of his excellent scheme. The work has been in progress for thirty-seven years, and additional funds are needed at the present juncture. Addresses were delivered by the Chairman, Rev. J. McCarthy, Mr. James Lowther, M.P., Mr. J. Martin Tait, Mr. Brown, of Edinburgh; Professor D'Orsey, B.D., and Sir C. H. Lowther, Bart.

THE REVIVAL IN LONDON.

By LADY HOPE.

AH, yes! What is the shadow? Burnett's peace is disturbed. There is no doubt of this; nor can we wonder that the piercings of the "sword" which is "quick and powerful" have reft asunder the miserable delusions of a life spent without God, and entered the "joints of the armour" in which he has vainly hidden himself, and so vainly trusted. It is made of sham metal. It has been a false peace—an untrue one; and the first breath of the Spirit that passed over this man has shaken his very foundations to the ground. The shadow that has overtaken him, and is now disturbing his rest, is "a darkness that might be felt,"—"a thick darkness,"—even the cloud of unforgiven sin. And this is not a transient cloud. It is not a passing shadow. It is a tremendous reality. It is full of portentous warnings, and carries within it the storm-power of God's displeasure against evil—his "condemnation" now, his judgment to come. Thunders and lightnings will break from that cloud one day; they are contained in it now. But it is only the ray of heavenly light from the living Word of God, and by the power of his Holy Spirit, that can reveal his darkness, and show to an unsaved man his true state before God.

All this day Burnett tries to shake off a troublesome conviction that he is wrong. He would give anything to think the contrary, or not to think at all; but for once he is making the discovery that he is not even master of his own thoughts. The more he fights against them, the more uncomfortable he becomes. Yet he struggles on bravely with his work, doing his best to give all his attention to it, and promising himself "a good lark" in the evening, with some of "the best of the fellows" that he knows, to freshen him up for the next day. This is his plan; and 'a very good' one he thinks it. But he is not quite so clever as he imagines, for it is not coming to pass.

That very evening, as he comes out of the refreshment rooms where he has taken his dinner, he meets three of his friends at the door. They are Hartley, Brown, and Fenton.

"Oh! here you are!" they say merrily; "we have been looking for you. Where were you last night? We couldn't find you anywhere."

"Oh! well! I was——I was——What are you going to do now? I vote that we make for some fresh air to-night. It is close enough for anything in the streets. I want just to call round at my lodgings, and see if there are any letters for me. You might walk round there with me. It is only a step."

And the little group of four walk off together.

After some chat in a free and easy way after their own fashion, Brown asks, point-blank—

"Burnett! I say, where were you last night, o' fellow?"

This takes our friend rather aback; but he is a brave man, and he answers in an off-hand manner—

"Oh! I had the best turn-out last night that I have had for a long time. Went down to the Embankment to hear those——ah! those——Yankee fellows talk; what do they call them? let me see, Moody and Sankey—yes! that's the name. They are funny chaps, to be sure. Never saw such a sight. Thousands and thousands of people; and all sitting as quiet as mice, staring at them."

"What?" says Brown.

"Where?" says Hartley.

"What next?" they ask, evidently wondering whether Burnett really is speaking, and really is saying what they thought they heard.

"You don't mean it! You didn't, really, now. Oh! what a joke! Did you ever hear anything like that?" and one of them laughs, but the others look too astonished to laugh.

"What on earth took you down there?" asks Fenton.

"I was passing, and saw the crowd, and thought I would go in. It's a sight to be seen, I can tell you."

"Nonsense!" says Brown. "I declare I should like to see it," says another. "How far off is it?"

"Oh, not so very far. Just down there, by Salisbury-square. I'll take you if you like; but I won't promise to go in myself. I want some fresh air to-night."

"Oh, no!" they all chime in. "We are not going by ourselves. We must have you with us. You must show us the way."

"I'll tell you who you'll see there. Do you remember Ardent—Harry Ardent? Don't you remember him? He was a capital fellow at the oars."

"Remember him!" says Hartley. "He used to be a great chum of mine. Does he go down there now? Then it can't be so very bad. He's an awfully sensible fellow; and clever, too. I must say I should like to go. Can anybody get in, or have you to pay?"

"Anybody can get in, I believe. But there's a tremendous crowd. I believe people have tickets for it. Oh, yes, that reminds me. I saw Tomkins struggling his way in, with his pasteboard in his hand, as business-like as possible."

"Never!" Hartley exclaims; and all the men are laughing again. "What can it be like? But we haven't got any cards for it."

Just at this moment they arrive at the lodgings, and Burnett receives two or three letters. Two of them he puts in his pocket. He opens another, as it bears a strange handwriting.

"Well, if this isn't an odd chance!" he exclaims. "Here's an envelope with four tickets in it. Just enough! Who on earth can have sent them?"

"You don't say so!" the others reply. "That is funny. Just while we were talking about it, too!"

"Shall we go?" says Brown.

"All right!" the others agree. "We can come out again if we like."

"Not so easy," Burnett says, shaking his head, and looking very wise. At the same time he takes his other letters out of his pocket, and opens them. "One from Ardent, I declare!" he continues. "What can he be writing about, I wonder?"

Hartley comes nearer.

"What is it?" he asks. "I haven't seen him for an age. Does he tell any news?"

But John is gazing fixedly at the letter he holds in his hand. Suddenly, for some unaccountable reason, he must needs push it into its envelope, and bury it in the recesses of his pockets.

"Nothing at all," he answered, "nothing at all. It's all about nothing."

"We had better hurry on," Brown remarks. "Do you say it begins at eight o'clock?"

And they quicken their steps, Hartley looking eager, Brown amused, and Fenton indifferent. Burnett is acting guide, and seems rather proud of knowing the way, and leading his party through a gate, and then in at a door. They all are "lucky in their places," as they describe it, and seat themselves in a row, passing free comments as to their first impressions for about five minutes. Then the singing begins—

"There is life for a look at the Crucified One."

This is the hymn. Brown fidgets.

"Is it a sort of church?" he whispers.

"Good gracious, no!" says Hartley. "It is not a bit like a church."

And they sit quiet again. Hymn after hymn follows, Mr. Moody sometimes desiring that "All will rise and sing;" sometimes directing the choir to "sing alone;" until at length he takes his place on a prominent little raised platform about five yards in front of the long platform, that accommodates more than five hundred people seated. And now the proceedings begin in good earnest, Mr. Moody giving an address that lasts for about thirty minutes, and seems to last about five. The subject is a very direct one, the language plain and pointed, the questions unanswerable, the illustrations homely, but strangely pathetic, and bearing the stamp of reality upon them. These simple stories serve to carry home very unmistakably the home thrusts that flash like an array of steel bayonets in the battle field, and pierce many a heart. The "bayonets" are not alone, however; there is the Balm of Gilead too. The wounding and the binding up both go side by side, and both tell marvellously upon the audience. Our four young men all seem more or less interested.

"Ye must be born again!" This is the theme of the address. "It is all made very plain," the speaker says. "The doctrine of the new birth is a fundamental one. It is the foundation of all our hopes for this life, as well as for the world to come. 'Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God,'—much less inherit it. This is really the A B C of the Christian religion. . . . I am so thankful that our Lord spoke of the New Birth to this ruler of the Jews, this doctor of the law, rather than to the woman at the well of Samaria, or to Matthew the publican. If He had reserved his teaching on the matter for these three, or for such as these, people would have said, 'Oh, yes! these publicans and sinners need to be converted; but I am an upright man; I do not need to be converted.' . . . God tells us in this chapter how we are to get into his kingdom. We are not to work our way in; not but that salvation is worth working for. We admit that. It would be worth our while to go round the world on our hands and knees, climbing its mountains and swimming its rivers. It would be worth the labour of a lifetime to accomplish such a purpose; but we don't get salvation that way. 'Ye must be born again.' This is what Christ says. When Jesus cried out on Calvary, 'It is finished!' He meant what He said. All that men have to do now is just to accept of the work of Jesus Christ. There is no other salvation. 'As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up; that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life.' 'Whosoever!' Mark that! God has done everything for your salvation. There is nothing to wait for. 'It is finished.' Take care you do not neglect this great salvation. Do not refuse it. What! will you take the cup of salvation to your lips, as you sit here, and then dash it to the ground, saying, 'Not to-night'? If this offer of life has the power to save you when you receive it, will you not receive it?

"You will never see the kingdom of God except you be 'born again.' God has said it, and not man. You may see the kings and lords of the earth; but the King of kings and Lord of lords you will never see, except you are born again. You may go to the Tower of London, and see the crown of England, which is worth thousands of pounds, and is guarded there by soldiers; but bear in mind that your eye will never rest upon the crown of life except you are 'born again.' You may hear the songs of earth, and rejoice in them for a while; but there is one song that your uncircumcised ear shall never hear—'the song of Moses and the Lamb'—unless you are 'born again.'"

But we might fill many pages with the burning sentences that drop in a new, strange power upon those listening ears to-night. They bear, every one of them, the stamp of truth; and hence their unmistakable attraction. The world is crying out for truth, often unconsciously, perhaps; but it is sighing for some tangible joy, some gladness that will not float away ere it be grasped; some pleasure, some reality, some solid delight, that can never fade. Many of the most thoughtless ones around us are possessed with this craving. They know this longing perfectly well. But they do not know how it can be satisfied. They do not perceive that there is One alone who has made a perfect provision for their hearts' needs; and that this provision is in Himself—that Christ Jesus is the Bread of Life.

There are some attentive hearers in the Hall to-night! Our four young men are amongst them. A look of scorn, sometimes surprise, sometimes amusement, flits over their faces; but on the whole their rapt attention, and the stillness of their attitude during the address, proves that the words they are hearing are already obtaining their interest; and better still, we may hope, reaching their hearts.

Following up at Mildmay.

BY A WORKER.

It has been my privilege the past few weeks to visit in their own homes a large number of those who were impressed at the Conference Hall by Dr. Pentecost's wonderfully clear expositions of the Gospel during his four weeks' Mission at Mildmay. May I take a few of your readers round with me in imagination to visit some of these inquirers? Dr. Pentecost's promised gift of a book will open the way for us.

Let us come down S—— road, where very many have received a blessing. Introducing ourselves by means of the book, we find a ready welcome. Mrs. A. B. has had a double blessing, for she tells us, with soul-lit face, that she and her husband have both stepped into God's marvellous light. "We are both determined to live as Christians, God helping us, and we have no doubt whatever as to the forgiveness of our sins. Oh, ma'am, neither my husband nor I will ever forget to praise God that we went to hear Dr. Pentecost. I went one night and he went the next, as the little ones need some one to stay with them. We have always had such a happy married life; but 'twas nothing, we are doubly happy now. My husband says, 'Dr. Pentecost chops up a subject into pieces, and builds it up again, so one knows not only the whole erection, but each piece and what it stands on.'" Can one doubt on hearing such a testimony, quietly and earnestly given, of the reality of the work at this home? Urging Mrs. B. to join a church or chapel, we joyfully go on thanking the Lord and Giver of all for the full blessing granted to that family.

And yet at the next house we feel a greater thankfulness, for the Spirit's work has been wrought on one well on in years. C. D. is a dear woman, of the old-fashioned type, who would seem more in keeping with a well-to-do farmhouse in the country than in dusty, noisy London. She had been drawn to hear Dr. Pentecost because of his nationality, all her friends having emigrated to America. "It seemed to bring me nigh them to hear one from those parts." She is so clear and happy. "I could not understand things, Miss, but the Doctor has made all so clear and plain. I've no doubts now. Oh, I'm happy, so very, very happy! You'll thank the Doctor for me for all he has done for me, and for the little book." And there have been many such in their old age stepping into the light and joy of salvation. "So happy! so happy!" only regretting the few years that are left them to serve their Master.

Perhaps one of the most striking features of the Spirit's work, through his servant, has been the number of children who are now rejoicing in their Saviour. One little mite, who seemed to me almost too young to grasp the deep meanings of salvation, said in answer to my rather doubting queries: "Oh, I know I am Jesus' own child!" "But how do you know?" "Because He won't lie, and He said: 'Whosoever will confess Me before men, him will I confess before my Father, which is in heaven,' and I stood up and took Him at his word." One dear child of nine or ten years was unconsciously influencing the whole house. Her testimony came full and clear, and her face was simply beaming. Her mother, a quiet-looking woman, was greatly touched, and is now earnestly seeking her little daughter's Saviour; nor did the influence of the little Christian stop there, but I gathered from the mother's conversation that the other dwellers in the house had been touched by the child's acceptance of salvation. I was greatly moved, and learnt a lesson from Alice and her unconscious power.

"But are all the converts women?" you ask. Oh, no; I could tell of young warehousemen testifying in the midst of their companions in a crowded shop; of working men turning right round in the stream of life, and beating up against the tide, giving up bad companions and drink, and casting aside hindrances of all kinds, with a steadfastness of purpose which testifies to the in-dwelling of a Power greater than their old selves.

Many praying fathers and mothers and praying wives have had their prayers answered. One young lad of fourteen, whose Christian parents were much distressed by his forming low acquaintances who lured him to evil ways, has been led to accept Christ as his Saviour in answer to their continued prayers. "Many ways were fruitlessly tried to reclaim him, and nothing was left," said his mother, "but just to keep on bringing him to God. Father and I have prayed on, and we knew it would be all right in the Lord's good time. His master, who is a Christian, gave him a ticket for Dr. Pentecost's meetings, and Fred not only went, but took one of his bad associates with him. Not knowing he was at the Conference Hall, I went in, and, strange to say, sat down beside my boy inadvertently. As the Doctor preached, he seemed impressed, but I—I never heard a word throughout the whole meeting. I never ceased praying for him. Imagine my joy and surprise—faithless woman that I am—when, notwithstanding my presence and that of his companion, he stood up for prayer. It must have been a hard struggle. I said, 'Will you go into the inquiry-room?' 'I intend to do so, and settle this matter,' and he did, Miss. He is a changed lad, Miss. We (father and I) are just praising God for his goodness to us."

Persons of all classes have been reached; many Christian men and women have had stumbling blocks removed from their path; Godless commercial men, are Godless no longer; thoughtless young men, are now thoughtful; servants are doing their work, 'not with eye service,' but to their Master in heaven; young girls in shops are studying their Bibles after 9.30 p.m. to know more of their King; factory girls see new prospects of the life beyond —"beyond the frost-chain and the fever;" to old men and women, death is robbed of his terrors; young ladies are seeking a fuller salvation, having tasted gladly of the first salvation. "Dr. Pentecost was so simple, so easily understood," has been the remark on all sides. "There has not been a difficult doctrinal stumbling-block but Dr. Pentecost has successfully tackled it," said a thinking man.

Mildmay has indeed been blessed. Truly a rich blessing has descended upon the neighbourhood, beginning on Easter Sunday. "Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle tree; and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

DUBLIN.—Canon Wilberforce attended a crowded meeting held in the Christian Union Buildings here on Saturday evening, June 28, under the auspices of the Hibernian Band of Hope Union. Rev. Charles Garrett, of Liverpool, presided. A vote of censure was passed upon Dr. Lyons, M.P. for Dublin City, for his opposition to the Sunday Closing Bill in the House of Commons. Canon Wilberforce also preached on Sunday afternoon, June 29, in St. Patrick's Cathedral, on behalf of the Band of Hope Union, when there was an immense congregation, who listened to his scathing denunciation of the drink traffic with rapt attention.

OUR SOLDIERS.—Mrs. Evered Poole has lately formed an Association in connection with the Army Scripture Readers' Society, for supplying soldiers with religious and pure literature for Sunday reading, for distribution in their various barrack rooms. It is hoped that by this means many a dull hour in a soldier's life may be brightened, and many hearts cheered and encouraged by the knowledge of sympathy and interest felt in them by Christian friends. Packets of tracts, papers, or periodicals, which have been perused in our homes, instead of being cast aside, may thus be used in the Master's service, "that nothing be lost." Any who are willing to co-operate in this work are invited to send in their names to Mrs. Evered Poole, Enfield-house, Southampton.

The Divine Right of the Poor.

BY REV. H. T. R. MARSTON, M.A.

WHAT is the sweet spring-time to them
Who sicken in city slums,
Where never a flower puts forth her bloom,
And never a wild bee hums?

The glory of summer flushes full
On mountain, moor, and lea!
But the human swarms in alley and court
The glory do not see.

And when the autumn, with ruddy sheaves,
Brings in the bounteous time,
The moiling million still grinds and grieves
In poverty, dirt, and crime.

Have they not human lives to live,
And human souls to save?
Are they fore-doomed to be cradled in want
And to lie in a pauper's grave?

Have they no hope of the life to come?—
No claim on the Father's love?
Did not the Lord of the Angels stoop
For them from his throne above?

Oh! slander no longer the love of God
With the arch-deceiver's lie—
That the poor were made to starve on earth,
And be happy when they die!

The rich in their pomp, and the great in their pride,
Have their purple and linen fine!
But the poor are the heirs of the kingdom of God,
And the land of corn and wine!

No! the poor shall enter his kingdom now,
For its portals are free and wide;
Though mammon and luxury block the path,
And prejudice leagued with pride.

All beautiful, true, and holy things,
The poor with the rich shall share;
And theirs shall a double portion be
Who have double of want and care.

For the human life in us all is one,
And a sweet and a sacred thing;
And the one great God is the lover of all,
The Father of all, and King.

And the broad green earth He made for the poor,
As well as the broad blue sky;
And He means that the poor shall be happy here,
As well as when they die.

Continental and Foreign Notes.

Lodi, Italy.—The attempt made on behalf of the Evangelical Continental Society by the Milan branch of the Evangelical Alliance to establish regular preaching at Lodi, has been largely frustrated by the unaccountable action of the authorities. The theatre which was hired was declared to be one in which evening meetings could not be held. Another room was obtained; but as soon as an Evangelist went there, and began to hold evening meetings, disturbances occurred, and the meetings were forbidden.

Naples.—About three years ago, a Society of Mutual Aid was formed among members of the different Evangelical Churches of Naples. The object of the Society is twofold. (1) To create a feeling of brotherly love and of union among the different churches. (2) To help the brethren in times of trouble and sickness. Considerable success has resulted. A medical man has already been provided, and we have been enabled to give help to the poor in times of sickness, and to meet the funeral expenses in case of death. The Society is undenominational; it seeks to help in the work of evangelisation, and to draw the churches closer together. It is greatly desired to found a small Protestant hospital. In the ordinary hospitals evangelical Christians are persecuted in every way; they are sometimes prohibited from seeing their friends, and die surrounded by priests and friars, who torture them to the very end.

RAFFAELE MIROBALLO, President.

Notes and Comments.

WE remind our readers of the approaching Convention at Keswick, to be held from July 21 to 26. Application for lodgings, &c., should be sent to Mr. J. Postlethwaite, Eskin-place, Keswick.

The pulpit so long occupied by Dr. Landels at Regent's Park Chapel is at last refilled. The Rev. David Davies, late of Weston-super-Mare, has been appointed pastor of the church worshipping there, and has entered upon his ministry with promising signs of success. A recognition service was held last week, in which Dr. Landels, Rev. J. P. Chown, and others, cordially welcomed the pastor to his new sphere.

A letter from General Gordon has come to hand, dated March 1, and addressed to Dr. Seweinfurth, the eminent explorer and botanist. In it he says the slaves of the Soudan now fully realise their power, and will not be long before they rise against their masters, and so solve for themselves the slavery question. The letter contains no word about himself, and is written in the same tone of firm, manly determination so characteristic of the man.

The annual festival of Mr. Spurgeon's Orphanage at Stockwell is to be held on the 16th instant, and will be associated with a welcome home to Mr. Thomas Spurgeon, who is en route from Australia. The speakers engaged include the Revs. Canon Fleming, Owen Davies, Colmer Symes, and of course the President and his sons, while Earl Cairns is announced as Chairman. The Homes connected with this institution are amongst the best managed and most efficient of the many similar agencies at work in the country. Cheerfulness, vitality, and Christian earnestness pervade them throughout, and bespeak for them cordial sympathy and support.

The decision of the Judges in the Bradlaugh case is in exact accordance with the position taken by us last year when discussing the subject in these columns. We then said that belief in the existence of a Supreme Being is essential to a seat in our Parliament as the law now stands, and Mr. Bradlaugh, disavowing any such belief, is, therefore, ineligible for election, never having withdrawn his letter to the public papers. It is well that this issue be clearly understood; it affects some who hold seats in the House of Commons, but who are not honest enough to refuse the oath. That a change in the law is needful most admit, but we devoutly hope that no change will be brought about which omits affirmation of belief in Divine authority on the part of all who legislate in our Senate.

Mr. E. W. Thomas's appeal for contributions to support the Homes and Night Refuges of the London Female Preventive and Reformatory Institution during the autumn months will no doubt excite the practical sympathy of very many readers of The Christian. It is contemplated to secure Mr. Thomas a brief rest at the end of August. His long labours (33 years) on behalf of fallen young women and girls have made some inroads upon his health, and the assurance that the good work will not be allowed to flag for want of funds during his very brief absence will greatly enhance his enjoyment of a short time of repose.

We are asked to state that great care is necessary in responding to applications for pecuniary help in Mission work among the Persians, several worthless appeals having been made by unauthorised persons. This warning in no way reflects on our respected friend Deacon Abraham, who is now amongst us, and who is worthy of full confidence and esteem. The Church Missionary Society is doing an excellent work at Ispahan and Bagdad, and the Americans are doing the same in Northern Persia, among the Nestorians and Tartars.

We are glad to receive a letter from a correspondent at Bow testifying to blessing received by himself and others through the preaching of Mr. Barnes at Mile-end; it is necessary to bear in mind, however, that the fact that a preacher is right on some points does not render it impossible for him to be seriously wrong on others.

We also record with pleasure Mr. Barnes' statement (in his pamphlet just issued, "Love's Chastening," No. 1, Ivy-lane, 1d.): "With all my heart I reject the Manichœan speculation of two eternal co-ordinate powers of good and evil." But when he adds, "for of that I can know nothing, seeing it is not revealed in Scripture," he seems to go back upon his rejection, and to some extent at least to retract it; for if the reverse is not revealed in Scripture, and if he can know nothing about it, how can he be sure that the Manichœan speculation is not true? The pamphlet is indefinite and incoherent: we await the forthcoming book for an intelligible exposition of Mr. Barnes's views. Our brother complains of multiplied attacks during years of trial. Most of these must have been in America. He himself, however, attacks others very freely. In this pamphlet Augustine, Calvin, and Milton, Protestants and Evangelists, and all other teachers indiscriminately, suffer at his hands.

The seventeenth annual report of the Children's Special Service Mission, just issued, furnishes abundant illustration of the value of this important agency. The Mission is thoroughly evangelistic and unsectarian, and has not only been directly blessed in its work among the young, but has indirectly resulted in great good by stirring up others to earnest efforts for the salvation of children. The Scripture Union now has 1800 branches in Great Britain, with a membership of 216,000, beside numerous branches all over the world. One million hymn-sheets, picture leaflets, tracts, and small books were distributed by its means last year, beside 55,000 copies of "Our Own Magazine." The Mission should live in the prayers of all who desire the spiritual welfare of the rising race.

Ghastly and horrible tales come to us from Paris, of experiments just made by Drs. Brown-Séquard, and Laborde. By the injection of arterial blood into the head of a criminal who had been guillotined, and into that of a favourite dog, which had been killed for the purpose, these men of science claim to have produced a resuscitation of life. The uselessness of such experiments from a scientific point of view is evident, inasmuch as how far any phenomena produced were merely mechanical, if real, or how far they were accurately observed, must be questions most inconclusively dealt with, while the demoralising effect of such wanton cruelty is unquestionable.

A new wing has been added to the St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, capable of accommodating seventy additional patients. It is to be called the "Mary Stanford" wing, the cost of building it having been defrayed by a legacy left by Mr. J. F. Stanford for the purpose of perpetuating the memory of his mother. Such enlargement of the hospital was greatly needed. Its maintenance will cost £3000 per annum.

Dr. Hannay has written to The Christian World a disclaimer which will be received by many with pleasure. The Rev. Joseph Wood, for some time a Congregational minister at Leicester, recently accepted a call to a Unitarian church in Birmingham, and in doing so, said the Congregational Union, though retaining him as a member, had known for several years past that he was not a Trinitarian, and even less orthodox in some other respects than many Unitarians. Dr. Hannay emphatically denies this statement, and says the fact that Mr. Wood retained his position as a Congregational minister was regarded as an avowal of belief in the "Facts and Doctrines of the Evangelical Faith" affirmed by the "Union," among which the Incarnation and Atoning Sacrifice of the Lord Jesus Christ have explicit place. There is need nowadays for clear statements of belief in reference to vital truth, and public bodies do well to speak out, as Dr. Hannay has done on behalf of the Congregational Union, as to what membership with them really involves.

Mr. Allanson Picton, an ex-Congregationalist minister, and now M.P. for Leicester, is very dissatisfied with Dr. Hannay's assertion that the Congregational Union is conservative of orthodox truth, and writes denying that Independent churches are tied to any creeds or articles of religious faith. For himself, as a member of the Congregational body, he says, "I am neither Trinitarian nor Unitarian. Infallibility, atonement, incarnation, and all the rest of the list, are as dogmas matters of sheer indifference to me, and only interesting because of the human emotions that have played around them." It is this spirit of indifference to definite belief, this neutrality in relation to revealed truth, from which the visible Church of Christ is suffering so deeply, and a growing need of union, not in denominationalism, but purely in the interests of Gospel truth, is manifesting itself on all sides.

A striking instance of international friendship is afforded in the presentation by the French people of a colossal statue of Liberty to be placed on Bedloe Island, at the entrance of the Bay of New York. It has taken eight years to prepare, and is the largest statue of modern times, as well as one of the greatest pieces of ingenuity the sculptor's art has ever produced. It is higher than any lighthouse on our coast, being 220 feet from base of pedestal to extreme point of statue, that is, eighty feet in excess of the famous Colossus of Rhodes. It has been paid for by voluntary and popular subscriptions, and is the spontaneous gift of France to America. In its hand is an electric torch, so that it will act as a light-bearer to the whole of the Bay, symbolising "Liberty enlightening the World." The size of the statue may be judged of from the fact that fifteen people might sit round the flame of the torch, and reach that height by a spiral staircase placed in the arm.

KNOWLEDGE AND CONSECRATION.

CLOSING APPEAL AT MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

By Rev. J. HUDSON TAYLOR.

AS I look upon this vast assembly, this wonderful assembly, my heart is burdened to-night; and I do pray the Lord to speak his Word to me and to you ere we separate. We have been considering together for the last three days the blessed subject of the knowledge of God, and none of us, I am sure, have prayerfully and carefully attended to the things that have been spoken to us without realising that God has drawn us nearer to Himself. And now comes the responsibility. We are going away. Where are we going? What are we going to do? How are we going to live? How are we going to serve this gracious One, the knowledge of whom has been our theme from day to day?

The practical part of our subject which has been brought before us to-night is very closely connected with the meditations of the preceding days. There is a far closer connection than we are sometimes inclined to realise between the atonement, the knowledge of God, and the practical use of that knowledge which we have attained and realised. It is as we are faithfully living out the life He has put in us, and using that knowledge given to us, that we learn practically to know Him. The Apostle Paul could say truthfully that for him to live was Christ, and the one great desire of his heart was this, that he might "know Him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death." We cannot separate these things one from another. We must know Him and the power of his resurrection, if we would know the fellowship of his sufferings, being made conformable unto his death. There must be the living out of the life of God in order that we may learn to know Him more fully and perfectly. We only know and understand that through which we have passed.

We all know that we sometimes come in contact with persons who have never been in similar experiences to those through which we have passed. They cannot understand us, or help us, or sympathise with us; they have never been through the same experience. They do not know where they are, and what we need. We meet others who have passed through the same experience; we at once feel that they know and understand us. It is in carrying this Gospel throughout the world, in manifesting it at home and abroad, that we shall realise and learn how to know God. As we become like Him, we shall understand Him—we shall know Him.

Thirty-one years ago I was about leaving the shores of England for China. My beloved, honoured, and now sainted mother, went down to Liverpool with me. I shall never forget the day that we sailed for China, how that loved mother went with me into the cabin that was to be my home for nearly six months. A mother's love smoothed the little bed. She sat down by my side and joined me in singing the last hymn we sang together before we separated. We knelt down and she prayed, the last mother's prayer I was to hear before I went to China.

Then the notice was given that we must part, and I had to say good-bye to that loving mother, never expecting to see her again. I did see her again several times, but I had no expectation of it then. Mainly for my sake she restrained her feelings as much as she could. We parted, and she went on shore, giving me her blessing. I stood on deck, and she followed the ship as we moved towards the dock gates. As we passed the gates, and the ship was just leaving, and the separation was commencing, I shall never forget the cry of anguish that was wrung from that mother's heart as she felt that I was gone. It went to my heart like a knife. I never knew so fully as then what "God so loved the world" meant. I am quite sure my precious mother learned more of the love of God for the world in that hour than in all her life before. When we are brought into the position of having practical fellowship with God, in trial, and sorrow, and suffering, we learn a lesson that is not to be learned amidst the ease and comfort of ordinary life. That is why our Father brings us through trying experiences.

Fourteen years later, I was at work in China, and my own beloved firstborn child was with me. She was not well, and I took her, with the other members of my family, to a place at some little distance from Hang-Chow, hoping the change would benefit her health. When we reached our destination the sun had begun to decline. We went on shore, and my dear child and I took a walk into a wood near by, that we might have some quiet prayer together under the shade of the trees.

While we were there my child—she was only then eight years of age—for the first time saw a man making an idol. The sight grieved her to the heart. She looked up into my face, and said: "Oh, papa, that man does not know Jesus! He would never make an ugly idol like that if he knew Jesus; go and tell him about Jesus." I had not so much faith with the message as my dear child had, but I went and told him the story of God's great love in the gift of his Son. Then we went away, and the man went on making the idol. After we had gone a little distance we sat down, and I said to my child (I saw her heart was burdened): "What shall we sing?" She said, "Let us sing—

"'Rock of Ages, cleft for me.'"

We sang that hymn, and then I said to her: "Will you engage in prayer first?" She prayed, and I never heard such a prayer as she offered. For about fifty minutes she went on pleading that God would have mercy on the poor Chinese, and strengthen her papa to preach Christ to them. My heart was bowed before God; I could not describe it to you.

Next morning I was summoned away to see a sick missionary at a distance, and had to leave my loved ones. When I came back, she was unconscious, and she never recognised me again. That prayer for the poor Chinese was the last conscious words I heard her speak. As I stood over her grave I praised God that He had permitted me to part with my dear child in his service in China. I knew then as I never knew before what "God so loved the world" meant.

That is how some of us have attained this knowledge of God. He has given us to have sympathy with Himself in his not withholding his Only Begotten Son, and in that Son giving Himself in order that the world might be saved. With such experiences you will not wonder that we are very eager to bring before you the needs of the heathen. We have learned to love them in that school. We heard Professor Drummond tell the other day about the little graves he had seen in Central Africa. We know what that means. It teaches us a little more of what the grave meant in which our Lord Jesus lay buried. "God so loved the world that He gave his Only Begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life."

If I could only give you a glimpse of what the perishing world is. Perhaps you have wondered why we should be so eager to present to the Christian friends assembled here the book that has been offered at the gates of this hall. It is because there are two hundred and fifty millions who are perishing in China that we are seeking to circulate this book, and asking you to sympathise with us to the extent of buying it, and by lending it to as many as you can. Two hundred and fifty millions in China do not know of this wonderful love of God that led Him to bruise his Son and put Him to grief. Have you ever tried to realise sufficiently the state of the world? You know what the Apostle John said about it many years ago in his Epistle. You remember his word, "the whole world lieth in the wicked one." That is still true. Two hundred and fifty millions of souls in Africa are lying in the wicked one for the most part. Two hundred and fifty millions of souls in China are lying in the wicked one for the most part. Two hundred and fifty millions of souls in India are lying in the wicked one for the most part. It is as true to-day as when the Apostle John spoke these words, "We know that we are of God, and the whole world lieth in wickedness."

Now, what is the outcome of wickedness? Have you realised that sufficiently? In these days there are so many people who have such Broad Church views, as they call them, but who really have no Scriptural views at all of sin, that we are apt to be carried away and forget what sin is, and what is the outcome of sin. Look at the last book of the Bible. What do we learn? The glorious state of those who know their God. "He will dwell with them, and they shall be his people; and God Himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes. And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away." But that is not all that is written there. A little further on we read of "the fearful." Oh, how fearful the heathen are. You go to a heathen man, and ask him what are his thoughts about death. You will find him full of fear. Men have described to me their feelings when very near their end. It is just what you might expect: a fearful looking forward to they know not what. Conscience tells no lies in that hour, and it tells the dying sinner that there is no blessing awaiting him. "The fearful and the unbelieving." What about the two hundred and fifty millions of unbelieving ones in China? What of the two hundred and fifty millions of unbelieving ones in India, and the two hundred and fifty millions in Africa? What about the unbelieving multitudes in Madagascar and the islands of the sea? What about the perishing ones in Europe, America, and everywhere? "The whole world lieth in the wicked one."

"The fearful and unbelieving and the abominable." Ah! you do not know what heathenism is. We could not put it into words. "The abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolaters, and all liars (idolaters and liars are nearly synonymous terms) shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Oh, friends, shall we leave them to die that death without holding out a hand to save? Shall we not seek to rescue them? Shall we be content to sit at home because it is pleasant, because we have opportunities of meeting in Conferences like this, and can sit with loved ones around us, and think ourselves children of God, while we leave the heathen to pass into darkness, unsaved, and unblessed? It will not do to sing—

"Waft, waft, ye winds, the story."

Mothers must give up beloved sons; fathers must give up precious daughters; brothers and sisters must cheerfully yield one another to the Lord's service in China, and Africa, and India.

There are some of you who will never get to know God fully until you go to Africa or China and seek to lead others to know Him. It is in the path of obedience and self-denying service that God reveals Himself most intimately to his children. When it costs most we find the greatest joy. We find the darkest hour the brightest, and the greatest loss the greatest gain. While the sorrow is short lived, and will soon pass away, the joy is far more exceeding and eternal. Would that I could give you an idea of the way in which God has revealed Himself to me in China, and to others whom I have known. In the presence of bereavement, in the deepest sorrows of life, He has so drawn near to me that I have said to myself, Is it possible that the precious one who is in his presence can know more than I have? Is it possible that more manifestation of Himself can be given there than here? It has been a wonder to me if it is possible for those out of the body to have more of his presence than He has given us in the hour of greatest darkness and sorrow. It is well worth going for what we gain, not to speak of what they gain who are brought to know Him whom to know is life eternal.

But there is a higher thought still; that is, bringing joy to the heart of the Master Himself. When we think of Him whose brow was more marred than any man's, whose crown was a crown of thorns, whose sweat was as great drops of blood in Gethsemane, when we think of Him who hung upon the cross at Calvary, will you not rejoice to bring joy to Him? What joy can you bring to Him like going to these poor heathen and making known to them the precious blood that cleanseth from all sin, and bring them as trophies to his feet?

May the Lord incline many of you to go out to heathen lands and labour there for Him, may those of you who cannot go be enabled to show sympathy and help for those who are sent.

MR. GEORGE MÜLLER'S TOUR IN INDIA.

ON Tuesday evening, July 1, the members of Bethesda Chapel, Bristol, met for a social tea-meeting to welcome Mr. and Mrs. Müller, on their return from India. At the public meeting which followed, Mr. Müller gave some very interesting details of his recent tour. He said that shortly after his conversion he offered himself five times to God for missionary labour in India, but the way was not opened up to him, and he was subsequently led into the sphere of labour with which his name has been so long associated. Thus, after an interval of fifty-eight years, he was guided in his seventy-ninth year to undertake a journey through the country that has had so warm a place in his interest. This tour was one of labour in the service of the Lord and crowned with great blessing, no hindrance having been experienced either from the climate or any other cause.

His objects in going to India were—first, that he might visit the missionaries who are bearing the burden and heat of the day, and, by God's grace, impart counsel and encouragement to them in their arduous labour of love. Secondly, to preach the Gospel to the thousands of Europeans and natives with whom he would come in contact in that vast field. The most difficult classes to reach are the educated Brahmins; he was very anxious, therefore, to bring the simple Gospel before them, as the power of God unto salvation. Thirdly, to promote unity and love between the followers of Christ. This has been a special feature of his ministrations during the past nine years in the twenty-seven countries he has visited. To further this object he has gladly laboured in connection with all branches of the Christian Church where the foundation truths of the Gospel are admitted, though he made that an essential condition. In all these churches he had expounded the Scripture and taught the things of God, and in no instance was anything required of him that it was against his conscience to perform.

A fourth object was to promote the study and love of the Word of God, alike amongst ministers and their congregations, that thus a pure and sound conception might be formed of the truths therein contained. Also to teach what he understood to be the true character of this dispensation, that we are not to wait to see the whole world converted before the coming of the Lord, but to be found "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of our great Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ."

On September 26, last year, Mr. and Mrs. Müller sailed from Gravesend, the voyage occupying thirty-four days, during which time he held a few services on board, but with no manifestation of blessing. Some months after, however, they met a lady in India, who stated with joy that she had been blessed through his ministry on board. At Colombo he tarried two days, and held services for Christian friends and missionaries, and also addressed a company of young girls in a mission school. At Madras thirty meetings were held, including two for educated Hindoos. These were attended by some 400 lawyers and gentlemen of high position, who listened with great interest to the preaching of the Gospel. After a stay of nine days in Bangalore, Mr. Müller paid a visit to Miss Anstey's Orphan House at Colar, a report of which appeared in our issue of January 10.

At Coimbatore several meetings were held, including one for educated natives who are studying in the College there. After three weeks in the Nilgherry Hills, Madras was again visited, and then Calcutta, where Mr. Müller preached nineteen times, including services for missionaries, educated natives, and pastors. Similar gatherings were held in Darjeeling, Bankapoor (near Patna), Dinapoor, and Benares.

Some facts relative to the last place are worthy of special mention. Benares is the great centre of Hindoo idolatry. Besides twenty-five Mohammedan mosques, there are 1550 idol temples in that city alone, while throughout India there are two hundred million idol-worshippers. They believe that to visit Benares once in a lifetime, and to wash in the Ganges, will go a great way towards their salvation, whilst, should they be fortunate enough to die there, they would be certain of eternal bliss. At this point in his lecture Mr. Müller made a most earnest and pointed appeal for persons who should be willing to devote their lives or money for the salvation of these idolaters. "Shall we read and hear about these things, shall we be familiar with the state of affairs, and not make any exertion to change them? There may be trials and difficulties in the way, but the day of glory and reward is coming; and shall we do nothing, nothing, nothing to win these poor idolaters to the living God? If you cannot go yourself, will you not do all in your power to strengthen those who are labouring there, that they may be the better able to do the work that God has given them?

"We cannot tell you the deep impression made upon our minds as we saw the whole city given to idolatry, and the effects of it. The birds feeding upon the bodies in the river of the dead, whose friends were too poor to buy materials to burn them; the flames at evening as others were being consumed; the cemetery of the Parsees, where the bodies are stripped and left to the mercy of the vultures and crows, who gorge themselves until they are almost too heavy to fly—this is idolatry indeed! Can nothing be done for these poor benighted souls? We went into the School of Philosophy, and saw 450 men under their teachers learning the lies and superstition of their religion. Think of all these things, and offer yourselves to the Lord."

After similar details concerning his work at Allahabad, Lucknow, Cawnpore, Agra, Lahore, Delhi, Bombay, and other places, in all of which he was warmly received, Mr. Müller brought his deeply interesting lecture to a close.

A full account of this tour, together with information about Mr. Müller's Orphan Houses, will be found in the "Brief Narrative of Facts" which will shortly be published by Messrs. Nisbet & Co.

SWITZERLAND.—Temperance friends visiting this country for pleasure will do well to endeavour to stem the tide of intemperance, which is especially prevalent in the Canton de Vaud. At Chambéry an English lady has opened a coffee-tavern, and a change has been brought about in many lives. Particulars relating to this work may be had from Miss Vulliamy, Millfield, Eastbourne.

YOUNG SERVANTS IN LONDON.—A meeting of the Metropolitan Association for Befriending Young Servants was held at Stafford House, St. James's, last week; Viscount Hampden in the chair. From a paper circulated, it was explained that last year over 4000 girls were assisted by this Society in various ways. Those in need of situations had places found for them, and safe lodgings provided meanwhile when needed. More than 3000 situations were found for girls in the course of the year. Those who were ill or needing rest were sent to hospitals or convalescent homes. Those in need of further training were placed in homes established for training or discipline. Each girl is visited in her place (with the permission of her mistress) by a lady, who interests herself in her welfare. The visitors are careful to act in co-operation with the mistresses for the good of the girls, and find that there are many ways in which they can help, such as by encouraging them to save their wages, and to try to become better servants. Cardinal Manning, Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., Miss Orme, Mr. Cropper, M.P., and Rev. Brooke Lambert spoke in furtherance of the objects of the Society.

Y.M.C.A. Work.

FOLKESTONE.

IN connection with the Y.M.C.A., a "Seaside Home" has been established here. "Pembroke House," in Guildhall-street, is within a few minutes' walk of the beach, and is in every respect a very desirable holiday resort for young men in London. The terms are moderate, and special terms are arranged as to railway fares. Application should be made to Mr. M. Henry, Secretary, at the Home.

CAMDEN-ROAD BRANCH.

The Annual Meeting of this Association was lately held in the new building; it was pleasing, says a local paper, to see a large muster of young men. Mr. George Williams presided, supported by Mr. Samuel Morley, M.P., and other friends. After the Chairman had referred in a congratulatory way to the magnificent building which the committee of the Association had provided for the young men of Camden-town, he spoke of the large and beautiful hall in which they were now assembled as an audience chamber for conversing with the King of kings, a banqueting hall and a school of divinity, where he trusted hundreds and thousands of young men would find their highest good. He congratulated the Association upon the hopeful prospect that now lay before them in their new and enlarged sphere of usefulness.

The secretary, Mr. T. Smith, read the annual report, which bristled with facts of a most interesting kind, as showing the solid, substantial work done for the temporal as well as the eternal welfare of young men. Case after case was cited of young men having entered into the old premises, so long known as the Iona Rooms, there to find the life and peace which are eternal. In their new premises about £100 more would be needed as income, and for this sum he confidently appealed to the subcribers and their friends.

The treasurer, Mr. White, referred to the small balance of £659 remaining upon the building fund, which he hoped would not be allowed by the Christian public to hang around their neck like an unforgiven sin.

Mr. S. Morley spoke in terms of the highest praise of the new building. He said he had just looked over it and thought it good value; if his friend Mr. White could find a few more friends to aid him clear off the remaining deficit of £659, he for one was willing to repeat his former subscription (which he understood to be for £100); anyhow, he gave Mr. White permission to communicate with him further on the subject. Mr. Morley went on to speak of the value of such an organisation as the Y.M.C.A., the need of personal and united effort in the work, and warmly eulogised the secretary for submitting for the approval of the meeting so admirable a report. It bore traces in tone and matter of a man whose heart and life were consecrated for the good of young men. He earnestly wished the Association God-speed, and was very pleased to have been present.

Rev. Joshua Kirkman, of Hampstead, Rev. R. M. Thornton, of Camden-park-road Presbyterian Church, and Mr. Benj. Barry Wake also spoke.

BELFAST.—On Monday week, Rev. Canon Wilberforce thrilled a large audience at this place by his eloquence on behalf of the Irish Sunday Closing Bill, and a unanimous resolution was adopted for the immediate passing of it.

CAMBRIDGE INSTITUTE, 4, Cambridge-Terrace, Holloway.—Feeling the necessity of a branch of the Young Women's Christian Association in this neighbourhood, the above Institute was opened in April, 1883. We desired to provide a place where of an evening the shop employés can attend Bible and secular classes, and where accommodation can be given to any suddenly thrown out of a situation. During the year seventeen have been thus helped, and 128 members enrolled. It is now hoped that with the kind sympathy of friends this work may be increased in September, by opening a Home in connection with the Institute for those in situations where boarding accommodation is not provided, thus giving them a bright home to return to after the day's toil, where they would find Christian care and friends around them instead of going to lonely lodgings. Two gentlemen have promised to furnish a bedroom each, and further help in the way of subscriptions, blankets, furniture, or household things, will be thankfully received by Miss Freeman, Hon. Sec.

MR. MOODY IN BRISTOL.

DURING the visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey to Bristol, nearly two years ago, the need was brought forward of a suitable hall in connection with the Y.M.C.A. in that city. The subject was taken up warmly by Mr. Moody, and collections were immediately made towards the erection of the building.

On Monday, June 3, the opening ceremony took place. A luncheon was provided at two o'clock, at which a very representative gathering assembled, addresses being given by Mr. J. Storrs Fry (president), Mr. Samuel Budgett (treasurer), Rev. Canon Girdlestone, and others. The last-named gentleman said he had been charged by the Dean of Bristol to express his hearty sympathy with the work being carried on by the Association, and his regret that feeble health forbade his taking any part at present in public affairs.

In the evening there was a large gathering in the new hall, its 1250 seats being insufficient.

Mr. BUDGETT presided, and was supported by ministers and influential laymen of various denominations, Mr. Moody being the principal guest of the evening. A portion of the choir which rendered service during the Mission led the singing, conducted by Mr. J. Hunt. Letters were read regretting the absence of Mr. S. Morley, Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Aberdeen, Mr. George Williams, and others. The London Association was represented by Mr. Hind Smith.

After singing and prayer, Rev. GEORGE BOWDEN showed that when God wanted a man or woman to do his work, He often chose persons who had been born and brought up in a place of obscurity. Such a choice had fallen upon a restless, enterprising young man, the son of a widow at Northfield, Mass., and to such an extent has He used Mr. Moody since that time, that all the world rejoices to-day at the work that has been accomplished. He also referred, with great warmth, to the unity of the ministers which had followed in the train of this evangelistic movement. He trusted that the new hall would be a general rendezvous for Christian workers, where they would gather strength and counsel for the warfare in which they would be engaged on behalf, amongst other things, of temperance and social purity.

Rev. J. FOX followed in a powerful and telling address, in which he urged all connected with the Association to hold fast the word "Christian." Mere philanthropic work did not go far enough; only Christ could go to the root of a man's heart. Healthy, firm, personal Christianity is the great need of the present day, and if it is not found in such associations as these, where can it be found? But it must not stop there; it must be seen in business, and in daily life, and then will it be a power indeed. He thought that besides the unity already mentioned, a great result of Mr. Moody's preaching was an increased love and use of the Bible, both in private and in public services; he hoped that the work henceforth carried on in the hall would bear distinctly these characteristics.

Mr. MOODY then rose, and was greeted with great enthusiasm. He said he was glad none of the preceding speakers had preached a sermon, as he very much coveted the honour of preaching the first in that hall. He spoke from Daniel xii. 3. A man who fears and loves his God is bound to "shine." We do not know who the astrologers and great men of Babylon were, but Daniel has been shining through all these ages. We do not know who built the Pyramids of Egypt, but we do know who anointed the Saviour in the little home at Bethany. The men who have shone the most have been those who had the most difficult fields to work in. God does not call lazy persons, but those engaged in active service, as David, Elisha, Peter, and Matthew. It used to be the custom in America, at remote religious meetings, for each person to bring one candle, and thus, when they were all together, a good light was produced. "What have you got," he asked, "a rod, or rams horns? Use them, and you may do as mighty a work for God as Moses or Joshua did." He had been asked whether the amount of money and labour expended on these associations was justified by the good resulting from them. He believed that the salvation of one soul was sufficient to justify the expenditure; all profess to believe that a man's soul is worth more than the whole world.

He understood that out of the £4000 required for this hall, only £3400 had been raised, and he thought it would be dishonouring to God to give Him a building with a debt of £600 upon it. It was desirable, therefore, that it should be cleared off at once, and accordingly he promised to collect £120 out of Bristol, if the rest were subscribed before July 12. The collection realised £98, but for upwards of half an hour Mr. Moody continued to elicit further promises and gifts, until the total of £440 was reached. Mr. Budgett offered sums of five, ten, and twenty pounds, on condition that others would contribute similar amounts, and all his challenges were accepted, while a number of smaller sums were promised. Hearty prayer was offered for the future guidance of Mr. Moody, the absence of his beloved fellow-labourer being much regretted. The next evening further help was solicited at a public meeting in the hall for the removal of the remaining debt.

THE LATE REV. JAMES SCOTT.

WE quote from the Christian Leader the following account of the funeral honours paid to the friend of the Glasgow poor, our dear and self-sacrificed brother, Rev. James Scott, Secretary Glasgow United Evangelistic Association. We had the mournful pleasure of seeing him in London the day before he died; the medical man had said there was a change for the better, and the dying man was full of hope that he should be spared for more years of the work he so much loved:—

The funeral of that eminent Scottish evangelist, Rev. James Scott, which took place at Glasgow on Saturday, was a touching and most impressive spectacle. A beautiful tribute to his memory was spoken by Mr. J. Campbell White, of Overtoun, and the procession of mourners to the grave in the southern necropolis numbered nearly 6000, and included many young women and girls. It was witnessed by at least 40,000 spectators, many of whom were poorly clad, and manifested their sense of the loss they had sustained by shedding tears. At the grave the Mizpah band sang "The Roll Call." On Sabbath evening Dr. Somerville preached an impressive funeral sermon.

In Memoriam.

By Rev. ALEX. WALLACE, D.D., Glasgow.

Brave soldier of the cross, well done!
Thy life a battle-march, a fight—
Thine now the crown, the robe of white,
The palm of victory nobly won.

Thy Christ-like work in tent and hall
Was for the poor, the lame, the blind—
Down-trodden wretchedness in slum and wynd,
Dazed and destroyed in Satan's thrall.

What eager crowds around thee pressed,
A squalid drink-bedraggled throng!
Thy power, Christ's love, and Gospel song;
Dead souls, aroused, were daily blessed.

The hungry came and they were fed,
Poor ragged ones and they were clad,
Despairing, sin-crushed hearts made glad—
All were to Jesus gently led.

Homes were made blithe, and lives grew bright,
And rescued ones now bless the day
That drew them to a better way,
From deepening darkness into light.

These blood-bought trophies are on high,
This, thy reward from Him, Whose life
Upheld thee in the mortal strife
And called to mansions in the sky.

Farewell! but we shall meet again;
How oft we sang "Sweet by-and-bye!"
For come it will, and may be nigh—
Farewell is earth's, not heaven's refrain.

"Farewell" is wafted from this shore,
"Come hither!"—from the sinless strand,
Where shining ones expectant stand,
Not lost, but only gone before.

And thou art there, and we shall wait
And work with patience on this side;
No stroke of death shall more divide,
When we shall meet at heaven's gate.

Till then, farewell! May God sustain
The smitten hearts that mourn their loss—
Thy crown in heaven, on earth their cross—
Our loss, thy everlasting gain.

Grantown, Strathspey.

That voice is silent now, that voice which spoke
To many of the precious truths of God.
In dingy lanes the Gospel seed he sowed;
Working with patient toil, there he awoke
In minds degraded, thoughts of heavenly truth.
Now he has seen the land of which he told,
That land immortal where the good of old
With him shall live on in immortal youth.
Many who listened to his voice have gone
Before him. How their gladsome faces shine
To give him welcome! Brightest crown be thine,
Brave toiler! Now thy earthly work is done,
And now sweet rest is thine, O heavenly rest!
And a fair mansion 'mongst the good and blest.

A. M. LANG.

Obituary.

MR. GEORGE THORNILOE.

THIS well-known teetotal advocate died on Thursday week at his residence, 143, Kennington Park-road, aged 58 years. Originally a working man in very poor circumstances, he signed the temperance pledge, and by industry and perseverance he built up a successful business as a gas engineer. As a temperance reformer he has been prominent for nearly thirty years.

REV. THOS. CURME.

Many of your readers will be grieved to hear of the death of Rev. Thomas Curme, Vicar of Sandford St. Martin, Oxfordshire, which took place on Monday, June 23, at the age of 78. For forty-eight years he had been Vicar of Sandford, and has been known far and near as an uncompromising champion of evangelical truth, and a vigorous opponent of sacramentalism and priestcraft. He was a personal friend of Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, who mentioned him by name in his sermon preached in the Metropolitan Tabernacle on the Sunday before his death. Both within and without his parish he was "a burning and a shining light." Faithful men of his stamp are all too few, and we can ill afford to lose them.

Yours very truly,
J. WELLSTEAD, Curate of Sandford.

REV. DR. AVELING.

The pastor of Kingsland Congregational Church died suddenly at Reedham on Thursday. The deceased minister, who had filled the pastorate at Kingsland for forty-six years, was very popular as a preacher and a theologian, and on Tuesday last was to have been presented with a very substantial testimonial in celebration of his ministerial anniversary. He was well known in a variety of departments of public work and usefulness. He has filled the honorary secretaryship of the Reedham Orphans' Asylum for thirty-six years. He had filled with much ability and acceptance the chair of the Congregational Union of England and Wales, and had rendered the principles and cause of Protestant Nonconformity distinguished service. He was to have been the Merchants' Lecturer for the current month, a position in which his lectures on former occasions had been greatly admired for their depth of thought and lucidity of expression; but owing to many pressing engagements, the Rev. Newman Hall became his substitute.

MILDMAY CONFERENCE.

Foreign Missionary Meeting.

ON Wednesday afternoon Rooms No. 4 and 5 were crowded by a company that listened with the most attentive interest to the addresses given on this important department of Christian work. Rev. D. B. Hankin, who presided, said it had been estimated that upwards of two million people had attended Messrs. Moody and Sankey's meetings during the past campaign. The converts must be numbered by thousands. Many of them are young men in the freshness of their first love and blessed with much physical strength and energy of character. Surely from among them will be found many who will hearken to the cry, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" and who will give the response, "Here am I, send me." The outcome of all these special efforts ought to be a large accession to the labourers in the great harvest-field of the world. God says He "will have all men to be saved," and the words ought to make a Christian's cheeks to mantle with the blush of shame. Why are not all men saved? Why are 800 millions of the human race still without the knowledge of God that maketh wise unto salvation? The whole Church of Christ may well humble herself in the dust because of her manifold divisions, her indifference, and the extraordinary inclination Christians have for concentrating their powers upon the little circles in which they are specially interested. These things have hindered the Church from putting forth her strength and obeying the command of her risen Lord to go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature.

Rev. J. Hannington, the newly-appointed Episcopal Bishop of Mombassa, began by remarking that when they were singing a few minutes ago—

> "Were the whole realm of nature mine,
> That were a present far too small:
> Love so amazing, so Divine,
> Demands my soul, my life, my all,"

he could not help wondering what was going to be the result—whether that hymn was really going to be translated into actual fact. If he were to appeal for some of those unhealthy parts of Africa, or if any other brother should appeal for China, would any now hearing him, who had sung that hymn, devote their lives to the work of carrying the Gospel to these heathen lands? The Bishop proceeded to give some details about the various Mission stations that had been planted by the East African Mission. In a new work, such as it was, they could not say very much about results. It was enough to know that the call had come for them to go there, and that doors were opening up, that there was indeed heard the Macedonian cry: "Come over and help us." He described the position of the five Mission stations that are planted between the coast and Uganda, the capital of King Mtesa's territory. Schools and meeting-places have been erected, and the children are being taught, while many of the adults gather to hear the Gospel. The work of Messrs. Last, Cole, Blackburn, Gordon, Wise, and others was referred to. The early history of the Uganda Mission, where there are three missionaries stationed, outstrips in results any foreign Mission that has been at work for a similar period. The work is very trying. King Mtesa has proved fickle, and that is not to be wondered at. The Arabs came and taught him there was one God. The Englishmen came and taught him there were three Gods in one. The Roman Catholics came and said there were four gods, and one of them was a woman! What was he to do? The Bishop referred also to the dangers of the climate, of which he had plenty of personal experience, having been eight times given up to die, through the fever. Nevertheless, he was ready, God helping him, to go forth again, because he realised in some measure what were Africa's needs, and the terrible degradation of the people.

The next address was by Professor Henry Drummond; this we gave at length in our last.

Rev. W. Duffus, of the English Presbyterian Mission, Swatow, China, followed with a sketch of the progress of the work in that part of the great field. Next to the privilege, he said, of preaching Christ to those who have never heard his Gospel, there is nothing that a missionary appreciates so much as engaging on behalf of his work the sympathy and prayers of Christians. He described the changes that are rapidly taking place in Chinese thought, through contact with the western world. It is impossible that Chinese superstition can long remain in its present form, with all those new forces at work around it; though it has not yet, to all appearance, received a conspicuous shake. Only last year in connection with a cholera epidemic, he saw an extraordinary manifestation of idolatrous enthusiasm. The question for the Church of God to consider, is whether in addition to these forces there shall be the widespread introduction of the one and only force in the world that can awaken China from her spiritual death, and raise her from her moral degradation. The supreme need of China is the Gospel. Mr. Duffus proceeded to relate some interesting cases that had come under his personal observation, as showing the power of the Gospel to change and illumine the lives of the Chinese.

Rev. J. Hudson Taylor followed with a most stirring appeal to consecration for service in the foreign field, in terms somewhat similar to those he used in the closing address of the Conference, reported elsewhere.

The Hope of the Church.

A large company gathered in the large hall on Thursday afternoon to consider the topic assigned, "The Hope of the Church"—the second coming of our Lord. Earl Cavan, who presided, referred to various passages in the New Testament, to show that Christ greatly desired his disciples to keep watching, working, and waiting for his personal return. It is the hope of this speedy return of her Lord that is the great sustaining power of the Church in the present dispensation. "It doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when He shall appear we shall be like Him, for we shall see Him as He is."

The point to which Rev. John Bennett, Chelsea, specially referred in his address was the coming of the Lord in connection with the salvation of his people. There is a salvation for the believer, he said, that is yet to be revealed. It is not wise to apply the word "salvation" exclusively to our deliverance from the condemnation and dominion of sin. By and by we shall have salvation from its very presence. Mr. Bennett quoted and commented on eight scriptures with reference to the subject. Romans xiii. 2 is a passage about which there will be no dispute—"Now is our salvation nearer than when we believed." In 1 Thess., last chapter, the Apostle speaks to Christains of "the hope of salvation." Hope has reference to the future—the redemption and transformation of the body. In Hebrews vi. there is another reference to the bright and blessed hope of the appearing of our Lord. So in Romans xv., "The God of (the) hope fill you with all joy and peace in believing, and make you to abound in the hope." Here it is the great truth of Christ's second coming that the Apostle is writing about.

In Hebrews i., last verse, we read of the angels who minister to the Lord in the persons of his people who are heirs of God. They are one day to inherit the glory that is to be revealed—salvation in its full and complete sense. In Hebrews, again, we read of Him who shall come "without sin unto salvation"—to save his redeemed ones from the presence of sin. In Peter we read of the salvation "ready to be revealed in the last time."

The remaining three passages mentioned were from Revelation. In chapter vii. we read of the ascription, "Salvation to our God," &c. When the saints enter into the presence of the King there comes the burst of praise to Him who has brought them out of all their tribulations to the place of perfect safety and joy. Again, in Rev. xii., we read, "Now is come salvation and strength, and the Kingdom of our God and the power of his Christ." That clearly points to the future, when the Kingdom shall be fully manifested and established. The last passage is Rev. xix. 1, where the song of praise ascends because Satan's work is brought to nought, and the salvation, of which we had only a foretaste in the days of our earthly pilgrimage, is experienced in all the fulness of its fruition.

As to the relation between our present and future salvation, Mr. Bennett said that, beyond controversy, we have now freedom from the condemnation and the rule of sin; but as yet sin exists in the heart. We have the promise that sin shall not have dominion over us, implying that it is there; it must be daily kept under. A man said not long ago that he was going to live without sin, because he had got "a clean heart." It was not long before he was obliged to confess that his heart was not so clean as he had thought it was. He had formerly been a drunkard and wife-beater and swearer, but though those things were given up, he discovered that there was much in his heart that he had not formerly been aware of.

Rev. H. E. Brooke, Dovercourt, considered the subject in its relation to the work of judging the world. "He shall judge the world with righteousness" (Ps. xcviii. 9). The world is here contrasted with the Church. There is no doubt a sense in which the believer will be judged for service. In another sense all Christians will share in the judgment of separation or manifestation. It will be seen that we are those who belong to Christ. In John v. 24 we read that those who are believers "shall not come into judgment." But the world that refuses Christ now as a Saviour will have to endure the judgment which He, as the Son of man, will execute.

"I had yesterday morning a lesson," said Mr. Brooke, "I have not forgotten. I sat down in a side room, and a lady was there to whom I expressed the hope that the Conference would be blessed. She replied that she hoped those who speak will not forget to speak to the unconverted. She had often brought such ones to the Conference, and they had gone away without hearing anything suited to them." Mr. Brooke proceeded to make an earnest appeal to those who might even have made a public confession of Christ, and were engaging in various kinds of service, but had not yet been truly numbered among those whose life is hid with Christ in God.

The third and last address was by Rev. Dr. Brookes, of St. Louis, on the Second Coming of Christ to reign over Israel. We gave a pretty full report of Dr. Brookes' remarks in our last week's number.

Home Missions.

A meeting on this subject was held on Thursday afternoon. In the absence of Lord Polwarth through illness, the chair was taken by Captain Baring, who, after a few introductory remarks upon "Whatsoever He saith unto you, do it," called upon Mr. George Holland to give some account of his work in Whitechapel.

Perhaps those who are accustomed to hear his Mission described as George Yard Ragged School will be surprised to find what a large number of agencies are employed by him for the benefit of the neighbourhood in which he labours. Sabbath and day schools for the children, night classes for bigger boys and men, Bible classes, Band of Hope, industrial school, clothing club, mothers' meetings, and "toy classes" for the amusement of the tiny mites who abound in the locality;—all these and many other similar branches of the work shoot forth nd grow, to the improvement, physical, moral, nd spiritual, of the inhabitants of one of the larkest spots in London. In fact, there is hardly ny need felt by any person of either sex, or f any age, which Mr. Holland and his fellow-vorkers do not attempt to meet.

He pointed out very emphatically that it is ot enough to deplore the degradation and isery which exist, but we must go forth to he rescue. How are these masses to be eached? There is a power which must prevail —the Gospel of Christ. If sufficient persons would come forward as bearers of the glad tidings, it would surely make its way.

Another principle which he laid down very trongly was that of forgiveness and sympathy. If a man or woman, for instance, who had been reclaimed from drink yielded to its enslaving power again, it is no use to blame them and give them up. They must be encouraged again, and he had known of a woman who had broken the pledge twenty times, but who had kept it at last, and was living a sober life.

A special lady missioner is appointed to visit drunken women, and with most encouraging results has she been received. She has 72 on her visiting list, and of these 37 have definitely given their hearts to the Lord.

The "toy classes" have gained admittance into many otherwise inaccessible homes. The little ones are gathered together in a room, and are allowed to play with toys provided for them, and before leaving they are taught some beautiful hymns and texts, and spoken to about Jesus. The influence gained thus over the parents is very great. When the teacher enters a courtway, she hears, "Mother, here's the lady who lets us play with the toys," and she soon finds that warm hearts beat within rough exteriors. One example will suffice to show what excellent missionaries the children make. A little girl climbed upon her father's knee—he was sober for once—and surprised him by showering his face with kisses. "What does all this mean, my little lamb?" he inquired. She could only speak two words, "Jesus loves," and that simple message broke the father's hard heart, and led him to find the Saviour. When asked what she said to Jesus for saving her father, she replied, with childlike simplicity, "Tank you."

Mr. Holland summed up his remarks with the exhortation, "Go to Jesus, go with Jesus, go from Jesus; and from Him you will have power."

Dr. Gauld then gave some account of the Medical Mission at Bethnal Green. The Lord sent out his Apostles to heal the sick, and whenever the example has been followed, either in England or abroad, it has met with eminent success. In this country it succeeds more among the lower classes, and has often opened the hearts of Jews to whom otherwise the Gospel could not be brought.

At Bethnal Green the Medical Mission has been the means of bringing many to Christ, and has lightened their deathbeds, and as they passed away they had the prospect of seeing the King in his beauty. One day a woman came for advice about her eyes, one had been knocked out by her husband, and was replaced by a glass one, and the other was fast failing in sight as the result. The cure effected touched her husband's heart, and they are now living sober lives. Temperance work is inseparable from Medical Missions, and, as in this case, had been productive of sober living. The need of this work is seen, when we find how little Christian influence is brought to bear upon patients in our hospitals, and hear of nurses being reproved for venturing to bring a Bible into a ward.

Dr. Gauld concluded by inviting Christians interested in such work to pay the Mission a visit at Bethnal Green.

Dr. Barnardo followed with a forcible and racy description of some of his experiences amongst destitute children. He said that amongst the forty thousand criminals alleged to be in London there are little boys and girls born and brought up with them who never knew what innocence meant, and who are as purely heathen as any that could be found in the wilds of Africa. What do they know? They cannot read; in many cases they have never even heard of Jesus. They have never sung a hymn nor bowed the knee in prayer. And what have they done that they should be in such a condition as this? They are worthy of no blame; they simply reap the fruits of their parents' sins.

On July 10 a party of 120 girls from the village homes will sail for Canada. What are their prospects here? None. What are their prospects there? Happy homes and useful situations. What is the bridge connecting these? The Home Missions which we have been hearing about. Dr. Barnardo then related a very interesting experience he once had with some little children in Drury-lane. He got into conversation with two little girls, who told him they lived with an old woman who let them out on hire. With them, too, lived a little boy, suffering from hip-disease. He took them all to the village homes, where the lad died, but the little girls were afterwards adopted by a farmer in Canada, and are now doing well. There are now 5963 boys and girls under the care of the institutions.

United Communion.

On the Friday afternoon from 2000 to 2500 took the Lord's Supper together in the large hall, when the address was delivered by Rev. Dr. Donald Fraser.

The Evangelistic Mission.

DEAR SIR,—I shall be much obliged if you will kindly call the attention of your readers to the urgent need for help for the aggressive work in connection with the spread of the Gospel by the Evangelistic Mission. The removal by death of many former supporters of the Mission, and the probable diversion of funds to recent great movements, have left us more tried, and even in arrears for funds, than for some years past, notwithstanding the exigencies of the work during the busy summer months, when, both in our several halls and many tents, aggressive efforts are being made, involving considerable expenses from week to week. Pages of your journal could be filled with testimonies of deep interest, showing the blessing which God is giving with the preaching of the Word, but we give one, the first to hand, which is a specimen of others, relative to the services in the tents, ten of which are now employed in various places:—

"We have had glorious times, seeming to go on just where we left off last year. Then we ploughed and sowed many weeks before God permitted us to see blessing; but this year, from the very first, we have had evidences of the Spirit's work amongst us, and many have professed to believe on the Lord Jesus Christ. It would have done you good to see the immense throng of people yesterday; to witness the eagerness of many in their inquiries concerning the Way of Life was cheering, and filled our hearts with praise and gratitude to God."

I cannot but think that if you intimate this to your readers, some will help us more liberally in the work of thus directly carrying the Gospel, pure and simple, to the people who are still "without God and without hope in the world." C. Russell Hurditch.

THE BROUSSA ORPHANAGE now contains 100 children, and many more are waiting to be admitted. We are therefore most anxious to build extra accommodation for boarders, which will also help to make it self-supporting. £250 are needed; and by Lady Kinnaird's kindness a sale of work will be held at 17, Old Cavendish-street, on Monday and Tuesday, July 14 and 15, from 12 till 10 p.m. Gifts of work or flowers will be received by Miss Denham Smith, 38, York-terrace, York-gate.

Mr. Moody's Northfield Seminary.

THE spirit of Mr. Moody has evidently touched the heart of the news-boy on the train, for, to our great surprise, this lad, more accustomed to push the dime novel than to circulate Christian literature, urged upon us Mr. Moody's "Power of the Spirit," as we came in sight of the Evangelist's home to-day.

This has been a busy week for the young ladies of Northfield Seminary. On Sunday they were addressed by Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler, D.D., known and loved on both sides of the sea; and again to-day by Rev. Reuen Thomas, D.D., formerly of London. Both addresses were admirable, and specially noticeable for the current of common sense running through them, and the wise presentation of practical truth, all centring around the Cross of Christ. Education, with no Christ in it, is a sword put into men's hands to cut the cord which binds us to the Eternal. This is the central idea of this school, and it was earnestly enforced by both these speakers.

A most touching and eloquent essay was read by an Indian maiden, in which she very gracefully welcomed the aged Mrs. Moody as an "Honorary Member of the Class." Mr. Moody's presence was felt here all through the week, though separated by the trackless sea, and he was tenderly remembered by many a hearty petition.

The wisdom of the founder in establishing this and the boys' school is seen by the host of applicants who besiege the doors of both institutions; for there is a demand for an education coming from the farm and the factory, bright, eager souls, seeking wistfully that light and power which comes from study, and which so many are compelled to forego for lack of means to enter the royal road of learning. Here, for one hundred dollars a year (£20), board and tuition are furnished, and great sacrifices are made by the pupils to meet even this. A large building is to be ready for occupying this fall. The 66,000 dollars required are provided for by Mr Marquand's legacy, but a Recitation Hall is planned and started, and for this some 40,000 dollars are needed. Then the earnest cry is for a library, cabinets, philosophical apparatus, scientific appliances, and all those things without which any institution in these modern days is sadly crippled.

Mr. Moody is so absolutely unselfish, that he will devise liberal things for other cities and towns, while with a remarkable modesty he withholds appeals for these most worthy schools. No better monument could the Christian world raise for this marvellous man than to put into his hands half a million of dollars to be used here.

The site selected at Gill and at Northfield for school and seminary is an education in itself. The distant mountains, the beautiful river, the fertile valley, make a landscape almost perfect. Driven by a sudden shower into Mr. Moody's house to-day, we were ushered into his study. A fine painting of his mother and one of Mr. Sankey adorn the walls, while a most admirable likeness of himself and wife have been placed on the mantel by the young ladies occupying his rooms. We were surprised at the number of books on the Bible that filled the shelves, and also at the different editions of the Bible; another point was noticeable—they looked as if they had seen service. All the sacred wealth of this Christian home is freely given to these girls, who cannot be accommodated at Bonar Hall or the Seminary. Who of our readers would thus throw wide open his doors for the incoming of a bevy of school-girls?

The trustees who guard the interests of these schools are nine devoted men, and their only anxiety is that these institutions are kept up to the high spiritual and intellectual standard desired by the founder. S. E. B.

FRIENDLY LETTERS.—Perhaps one of the most attractive "letters" which Miss Skinner has issued is the one now ready, addressed to soldiers. We heartily commend it for distribution among them. May be obtained from Miss Skinner, 5, St. James'-square, Bath.

Miss Weston and the Blue Jackets.

TO a thoroughly interested and sympathetic audience, assembled in the Egyptian Hall of the Mansion House on Tuesday afternoon last week, Miss Agnes Weston told the wonderful story of her work among Blue Jackets ashore and afloat. After plodding away for nearly twenty years, she is now reaping the fruits of her labours. The work is firmly established, not only in the affections of the men themselves, but in the good opinion of the authorities. It was not always so. Miss Weston told how in the early history of her Mission it was affirmed that if ladies took to visiting H.M. ships of war, "the service" would soon go to the dogs. Experience has changed all that, and some of these conservative wiseacres would probably now be the first to admit that the efforts of Miss Weston and her lady lieutenants have saved many a poor fellow from "going to the dogs." What better or more emphatic testimony could be wished for than this, freely rendered by a commanding officer to Miss Weston as he paced his own quarter-deck? Not an abstainer himself, he was constrained to admit that, whenever he required men for difficult, dangerous, or responsible work, he always chose members of some of the temperance societies.

As our readers are well acquainted with the leading features of Miss Weston's work, we need not reproduce the details she gave at the Mansion House. She referred to the great favour with which the monthly Blue Backs are received and read, not only by the men in the Royal Navy, but by those engaged in the mercantile service, and by the men in the American Navy. Perhaps the most important department of the work is that of the Sailors' Rests, which Miss Weston and her helpers have planted at the various naval seaports on the Southern coast, and which serve as veritable cities of refuge to Jack when ashore, surrounded by numberless temptations. A much-needed enlargement of the Portsmouth Rest was the main burden of Miss Weston's theme last week. She has secured the ground, and laid out her plans for this extension, which will not only increase the sleeping accommodation, but provide a hall and various other important aids to the general work of the caring for Jack ashore. The sailors say that if the ship is once launched they will keep it afloat themselves. To float it £4000 will be needed, and a considerable proportion of this sum has yet to be raised.

Among those who advocated the claims of the work at the Mansion House, in addition to the chief speaker, were the Lord Mayor, Admiral Sir Astley Cooper Key, Admiral Sir Wm. King-Hall, Admiral Fishbourne, Canon Fleming, Mr. Willis (Accountant-General of the Navy), and Mr. T. A. Denny, all of whom spoke warmly in praise of the work. But indeed the work itself is its own best advocate; if any one doubts that, let them accept Miss Weston's invitation to go to Portsmouth, or one of the other Rests at Devonport, Portland, and Sheerness, and judge for themselves.

REV. NEWMAN HALL.—A festival took place on Friday last at Christ Church, in the Westminster Bridge-road, of which the Rev. Newman Hall is the pastor, to celebrate the thirtieth year of the pastorate of that gentleman, together with the 101st anniversary of Surrey Chapel and the eighth of Christ Church. In the evening a meeting was held, at which Mr. S. Morley, M.P., presided. Dr. Wilson, a deacon, presented Mr. Hall with a congratulatory address, accompanied by the presentation of a marble bust of himself. Mr. Hall, in returning thanks, said that he had always endeavoured not to gain congregations by novelty of doctrine, but by a faithful and conscientious preaching and teaching of the Bible. Mr. Spurgeon spoke of the pleasure he had in being present on such a happy occasion. Nobody was able to say that Mr. Hall confused or mystified the Gospel; on the contrary, he preached it in a simple manner that was extremely successful in bringing others into the fold. Other addresses followed.

The Gospel in Canada.

THIS part of the Dominion has been enjoying the benefit of a visit from Mr. George Soltau, of London. The afternoon Bible Readings and evening Gospel meetings were but thinly attended at first, but the numbers grew rapidly as the Christians began to realise the power that accompanied the word spoken. The interest deepened daily; believers were aroused and blessed, and souls were converted to God every night. The young seemed specially drawn to Mr. Soltau, and the work done at the Young Men's Meetings of the Y.M.C.A. was a special feature of interest, many testifying to the good received.

A strong spirit of denominationalism has, for a long time, prevailed in Canada, but it is pleasant to see that it is being gradually broken down, and a more Catholic spirit evinced by God's people in this country. Earnest men from all bodies are uniting for aggressive Christian work. This was apparent, in a marked way, by the interchange of fraternal greeting between the Synod of the Church of England and the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, and their desire for the appointment of a Joint Committee to discuss and strengthen each other's hands in a common cause; eloquent and earnest ministers of both denominations joined, supported by the ministers of the Methodists and Baptists, in trying to secure the introduction of the Bible into the common schools of the country.

Another outcome of the same good spirit is the Toronto Mission Union, and its band of earnest workers from all bodies. They are now building a hall which, it was hoped, would have been ready for Mr. Soltau to open with a series of Mission services, but it could not be got ready in time. It is, however, to the fact that ministers of all denominations attended his meetings and supported him in his work that we wish to refer. Amongst those were the Principal of the University and several of the Professors of Trinity and Wycliffe Colleges, of the Church of England; Knox College, of the Presbyterians; and McMaster Hall, of the Baptists.

The churches seem open to Mr. Soltau to an extent and in a manner not accorded to any lay evangelist who has heretofore visited this country. He held meetings in churches and church schoolhouses in different places in the city, where large members gathered together. Mr. Soltau's Readings on "The Tabernacle," were listened to with intense interest, whilst it was generally considered that his Bible Readings for Christians showed a deep spiritual insight into the Word of God.

It is quite evident that a wide and effectual door is open to Mr. Soltau, should he be led to settle in this country. The Evangelisation Society and kindred workers, as well as very many ministers, desire to secure the services of himself and his wife for the ever-growing work in this Dominion. Will the Christians in England pray for Canada? As we are daily receiving large numbers of emigrants whose spiritual needs we have to supply, some English Christians may see it their privilege to help in our Gospel work.

MISS F. E. BARKER, Barnston, Dunmow, Essex, would feel greatly obliged to any friends for gifts of books towards instituting a village library for the labourers in this neighbourhood.

AGED CHRISTIAN BLIND WOMEN.—The new wing of the home at Hornsey-rise was opened by the Earl of Shaftesbury on Tuesday, July 1, in the presence of many sympathetic supporters of the work. His lordship contrasted the past and present condition of the blind, and hoped that such institutions would be multiplied throughout the land. Rev. A. Rowland, Canon Hurst, J. Ard, and J. R. Wood also took part in the proceedings. The sale of useful and fancy work by the blind was also opened, and continued on the two following days. The proceeds of the week will be about £100. The friends still need £225 to open the new building free of debt. The Hon. Superintendents are Mr. and Mrs. Bright, at the Home, Hanley-road, Hornsey-rise, N.

Richard Weaver in St. Giles's.

ON Sunday last Richard Weaver commenced a fortnight's special services at the Mission Chapel, Little Wild-street, Drury-lane, to follow up in the neighbourhood the work of Mr. Moody on the Embankment. In the morning, at eleven, a most telling address was delivered from Galatians ii. 2: "The Son of God, who loved me and gave Himself for me." More than once the entire congregation appeared moved to tears, and it was altogether a most precious season. At night the spacious building was crowded to its utmost capacity. The evangelist preached from 1 Peter i. 19: "Precious Blood." The Word was with much power; numbers were pricked to the heart, and crowded the inquiry-room.

These services are likely to create considerable interest, inasmuch as our friend has not visited this part of London since the old St. Martin's Hall days, when so much blessing was given. His health is far from satisfactory, and prayer is asked that he may be strengthened for this important service. The meetings are arranged for each week-night at eight (Saturdays excepted), and on Sunday at eleven and seven.

A Bishop Conducting a Bible Reading.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Pall Mall Gazette: "The church of St. Peter's, Eaton-square, presented a unique sight yesterday (Sunday) afternoon. The Bishop of Truro, who had preached in the morning to an immense congregation, held a Bible Reading after the children's service. The spacious church had no sooner been emptied of its juvenile congregation than it was taken possession of by adults, whose accommodation taxed the proverbial courtesy of Sir James Hogg, the senior churchwarden, and other officials. That a congregation of the upper classes, including many well-known members of both Houses of Parliament and a good sprinkling of clergy, should attend a Bible Reading, would a few years ago have been thought an impossibility. A hymn having been sung (there was no choir), the Bishop said that he desired to show that the leading feature of St. Peter's Epistle was its extremely practical character. The Apostle entered into every detail of daily life, and did not content himself with some magnificent flourishes as to religion. He urged, too, constantly the value of humility, a grace which the Bishop said his hearers specially needed, as they had so much to make them naturally proud.

"His Lordship rivetted the attention of the hearers as he spoke of the sad lot of the London poor, and said how he should have liked to have had them with him on the previous evening when he preached to the poor people in his old parish of St. Peter, Windmill-street; but while he would not say a word to detract from the sacred duty of helping the poor, he urged on them the more difficult one of kindliness and sympathy to those in trouble in their own class of life. He drew a vivid picture of the tired and weary mother or father going into society, when it had ceased to have attractions, for the sake of the daughter, and said that such and similar self-denials would have their reward. Secular duties should, as St. Peter showed, not be neglected. He thanked God the time had gone by when it was considered a mark of a real Christian to be a partisan, and, while standing up for one's own 'ism,' to curse everyone else's. Such rubbish had been trodden under foot, and they now tried by offices of love and kindliness to make life brighter. Some said they were tired of God, and if they meant by that, tired of magnifying trifles, he agreed with them; but all the refinement and culture of the day, beautiful as it was, could never provide permanent happiness or get rid of the dangerous classes ever ready to sneer at the fall of one of those above them.

"Shortly before five o'clock the Bishop said that he was sure many must be weary and had engagements, so that a hymn would be sung, during which they could go out, but only about a hundred of the crowded congregation availed themselves of the offer."

Notes from Detroit.

A CORRESPONDENT in Detroit, Michigan, writing on June 18, says:—

"There is but one recent event here that would be likely to interest your readers. This is the taking up in a hearty manner, by the American Baptist Missionary Union, of Mr. Grattan Guinness's Central African Mission. This important event occurred on Saturday evening, May 24, at a special meeting called at the close of the regular session of the Union to discuss the subject in all its bearings, and decide what action to take in view of the magnanimous offer. Both morning and evening the subject occupied three and a half hours' consideration, which is a very long time for the go-ahead Yankee to devote to any subject but politics. There was very little opposition indeed to its acceptance, but information was desired so that no step might be taken in the dark. The final result, after some eighteen short speeches or expressions of opinion by missionaries, delegates, and others, was its enthusiastic acceptance, and the pledging of the annual meeting to carry it forward without delay, the white brethren providing the money and superintending the Mission, and the coloured brethren of the South undertaking to supply the men.

"Detroit is highly favoured in many respects, and passes for a religious city as compared with the Far West; but there is a terrible absence of old-time religious fervour or zeal for God even among Christians. Everything has to partake of novelty or sensationalism to suit the vitiated taste of your Yankee Christian, whose race for wealth is the 'tares' which choke the growth of the good seed even when it strikes root in the heart, and hinders it from bringing forth fruit unto perfection, because most of the moisture is absorbed by the surrounding weeds.

"The Y.M.C.A., with Mr. Newman as its Secretary, does a good share of the little evangelistic work accomplished among us, but its activity in this respect would not compare with that of most of your London branches. The Salvation Army made a good stand for so small a number here, some fifteen months ago, but were literally pelted and driven out of the city, the police with their superiors complacently looking on and practically siding with the rabble.

"Recently a couple of Christians who stood on a vacant lot on a Sunday evening to preach were ignominiously hustled off to the police station amid the gibes and jeers of the mob, whose abuse of the prisoners was only laughed at by the police, and not at all checked. The sergeant, or police captain, however, refused to enter a charge against the preachers because the side-walk had not been blocked, and such arrests are not likely to be repeated; but there is not much to be expected from a Mayor who, like ours, was run into office on the liquor-dealer's ticket."

CHILDREN'S SCRIPTURE UNION.—Portions for the ensuing week:—July 13, 2 Sam. xiv. 25—33; July 14, 2 Sam. xv. 1—12; July 15, 2 Sam. xv. 13—24; July 16, 2 Sam. xv. 25—37; July 17, 2 Sam. xvi. 1—14; July 18, 2 Sam. xvii. 1—14; July 19, 2 Sam. xvii. 15—29.

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS. — On Wednesday, July 2, the Conference Hall grounds were occupied with a very different class of people from those gathered there the week before. About 400 Jews, Jewesses, and their children, under the auspices of the above Mission, met together for their annual tea and Gospel meeting. A special train from Broad-street brought the guests to Mildmay Park. After recreation in the grounds, at 5 o'clock they crowded into room No. 4, where the tables were beautifully decorated with flowers, as well as laden with excellent provisions. While at tea Mr. Denham Smith addressed a few kind words to them. The usual grace was sung before and after tea, and joined in by the Jews. The Gospel meeting was held under the mulberry tree. Mr. Wilkinson presided, and read in Hebrew Isaiah liii. with brief comments; followed by Gospel hymns, short addresses, and prayers in English and in German, in which Mr. Wilkinson, Mr. Field, Dr. Dixon, and other friends took part.

Evangelistic Notes.

Mr. Anderson, evangelist, has conducted special services in the Cabrach, N.B., for fully a fortnight. The meetings were held in the Established and U.P. Churches, and were largely attended.

Douglas (Isle of Man).—Messrs. Mateer and Parker have spent a week at this place. From June 30 to July 6 they conducted a united Mission at the Temperance Hall, Skipton, Yorkshire. In both places there has been much blessing.

Kirkby Stephen.—We are glad to say we have recently had a very blessed work here in connection with the Congregational Church, but which continued some time after the departure of the evangelist, Mr. Hall. It was quiet, but very real. C. A. S.

Great Cheverell (Wiltshire).—Mr. G. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded on Sunday week a series of tent services in this village during the month of June. Notwithstanding the busy season people have been led to attend in large numbers, and with increasing interest, to hear the Word, accompanied as it evidently has been by the Holy Spirit's power.

Central Hall, Swindon.—Evangelistic Services conducted here by Mr. F. C. Spurr have been attended by large numbers of people. Many of the G.W.R. employés have listened with rapt attention to the Gospel preached and sung, and we believe not a few have passed from death unto life. Will your readers pray for the work here, which has been so marvellously blessed?

Margate.—Christian visitors to this town are invited to co-operate in the Gospel services to be conducted on Sunday evenings this month in the Foresters' Hall, Union-crescent, by Mr. J. J. Scroggie, and also daily, when fine, on the sands and other places in the town. In these he will be assisted by Mr. A. G. Andrews, the local missionary in connection with the Evangelistic Mission. United prayer is held in Trinity Hall, corner of Love-lane, every Friday at 7 p.m.

Chiswick.—Mr. H. Johnston, of the Metropolitan Tabernacle Evangelists' Association, has been conducting the Friday evening service at the Chiswick Mission Hall, Fraser-street, during the past two months. It has proved helpful to God's children, as well as awakening an interest in those who otherwise would not attend a week evening service. Mr. Johnston sings the Gospel, and his short addresses are full of illustrations which appeal to the hearts of his audience.

Bray, Ireland.—Mr. Thomas Houston, the blind evangelist, from Bessbrook, north of Ireland, a member of the Society of Friends, has just closed a Gospel Mission in the Friends' Room, Bray. The meetings were well attended. As they went on, the numbers increased and the interest deepened. Much blessing has resulted from the zealous, faithful preaching of Jesus Christ and Him crucified. Many souls have been born again, backsliders restored, and lukewarm Christians stirred up.

Marks Tey, Essex.—Services have been held this summer in Mr. Fincham's barn, addressed by Mr. Harris, of the Evangelisation Society. They were brought to a close on Monday, June 30, by a meeting for believers in the afternoon, followed by a tea and public meeting. Of the 200 who sat down to tea from 80 to 100 were those who have been led to Jesus in meetings addressed by Mr. Harris during the last four years in Marks Tey and villages within five miles of that place.

Mundesley, Norfolk.—Mr. Farrington, of the Evangelisation Society, has held Gospel services here rather more than three weeks. Scarcely a service has been held without some souls finding mercy; in one or two instances they were those who never attended any place of worship. Christians have also been revived and strengthened, so that altogether it has been "a time of great refreshing from the presence of the Lord." Although our population scarcely reaches 400, yet the last two Sundays we had at both afternoon and evening service nearly 600 present in the tent. They came flocking in from the villages around, to hear the faithful and earnest preaching of the Gospel. The Mission closed with a tea-meeting in the tent, when more than 300 were present. A public meeting was held, and addresses given by Lady Sebright, Miss Hamond, and others. H. C. S.

Requests for Prayer.

FOR blessing on special services to be held in a tent at Frome, from July 13 to August 3, by Mr. J. Cleworth, of the Evangelisation Society. ——For special services at the Malting Twitstal till August 6.——For a revival of the Lord's work in Airdrie and Coatbridge.

Letter to the Editor.

THE CHARITY ORGANISATION SOCIETY.

DEAR SIR,—You published in your issue of June 18 an attack made by Dr. Barnardo upon the C.O.S. In that attack a suggestion is made that the good opinion of "Nonconformist ministers" is "purchased" by certain relief being given by the C.O.S.

As an East-end Nonconformist minister, anxious to get all the aid I can in my work, and anxious also not to be "purchased" or "drawn in," or made the victim of "shifts," I should be glad if Dr. Barnardo would enter a little into detail in his charges against the C.O.S. His reference to the Rev. Brewin Grant does not, I must confess, awaken great confidence in my mind. I should much prefer that Dr. Barnardo should deal publicly with the cases to which he refers. It is not for me to defend the C.O.S.; but this point is worthy of note. It is a Charity Organisation Society, and hence it is just possible that a very large part of its funds will be spent in inquiries into cases and in the organisation of the "charity" placed under its direction.

Dr. Barnardo has said too much or too little. He is, I think, bound to enter more fully into the case, and to make the matter a little more plain to his neighbours.—I am, &c., GEO. S. REANEY.

EXETER HALL GOSPEL CHOIR meets for practice at Exeter Hall every Friday at 7.30 p.m.; Elementary Class every Tuesday (same time). Conductor, Mr. James Birch; Hon. Secretary, Mr. Rowland Cross, 3, Lorne-villas, Ewart-road, Forest-hill, S.E., to whom applications for membership are to be made. Musical Christian men are cordially invited to join for Sunday evening work.

A CORRESPONDENT writes to the Church of England Temperance Chronicle: "I was going north last Monday, by the train which leaves King's Cross at 5.15 a.m., when I heard the following (to me) new complaint. About 7 the train stopped at a large station; a man got out of the third-class carriage I was in and went for a drink, but came back complaining that the attendent was so busy serving coffee, she had no time to give him beer!"

THE ALDENHAM INSTITUTE.—New premises were formally opened last week in Goldington-crescent, Somers-town, for the members of the Aldenham Institute, which was established four years ago, with a comprehensive programme, embracing the social, mental, and religious improvement of youths. The members of the Institute, 200 in number, have long had a name but no habitation, and they are to be congratulated upon the acquisition of a very suitable building. Among the gentlemen present at the opening were Dr. J. Oswald Dykes, Hon. A. F. Kinnaird, Professor Leone Levi, Canon Spence, Mr. George Williams, and Mr. R. M. Ballantyne.

NEWCASTLE Y.M.C.A.—The Sale of Work and Soirée in connection with this Association which was recently held, proved a great success. The Chairman, Dr. Bruce, said that the Society had now more members than it ever had, and the present premises were far too small for them. They were about to enter into a larger building, and he hoped when they met that day twelve months the number of members would be a thousand. The work of the Association had gone on well. The classes for various branches of education had been very successful; but, above all, a deep spiritual work had gone on during the year, particularly of late. Their prospects for the future were good. They hoped that the Earl of Shaftesbury would, early in September, open the new premises of the Association in Blackett-street. Among the subsequent speakers were the Rev. Canon Lloyd, the Rev. J. B. Hastings, and Mr. John Havelock.

THE "UNDERGROUND RAILWAY."*

ONE Saturday evening a father, mother, and six children arrived in New London, and found their way to our house, which, as already stated, was a depôt of the "Underground Railway." Their arrival filled me with dismay, not for fear of the consequences to myself, but from the fact that 5000 dollars were offered as a reward for their capture. How to effect their liberation under such circumstances was the difficulty. There was no time to be spared for deliberation, however; and as in my father's absence the onus of both devising a plan for their escape, and also of carrying it out, lay entirely on me, I at once went out to reconnoitre.

I found the town full of United States detectives, patrollers, and nigger-catchers. It was well known that I had previously succeeded in conveying slaves into Canada, and it being suspected that I knew something of the ones of which they were now in quest, I was seized by the city constables and taken to the court-house, where I was put under a penalty of 2000 dollars if I did not make my appearance there in New London twenty days from that date—a time considered too short by at least eight days to see them over the British frontier and return.

This made prompt action imperative; and what increased the difficulty of taking it was that our house was known to be one of the depôts of the "Underground Railway," and so was narrowly watched. As they had besides the liberty of searching it, either by night or day, the danger of keeping these poor fugitives was equally great with that of sending them away. So I resolved to make one desperate effort to secure their liberty.

One of our agents was a butcher in the City, who, though utterly unsuspected, had previously rendered good service, by means of his cart, in the liberation of the slaves. By way of explanation, I may state that, owing to the heat, the meat required for Monday's use in the City was unslaughtered until just after twelve o'clock on Sunday night. In these circumstances, the butcher's cart, a sort of covered waggon, was by no means a rare thing to see moving about at such a time.

As the road to the slaughter-house ran close past our dwelling, he and I succeeded on this occasion in safely stowing away our live stock under the friendly shelter of his canvas covering. I followed at a considerable distance, standing now and again talking carelessly with anyone I happened to meet. Thus we had no difficulty in passing the first picket of the enemy —detectives, patrollers, and nigger-catchers.

After three days we reached Vermont in safety. But our difficulties were not over: to my horror I found the shores of the lake lined with fresh bands of the enemy. As they were not, however, on the outlook for me, or the band that was with me in particular, we escaped their vigilance in the following way:—

All slaves, and indeed almost all the inhabitants of the Southern States, say "dat" for that, so the Vermont patrollers were specially on the watch as to how that word was pronounced by all the coloured people passing through that State. Knowing this, I took care to do all the talking, and being fully alive to the importance of this word, paid special attention to its pronunciation, and so this fresh danger was avoided.

Not daring to cross the lake under such circumstances, we made a detour through New York State on to Canada, and reached in safety the great suspension-bridge which divides the two countries. How to get across was the next difficulty. Readers will of course know that Niagara being the march, as it were, which divides Canada from the United States, a heavy duty is levied on everything which passes from the one country to the other. Afraid to proceed in a group, we had to devise some plan to get over safely. The one we fell upon was to put the three youngest children into sacks, and stuff these up with hay, so as to make them look as nearly as possible like sacks of corn.

The bridge had a keeper at each end for levying the dues, and our plan was all the more workable because the keeper on the American side was a good free soiler, or anti-slavery man. Of course he had to challenge us for the dues on our bundles, but he did not seek to inspect them closely, although he could not but have seen that there was something not quite straight about them. And when I whispered "There's nothing in the sacks to pay duty for," he seemed quite to comprehend the position, and allowed us to go on, well knowing that, as he had given us no "pass," our bundles would be seized on the opposite side, which when done, however, the deliverance of the captives would be effected.

Having no pass to show on reaching the Canadian side, the keepers seized the bags, and, on opening them, the discovery of our live-stock was followed by hearty peals of good-natured laughter. Now the difficulties of the fugitives were over, mine were only about to commence.

I had now only some eight days left me to traverse a distance of at least 1000 miles in time to save my life, for had I failed to appear within the stipulated time I would have been sent to South Carolina, there to be tried on the capital charge of aiding slaves to escape, and then to be hanged would have been my inevitable doom. I was, therefore, in this return journey actually running the gauntlet for life or death. What increased the difficulty was, that a considerable distance had to be traversed on foot, as the railways were not then so connected, nor did trains run so frequently as at the present day; and, besides, in order to prevent all suspicion, a new route had to be taken, which increased the distance a hundred and odd miles.

After travelling two days and two nights, I reached Buffalo station just in time to see the train begin to move slowly out. Of course I ran in order to catch it. This drew attention to me, and the cry arose: "Catch the nigger! Catch the nigger!" What was to be done? To remain in Buffalo was death, seeing that telegrams had gone to all the stations along the way to Canada that I was out of New London. The train had therefore to be overtaken at the risk of life. When I had almost reached it, three villainous-looking patrollers made a dash at me. "Stand back!" I cried, drawing out my revolver, "or I'll shoot the first man who lays hands on me." Then with one desperate effort I jumped on the last "car" (as they are called in America) as it swept past, and so escaped my would-be captors.

On getting "aboard" the train I saw a new danger confronting me. The first station was some fifty miles ahead, and as the telegraph would be set in motion, my arrest on reaching it would be certain. And if it could have been proved that I was at Canada (and parties might easily have been got to give information about having seen me passing with the slaves I had been able to escort safely into the land of liberty) my doom was sealed. My only chance, therefore, lay in getting the conductor to set me down at some intermediate point. Two thousand dollars, I knew, were already on my head, and how much more by this time I had no idea. For such a reward what man in the train would not do his best to secure my capture?

As my only hope lay in getting the conductor to stop at some intermediate point or slacken speed, so that I could jump off, I walked up to him. He laughed, and said that he did not know an easier way of making 2000 dollars or more than by taking me on. Notwithstanding his banter, I knew that I was saved. He could not stop at any station, but the kindly man slackened speed at a small side one, as if to throw out something, just enough to enable me to jump off with impunity. Here I got a train leaving New York State, which took me on to Worcester, in the State of Massachussetts. Fearing to go on the main line, I then had to take a roundabout route so as to put the patrollers off my scent. But notwithstanding that, when I reached Willimantic by a cross line, I found, to my horror, that my dangers were not yet over. The Worcester patrollers had telegraphed on to that junction that I was a fugitive slave, and to delay me. This mistake was my salvation, I not being a fugitive, but a freeman, and carrying with me papers demonstrating this.

On reaching the station the cry was raised—"Here is the fugitive!" It was this cry that led me to understand the mistake which had been made, and of which I was not slow to take advantage. I did not at first deny that I was a slave, but fought desperately with the people who crowded round me to prevent them laying hold on me, my object being to delay until the next train came up, which would take me beyond Willimantic and out of the reach of all my pursuers. I wrestled, therefore, with my would-be captors until I heard the whistle of the approaching train—welcome sound to me, and also to my opponents, as they expected to see me hailed by some pursuing patrollers.

Nor were they mistaken. But imagine their surprise when I coolly drew out my papers, which they could not gainsay, and then quietly stepped on board the train. Not even yet, however, were my difficulties all over. The train on which I had got was a branch-line one, which took me quite in an opposite direction from that in which I wanted to go; and further, it had no connection with the line which would take me to my destination. So I came out at the first station, and being now free from my pursuers, the only remaining difficulty was a ride of seventy miles, for which I had just fourteen hours left; for if I did not present myself within that time at the court-house of New London, my destiny would be South Carolina.

In these circumstances I went straight to a livery stable and asked for a good saddle horse, which was at once supplied. Little did they know the purpose to which it was to be applied. Once on his back I was ready to say, like Dick Turpin, "Accomplish this ride I must, or kill the horse." I had not ridden half an hour when I came upon cross-roads, and, knowing not which to choose, unfortunately took the wrong one, and had galloped along it some twenty-five miles ere I met anyone whom I might ask. I had then to correct my mistake by returning to the same point, and beginning my journey of sixty odd miles in the diminished space of eleven and a half hours.

By this time the horse had begun to fag, and show such symptoms of exhaustion that I could not but conclude that he had been out that day before. I made up my mind, however, that he must accomplish the remaining sixty miles or die. It was a case of life for life, mine against his; and mine being of more value, I determined to save it if possible. Instead of breaking down utterly, as I feared, he took a fresh spurt, and enabled me to reach New London at least half an hour before the time was up, and so all danger was over. And no ordinary sense of relief and joy did I then experience, after this exciting adventure, in thus having saved both the poor slaves and myself.

Many slave-rescue adventures I had after this, and many poor slaves did I convey over the borders to the land of liberty, but in none of them was I molested or interfered with so much as in this.

SPECIAL AND URGENT!

84, Bonner Road, London, E., June 11, 1884.

Dear Friend,

I entreat you not to throw this Appeal aside, without kindly and carefully reading it. I wish to put before you certain facts in the briefest possible form.

1.—The Children's Home never had any Foundation Fund. We have had to spend about £50,000 in acquiring and adapting Buildings; and though special helps have occasionally been rendered, the Properties have had to be paid for by moneys raised from year to year. The consequence has been that, from the beginning, we have been struggling with financial difficulties.

2.—At present there is a Debt of rather more than £9,000 on the Institution. Compared with the value of our Property this is not large; yet it is a terrible weight upon us (A) because it cramps the conduct of our work, and fatally checks its necessary and legitimate extension; and (B) because it absorbs in interest an amount of income which would provide for about 20 Poor Children.

3.—For several years our Mission Work among the Poor of London (which was a part of our enterprise from very early days) has been greatly crippled, and almost held in abeyance. We have long chafed under this pressure, and have earnestly desired to resume our former activities, and surpass them. A noble opportunity is now presented of doing a Special Mission Work, which would be valuable in itself, and most blessed in its reflex influence upon the life of the Home. But to do this we should need immediately about £500, and some additional income besides.

4.—With all these circumstances around us, there are made to us the most pitiful and heartrending appeals on behalf of the children. Only a week ago we sat for seven hours considering Applications. They were made from 17 counties in England, and two in Ireland. The amount of suffering and of moral peril disclosed by the statements we heard was enough to break one's heart. And all the more, because we felt that if there were in our hands a very little of the enormous sums which are spent needlessly, or hoarded uselessly, we should be able, by God's grace, to save scores of the Children to whom we are now obliged to refuse help.

5.—Our grief at being unable to receive many of these Children is intensified by the very satisfactory reports which we are constantly getting from those who have gone forth from us to various parts of the world. Everywhere God's blessing rests signally upon our work, which makes us the more confident that similar results would follow in other cases, if we had the means.

6.—If we could raise £10,000 our Work would be put into a position of ease. Two friends have promised £500 each; four £100 each; and another £50 for this purpose. I therefore venture to ask you, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and of the perishing Children, if you will give to us a Special Donation in this emergency. Since we began our Work over 1,500 Poor Children have come into our hands, and received shelter, food, education, and moral training. Nearly 700 are now under our Roofs. These have been received from all parts of the country, and without regard of sect, age, or condition, provided only that their extreme and urgent need was proved to the Committee. Hundreds of those who were inmates in former years are now earning an honest living, and many are rising into comfort and reputation. And what has been done for them might be done for many more if we had but the means. Surely the generosity of the Christian public, moved by the Gracious Spirit of God, will not allow this work to languish. It will, perhaps, be remembered that the several Branches of our Work are as follows:—

Chief Branch—Bonner-road, London, E.
Milton Branch—Milton-next-Gravesend.
Canadian Branch—Hamilton, Ontario.
Lancashire Branch—Edgworth, near Bolton.
Ramsey Branch—Isle of Man.
Missions—Bethnal Green, London, E.
Birmingham Branch—Princess Alice Orphanage, New Oscott, near Birmingham.

I am, Yours in the Service of Christ, and the Children whom He loves,
T. BOWMAN STEPHENSON.

 The amount already promised in response to this appeal is £3,700. Further donations, or promises of donations, are earnestly solicited. Cheques should be crossed "The City Bank," and P.O. Orders made payable at the General Post Office.

Notices of Books, &c.

Footsteps of Truth. Edited by C. Russell Hurditch. Shaw & Co. 3d. The current number contains a memoir of the late Mr. A. A. Rees, with a portrait from a photograph taken shortly before his death. Its articles are as usual full of thought and interest.

A Lamp and a Light. By Rev. Francis Bourdillon, M.A. Hatchards. This little volume is made up of short and simple chapters on texts of Scripture, and is designed for reading in families, and at small gatherings. It will be a favourite with those who adopt it for such purposes. Evangelical truth is put by the author in a clear, striking and convincing form. Originality and freshness are prominent features of the style employed in dealing with familiar truths.

Touchstones; or, Christian Graces and Characters Tested. By Right Rev. Bishop Oxenden. Hatchards. Many wise and timely counsels are given in this book, which deals with a great variety of subjects intimately connected with the Christian life. As a guide to knowledge of truths of highest practical importance, it will be found helpful and safe. In these days it is essential to be able to discern between things that differ. Bishop Oxenden's "Touchstones" will assist all who use them to do this scripturally and clearly. It is a very useful addition to popular Christian literature.

Modern Romanism Illustrated. T. Woolmer. This little volume consists of articles reprinted from the Wesleyan Methodist Magazine, and contains a review of Lord Bute's translation of the "Reformed Roman Breviary," from the pen of Dr. Osborn. The Rev. J. McSwiney, S.J., objected to the terms of this criticism, and his remarks, together with Dr. Osborn's reply to them, are also included. Many points of interest and importance will be found ably treated, the Doctor proving himself a controversialist well able to expose Romish fallacies and maintain Protestant truth.

Converts to Rome. Compiled by W. Gordon Gorman. W. Swan Sonnenschein. A list of over three thousand Protestants who have become Roman Catholics during the present century. The work was formerly published under the title of "Rome's Recruits," but this is changed to "Converts to Rome;" it would have been more accurate to have called it "Perverts." The Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone has aided in the arrangement of the work, which gives only too sad evidence of the growing power of the false and pernicious system known as Roman Catholicism. A glance through its pages will astonish some people who doubt the increase of Popery in these days.

Bible Lights and Side Lights. By the Rev. C. S. Little. Hodder & Stoughton. This is among the latest contributions to the rich store of literary helps to the study of the Bible which recent times have accumulated. No excuse for lack of close and of intelligent acquaintance with the sacred Scriptures can be pleaded in these days, so many helps being afforded of all kinds. The special merit of Mr. Little's book is that it is wholly Biblical; it does not take the reader outside the covers of the Bible for a single moment. There is no commentary on the Word of God like its own parallelisms. Comparing things spiritual with spiritual, throws a flood of light upon the inspired page. A better proof could not be found than this elegant volume affords. Ten thousand illustrations of sacred truth, consisting of Bible facts, incidents, and striking statements, are here gathered together, and grouped under suitable headings. Preachers will find it very suggestive, the arrangement of the passages under topics to which they have reference, frequently causing them to have a meaning which had been quite overlooked before. For Sunday-school teachers also, and indeed all to whom Bible study is a delight, the work is of undoubted value. The textual index at the end is very complete, and furnishes a ready key to the whole range of quotation, while the plan of cross-reference adopted, instead of a general index, greatly facilitates the speedy selection of materials for use. We heartily commend the book, and feel that the compiler is deserving of warm thanks for having prepared such a useful Bible manual.

The Contemporary Pulpit. 6, White Hart-street, Paternoster-square, E.C. The first half-yearly volume of this monthly serial is a very varied and excellent treasury of pulpit utterances. The impartiality of the conductors, indeed, is so inclusive that they have reported a sermon by Cardinal Manning, in which the Romish doctrine of salvation by works is pretty plainly taught. As against this, however, we have sermons, or outlines of sermons, by such men as Canon Liddon, Dr. Dale, Dr. Maclaren, Dr. Dykes, Dr. Stanford, and other pulpit celebrities belonging to different denominations.

Elizabeth Fry. By Mrs. E. R. Pitman (Eminent Women Series). 3s. 6d. W. H. Allen & Co. Another capital biography of the truly eminent Quaker philanthropist, Mrs. Fry. With graphic sketches of her domestic surroundings and private history, it treats with more detail the history of her wonderful work among the prisoners of Newgate and elsewhere. To any who are hitherto unacquainted with the achievements of this remarkable woman, or who lack time to peruse the ponderous original "Memoirs," we heartily commend this very well-written volume. In its pages Christian workers will find much that is instructive and stimulating.

THE CHRISTIAN CHOIR.

A Quarto Volume of Music and Words,
BY
IRA D. SANKEY and J. McGRANAHAN.

Tinted covers, 1s.; cloth limp, 1s. 6d.; cloth boards, 2s. 6d.

May be had either in OLD NOTATION or in SOL-FA.

This Volume, which is largely composed of NEW SACRED SONGS, DUETS, CHORUSES, and ANTHEMS, has been used alternately with "Songs and Solos," during the great London Mission of Messrs. Moody and Sankey. Mr. Sankey and Mr. McGranahan are already well known by their hymns, which are sung all the world over; and the present collection, which is specially suitable for Gospel Choirs, will doubtless add to their reputation as true Gospel musicians.

TENTH SERIES OF WEEKLY CASES.

Notice to the Readers of "THE CHRISTIAN"

WHO MAY BE personally or relatively INTERESTED IN THIS MATTER.

Mr. Congreve will give ONE RECENT CASE, NOT PUBLISHED BEFORE, in this journal EVERY WEEK.

CASE FOR THIS WEEK.

CASE of MR. WRIGHT, BRAMPTON.

Mrs. A. Wright, writing for her husband on 17th of last March, says: "My husband begs me to write and thank you for all the interest you have taken in his case. He had abscesses on the lungs—the discharge most offensive. He broke a blood-vessel after this, and brought up a basin full at a time. He had a good doctor, who was very kind, but said he must give him up, for there was no hope of his recovery. The first bottle of yours did much good, with the second all the bad symptoms began to abate; after several more he got quite well, and able to work as before."

The above took place many years ago. Mrs. Wright goes on to say:—

"The year before last my husband was again taken ill. Again he was given up: but we again resorted to your remedy, and he again recovered. We have strongly recommended other sufferers to you. Many have said of my husband it was 'like a resurrection from the dead.'"

Note.—Mr. Congreve's Son-in-law, J. ALEX. BROWN, M.R.C.S., L.S.A., is now associated with him.

Days of Consultation.—TUESDAY, THURSDAY, and SATURDAY Mornings ONLY, at Coombe Lodge, Peckham. Patients from any long distance should choose either of the two former days.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.

ANOTHER HALF-YEAR'S WORK COMPLETED.

From January 1 to June 30 there were no less than 706 applications by and on behalf of Friendless and Fallen Young Women and Girls, representing many on the verge of moral ruin: some in the first stage, and others down in the terrible depths of sin: ALL alike needing Salvation; and "He is able to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them."

HEBREWS vii. 25.

A HEARTY WELCOME has been given in every possible case to the Homes or "Open-All-Night."

There are now nearly two hundred in the Homes and OPEN-ALL-NIGHT Refuge.

£1,000 in contributions urgently NEEDED to sustain the work during the coming Autumn.

£660 ARE GRATEFULLY ACKNOWLEDGED TO JULY 14, TOWARDS THE ABOVE AMOUNT.

Readers are asked kindly to CONTRIBUTE during July towards the required amount before leaving for their own rest and recreation, that this WORK OF MERCY MAY NOT BE HINDERED EVEN FOR A DAY.

MESSRS. MORGAN & SCOTT, Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, will, as usual, receive contributions.

EXTRACT FROM PREFACE.

"The chapters contained in this volume are made up from a series of BIBLE READINGS recently delivered in several places in London, in connection with the Evangelistic Mission just now coming to a close, in the work of which I have had the unspeakable privilege of having a part.

"I am happy in knowing that their extemporaneous delivery has been greatly blessed to many of God's people, who have been by means of them led to make a more perfect consecration of themselves to God, by breaking away from the subtle compromises of half-heartedness and semi-worldliness, and coming 'Out of Egypt.'"

NEW WORK BY MAJOR WHITTLE.

Life, Warfare, & Victory.

In Tinted Covers, 1s.; Limp Cloth, 1s. 6d.; Cloth Boards, 2s. 6d.

"Major Whittle, the author, has been associated with Mr. Moody in several of his Mission services in this country, and seeks in this little work to give instruction in Bible readings to young Converts, for their more careful study and permanent use, and such will find that the contents of the book fully bear out its title."

Literary World.

"All who have heard Major Whittle will be glad to possess this excellent little volume. It is just the book to put into the hands of young Converts. The title aptly expresses the contents; they are both spiritual and instructive. We wish it a wide circulation."—Railway Signal.

"It is a thoroughly characteristic little book by a man who is evidently on fire with a holy enthusiasm, and it may be helpful to many whom a more cultured style of teaching would fail to reach."—Christian Leader.

London: MORGAN & SCOTT, 12, Paternoster-buildings; And may be ordered of any Bookseller.
